Just prior to the August recess, the Senate debated medical malpractice litigation reform that would have capped trial lawyers' fees. Though I support bolder action that includes limiting awards for noneconomic damages, this bill would have been a good first step. It would have allowed injured patients to keep a greater share of their rightful compensation while reducing the incentive for trial lawyers to pursue excessive awards. Unfortunately, all of my Democrat colleagues voted against this patient-friendly bill, keeping the litigation lottery alive and well.

Injured patients have the right to sue for medical malpractice, but trial lawyers do not have the right to force innocent doctors from their livelihoods and throw our health care system into crisis. With millions of uninsured families, increasing health care costs, too many deaths from medical errors, and no prescription drug benefit for seniors, the Senate must show its commitment to turning back the growing health care crisis in our country. Limiting excessive malpractice awards is one solution that concerned public servants, providers, and, most importantly, patients can and should support.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I rise today to discuss an issue that affects a broad coalition of health care providers and the Medicare beneficiaries they serve. I have become increasingly concerned that the current method for updating Medicare payments to physicians and other health care providers does not accurately reflect the costs associated with delivering high-quality patient care. Reimbursement levels for providers participating the Medicare Program this year will decline by 5.4 percent. There is little to suggest that the cost of providing care has declined. In fact, costs to various providers have actually increased over the past year.

These payment reductions could have strong repercussions on access to essential health services. A flawed payment update system potentially jeopardizes access to medically necessary services for millions of seniors and disabled Americans who rely on Medicare for their health care. In addition, a flawed payment system makes practicing medicine, particularly in underserved areas, all the more difficult, if not impossible for providers participating in the Medicare Program.

Reductions in Medicare physician reimbursement forced Ronald Johnson, M.D., an Illinois physician, to borrow money to keep his practice operating. All told, the loan necessary to sustain his practice for an additional year was equivalent to two-thirds the value of his family farm.

I share the view of many health care analysts, including MedPAC, that the methodology used to update physicians payments is flawed. Although this system was designed to accurately compensate providers for the care they provide while controlling overall program spending on physician and other providers services, it has become apparent that the current system struggles to meet each of these goals. The volatility of physician payments is also a persistent problem for those providers attempting to gauge expected revenue from one year to the next.

Until 1989, Medicare physician payments were based on a reasonable charge payment system. This system was thought to be responsible for escalating program costs, and the Medicare physician fee schedule was adopted in response to these concerns.

The current method for updating Medicare physician payments is unique because the annual increase or decrease in physician payments does not simply reflect changes in the cost of medical goods and services. Unlike other payment systems, an expenditure target for physician services, known as the sustainable growth rate, (SGR), is calculated each year. Annual payment updates for physician services, that reflect the changes in the costs of medical goods and services, are then increased or reduced to meet targeted expenditures for the program. In other words, physician payment updates only reflect actual changes in the cost of medical goods and services when actual costs equal the target growth rate in physician payments.

Setting target expenditures, or the SGR, for physician payments that do not depart from the actual costs associated with delivering patient care has proven difficult. Methods for calculating the SGR have contributed to this divergence. The SGR is calculated using estimated changes in spending due to fee increases, changes in Medicare fee-for-service enrollment, gross domestic product GDP per capita and the cost of new laws and regulations. Moreover, many of the factors that strongly influence the overall cost of services are difficult to measure including patient preference, technological advances, and changing demographics.

In particular, the inclusion of the GDP in SGR calculations is problematic. Economic downturn may lead to sharp reductions in GDP that are far more dramatic than changes in Medicare beneficiary need. This volatility can have devastating effects on the program and threaten beneficiary access to critical health care services. At a time when beneficiary need is growing due to an aging U.S. population, providing physicians and other health care professionals with adequate reimbursement levels is an the more important.

Also, erroneous CMS enrollment and spending data collected in previous years has exacerbated and already difficult financial situation. Although the necessary corrections were made, the changes have a disproportionately negative financial impact over the coming year.

Efforts to control Medicare spending should not jeopardize the integrity of the health care system. Designing a physician reimbursement system that is less volatile and reflects the actual cost of delivering high-quality patient care is absolutely necessary. Now is the time to take a closer look at the way Medicare payments affect those serving some of our Nation's most vulnerable citizens. Further delay could make it financially untenable for doctors such as Ronald Johnson to practice in areas like Pittsfield, IL.

I ask that the article from FPReport be printed in the RECORD.

LOWER PAYMENTS FORCE FPs TO RISK PERSONAL LOSS FOR THEIR PATIENTS, PRACTICES

(By Jody Gloor)

For a growing number of family physicians, Medicare payment cuts ultimately could break up the "families" dependent on them—families composed of patients, employees and entire communities.

While some FPs have stopped accepting new Medicare patients, others are putting personal loss on the line to keep their "families" intact.

One rural doctor in Illinois who borrowed money to meet his payroll is now borrowing against his dream farm to repay those loans and protect his practice from financial failure.

Medicare patients make up one-third of the Pittsfield practice of Ronald Johnson, M.D., and the area's only hospital claims nearly 80 percent of its patients use Medicare. With an average age of 58 in the two counties Johnson serves, "we don't have the choice of not taking Medicare patients. That's our life here," he said in a recent telephone interview. "They are our neighbors; they are our friends. We have to take care of each other."

When he added the losses from Medicare reimbursements and accounts receivables that have doubled in the past six months, Johnson realized he needed to borrow an amount that nearly equaled the value of his farm.

"I got lucky," he said, "because the farm has been taking care of itself financially. Now, it's going to take care of us and our patients."

Johnson is finalizing a loan for two-thirds of his farm's value. It's an amount that realistically, he said, can sustain his practice for another year—two at the most—depending on factors including future Medicare reimbursement rates, the local economy and land values.

"I'd never thought I would spend this much of my time being a businessman," he said. "It's such a joy to sit down and see a patient. I thought that was what I was training for."

AAFP Director Arlene Brown, M.D., of Ruidoso, NM., said she and her staff "saw the writing on the wall" when Medicare physician payments dropped and accounts receivables increased. Something had to happen to keep her "frontier medicine" practice open.

Brown serves 8,000 patients, some of whom must drive 50 miles on a dirt road to reach a paved road—then must drive another 100 miles to her office. At least 30 percent rely on Medicare, she said, "and we can't stop accepting these patients."

So Brown took a pay cut and turned to her staff for help. The employees—a close-knit "family"—didn't want to see anyone lose his or her job, she said. Instead of eliminating a position and/or cutting patient services, all staff members agreed to cut their hours and pay by 15 to 18 percent.

"We must stay open," Brown said. "We know if my patients have to get their primary care 200 miles away from home, they won't go get it. They depend on me, and on us."

How long can her practice hold out for a permanent financial solution? Not long, Brown said. She's hoping efforts to get the federal government to rethink Medicare and correct the physician payment formula will succeed soon.

"If not, we'll be cutting some services we don't have to provide," she said. "The first to go will be flu shots." Next to go will be the free assistance older and low-income patients get when they need help to buy prescription drugs.

"It all makes for bad medicine," Brown said, "but it could help keep our doors open."

If her practice closes, the entire community—her community—could collapse, she said. "A majority of Americans eat, live, sleep and die in small communities. If we shut down the very things that help small communities survive, like medicine, then those communities will die."

(At the request of Mr. DASCHLE, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONGRATULATING AUSTIN AND LYDIA WARDER

• Ms. MIKULSKI. Madam President, today I bring your attention to Austin and Lydia Warder. On August 12, 2002, they celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary, and I ask you to join me, their family and friends in congratulating them.

The Warders have devoted 60 years to each other, to their family, to their community of Indian Head, MD, and to the service of their country through the United States Navy. Our country could not ask for two more dedicated citizens.

Austin Warder was born in Marbury, MD in 1922, just a few miles away from his future bride, Lydia Eastburn, born in 1924. The two met and soon married on August 12, 1942, in Austin's hometown, just before he shipped out for World War II. Austin served his country as a United States Navy Seabee in the South Pacific from 1942 until the war ended in 1945. During that time, Lydia joined the war effort and began working at the Naval Ordinance Station in her hometown of Indian Head, MD.

After the war, the Warders settled down in Indian Head. Austin continued his service with the U.S. Navy, joining Lydia at the Naval Ordinance Station where she worked as a housing project manager. Austin began his career there as Director of the Public Works Department, Maintenance Division. Both received numerous letters of commendation and many outstanding performance ratings over their long careers. They worked together over the years. They finally decided to retire, together, in January of 1977. Lydia was retiring after 35 years and Austin after 32 years.

The Warders have left an important legacy with the Federal Government. Together, they have 70 years of service, and I am sure the Navy joins me in congratulating them. But their most important legacy, and I know their favorite, is their family. Austin and Lydia have been blessed with a large and loving family. They have one daughter, Sandra Benson, two grandchildren, five great grandchildren and one great-great grandchild.

I am honored to share this couple's story of commitment and service with the Senate today. Austin and Lydia Warder are fine Marylanders. Their shared values, hard work, and spirit kept them together through the War, through many years with the Navy, through children and grandchildren and great grandchildren. Please join me in wishing the Warders my most sincere congratulations and best wishes for many more happy years!●

RECOGNIZING THE ENTERPRISE FOUNDATION'S 20TH ANNIVERSARY

• Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I rise today to recognize The Enterprise Foundation as it celebrates its 20th year of building communities and improving low-income people's lives across America.

Renowned developer James Rouse and his wife, Patty, launched Enterprise in 1982. Jim and Patty were inspired to start Enterprise by three women from the Church of the Saviour here in Washington. They asked Jim for help in turning two run-down, rat-infested buildings blighting their Adams Morgan neighborhood into affordable apartments for low-income residents of the area.

With Jim and Patty's help and thousands of hours of volunteer time, the group achieved its goal. The buildings still provide a decent affordable home to low-income people in that community today.

Jim and Patty founded Enterprise to help more community groups rebuild their neighborhoods. Today, Enterprise works through a network of more than 2,200 community-based organizations in more than 820 locations to provide affordable housing, safer streets, and access to jobs and quality childcare.

Through these unsung heroes at the grassroots, Enterprise has invested nearly $4 billion to produce more than 132,000 homes affordable to low-income people. On any given day, more than 250,000 low-income people live in decent, affordable housing made possible in part by Enterprise.

In addition, Enterprise's job training and placement programs have helped more than 32,000 hard-to-employ people qualify for work and retain employment. More than 4,500 children have benefited from Enterprise's childcare initiatives.

President Clinton presented Jim with the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1995. When Jim passed away a year later, Patty and the rest of Enterprise's leadership continued the work he began.

That work goes on today. I have seen firsthand what Enterprise has achieved in many communities in my State. To cite just one example, Enterprise has been working since the early 1990s with the residents of Sandtown-Winchester in Baltimore City on a comprehensive effort to reverse decades of disinvestment and decay.

After more than a decade, Sandtown is showing signs of a turnaround. The median income in the community increased by 50 percent during the 1990s, according to the Census. Median home sale prices rose 376 percent during that time, according to Johns Hopkins University's Institute for Policy Studies. In the parts of this 72-block community where Enterprise has been most active, crime is down and elementary school students are going better.

More work remains, in Sandtown and in countless other low-income areas around the country. True to Jim Rouse's vision, Enterprise will not rest until all low-income Americans have the opportunity for fit and affordable housing and to move up and out of poverty into the mainstream of American life.

I ask that we pay tribute to Mr. Rouse's legacy and to the profound impact that The Enterprise Foundation has had, and continues to have, on the lives of low-income Americans building better lives for themselves, their families and their communities.●

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INVENTION OF THE TELEVISION BY PHILO T. FARNSWORTH

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I rise today to honor the late Philo T. Farnsworth and the Farnsworth family on the 75th anniversary of the invention of the electric television.

It was on September 7, 1927, while working in his small, cramped laboratory at 202 Green Street in San Francisco, that Philo Farnsworth conducted the first successful experiments that form the basis for today's television. Upon completing the very first transmission of an electronic image, Farnsworth sent a telegram to his investors that simply said, "The Damn Thing Works."

Farnsworth first conceptualized these ideas one summer day while tilling a potato field on his family's farm. Riding atop the horse driven plow, the 14-year-old Farnsworth was struck by the crisscrossed patterns in the field. Like the furrows in the field front of him, Farnsworth believed he could separate a picture into lines and reassemble them elsewhere.

In 1930, Farnsworth obtained the patents for his invention, which employs a magnetically deflected electron beam inside a cathode ray tube to transmit a picture. All forms of video in use in the world today, including computer displays, trace their origins to Farnsworth's patents and this seminal event 75 years ago.

When Farnsworth died at the age of 64 in 1971, he held more than 300 U.S. and foreign patents. In September 1983, he was one of four inventors honored by the U.S. Postal Service with a stamp bearing his portrait. My home State of California has recognized his invention of the electronic television by placing a State historical marker memorializing the event in front of his former lab in San Francisco. In addition, the mayor of San Francisco, Willie Brown, recently issued a proclamation making September 7, 2002, Philo Taylor Farnsworth Day in that city.

Before I conclude today, I also want to recognize the important contributions of Elma "Pem" Farnsworth, now 94 years of age and the only living witness to this historic 1927 event. Mrs. Farnsworth, a talented scientist in her own right, worked closely with her husband on many of his inventions. Often called "The Mother of the Television," Mrs. Farnsworth now spends her retirement days residing in Fort Wayne, IN, working tirelessly to ensure that the legacy of Philo Farnsworth's inventions will live on.●

COMMENDING THE SERVICE OF KAYLA J. GILLAN

● Mrs. BOXER. Madam President, I take this opportunity to bring to the Senate's attention the exemplary career and public service of Kayla J. Gillan.

Ms. Gillan has served as General Counsel for the California Public Employees' Retirement System, CalPERS, since 1996, and also worked as Staff Counsel from 1986 to 1990 and as Deputy General Counsel from 1990 to 1996. She led a team of attorneys and other professionals who have worked to support the retirement, health and investment programs benefitting CalPERS members and employers. Ms. Gillan was instrumental in drafting corporate governance principles for the CalPERS Board of Administration, making CalPERS the first fund in the Nation to articulate roles for its Board, leaders, committees and staff.

Ms. Gillan also facilitated the CalPERS Board's self-evaluation process and helped the Board implement path-breaking corporate governance policies. She was the principal drafter of all CalPERS corporate governance policy statements since 1992, and met with more than 150 companies to address poor financial performance and corporate governance.

Under Ms. Gillan's leadership, the CalPERS legal team successfully fought and won litigation that resulted in a return of over $2 billion to the fund, and the establishment of the principle that CalPERS members have a vested right to a fiscally secure retirement system. She drafted Board policies on securities litigation, including the CalPERS process for evaluating litigation that served as a roadmap for the CalPERS legal team to win the largest securities fraud class action recovery in history.

Ms. Gillan has been the recipient of numerous industry honors, such as being named one of the National Law Journal's top 50 women lawyers in the United States in 1998, and was included in that publication's 1995 list of the top "40 under age 40 attorneys" in the Nation.

Ms. Gillan's expertise, dedication, and leadership should be commended. Her work has resulted in the advancement of corporate governance principles in corporations throughout the United States. Establishing higher standards and clear accountability for corporate governance is vital to the integrity of the American economy, particularly in light of the burgeoning corporate scandals in our markets.

I wish Ms. Gillan all the best in her future endeavors.●

THE CHALLENGE OF COMMUNITY SERVICE

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, we have learned much in the last year about how to measure the strength of America, a Nation built on the willingness of our citizens to give of their time and their energy, knowing that in the end our freedom and strength as individuals is connected to the freedom and strength of our Nation, and when one falters the other suffers in turn. Mothers and fathers have passed along to every successive generation pride in sacrifice and a commitment to our shared values that have become the touchstone of America's strength, grounded in the simple words of DeTocqueville: "America is great because Americans are good."

Arthur Blaustein's book on American volunteerism proves that the spirit of our forebears, that spirit that carried us through the tumultuous early days, a Civil War, a Depression, two World Wars, and the upheaval at home and overseas of the sixties, is alive and well today. From commitments to civil rights and civic bodies to military service and community volunteering, our Nation is a nation committed to strengthening and improving the world around us.

And every time Americans have sought to strengthen our freedom and values, we have found individuals willing to volunteer their time and lead by their example, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, Clara Barton, Rachel Carson, Martin Luther King, Jr., and many more. And today, youngsters in middle school and high school have more opportunities than ever to volunteer in their local communities, in nursing homes, tutoring their peers, or helping protect our environment; and are doing so in increasing numbers.

Arthur Blaustein, a long-time volunteer himself and an active force in American volunteer efforts, has written a book that appears at a crucial moment in our Nation's history, a moment when communal and civic engagement are more important than ever. His book honors the high ideals and values that are found in these organizations that have proven so successful in strengthening the ties of our communities and our country.

His message is an important one: if America is to remain strong and committed to our values, civic and community engagement is a necessity. I applaud his proposals and hope many more, both young and old, will volunteer their time and energy to keep America strong.

Part I, The Challenge of Community Service: The traditions of community service and citizen participation have been at the heart of American civic culture since before the nation was founded; whether through town hall meetings, the local school board, a political party, a hospital auxiliary, or one of our innumerable other national and local organizations, Americans have felt and acted on the need to give something back to their communities. Yet since the events of September 11, this need has become more urgent, as Americans on the whole have become more introspective and more patriotic. This patriotism has taken many different forms, but one thing is clear: our concern for our country, our communities, our families, and our neighbors has become more acute, and our need to contribute more urgent.

With firefighters, police officers, and rescue teams leading the way, ordinary citizens, ironworkers, teachers, public health clinicians, professionals, businesspeople, and schoolchildren, either volunteered to go to Ground Zero or offered their support from a distance. Everything from blankets to blood, peanut butter to poetry arrived in New York City by the bale, the gallon, the barrel, and the ream. Americans didn't wait until January 1, 2002, to make resolutions; in mid-September, many resolved to be more caring and giving.

Make a Difference is here to help harness this outpouring of compassion, energy, and patriotism in creative and useful ways. If you've decided to make a difference because of the events of September 11, or if volunteering is one of those things you've been meaning to do all along but just haven't gotten around to, or if you're just curious about what's out there, this book can help you take the next step. It was designed to help you decide that you can make a contribution to the well-being of your community. It will help to answer the why, the how, the what, and the when. Why is community service important? How can you get in touch with a group that promotes the values and goals that you believe in? What specific volunteer activities match up with your skills and experiences? When is a good time to volunteer?

Each of the organizations included in the book has been selected because of its commitment to educational, social, economic, environmental, and community development goals. Some have been in existence for many decades and others are fairly new. Most are national organizations and some are local prototypes; but all have a solid track record of delivering services that are useful and meaningful. Before you select an organization, ask yourself a few questions.

How much time do you want to serve?

What kind of service fits your personality?

What neighborhood and community do you want to work in?

Which target population do you want to work with?

What skills do you have to offer?

What would you like to gain from the experience?

If, for example, you're over 17 can commit a full year, and would like leadership training, some income, and a stipend, you should seriously consider AmeriCorps. If you want to commit a year and you're over 18 and want to work on environmental, art, or music projects, or in community development, you should think about Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA). If you only have a weekend or one day a week, you like working with your hands, and you want to be outdoors, Habitat for Humanity will probably be perfect. If you only have a few hours a week and enjoy children, consider mentoring or tutoring with an educational group. It might take some reflection and research, but there is a fulfilling opportunity for everyone.

Historically, our greatest strength as a nation has been to be there for one another. Citizen participation is the lifeblood of democracy. As Thomas Paine put it, "The highest calling of every individual in a democratic society is that of citizen!" Accidents of nature and abstract notions of improvement do not make our communities better or healthier places in which to live and work. They get better because people like you decide that they want to make a difference.

Volunteering is not a conservative or liberal, Democratic or Republican issue; caring and compassion simply help to define us as being human. Unfortunately, opportunistic radio talk-show hosts and reactionary politicians have spread two false myths about community service. The first is the notion that only inner-city minorities benefit from volunteer efforts. Here's a story about that myth, told to me by a friend who was in VISTA. He was helping local groups organize fuel cooperatives many years ago, in small towns in Maine. That winter was unusually cold and the price of home heating had skyrocketed, placing an enormous financial burden on most families in the state, which had a low per-capita income. He was invited to make a presentation to about two hundred residents in their town's church. After the talk, one of the "happy guy" television reporters from Portland baited a farmer, asking, "What do you think of this outside agitation?"

The farmer, who was about seventy-five, paused for a moment; and, with an edge of flint in his voice, he said, "You know, I'm a fourth-generation Republican Yankee, just like my father, my grandfather, and my great-grandfather, but if I've learned anything, it's that there are two kinds of politics and economics in America. The first kind is what I see on television and what politicians tell me when they want my vote. The other kind is what me and my friends talk about over doughnuts and coffee. And that's what this young fellow was talking about tonight, and he made a lot of sense to me. I'm joining the co-op."

Over 65 percent of America's poor are, like this farmer, white, and white families with children are the fastest growing homeless population. The myth that social programs only serve inner-city minorities stigmatizes volunteer social programs, which are, in fact, color-blind.

The second myth is that the vast majority of individuals who volunteer for community service are naive, idealistic do-gooders. Here's a story about that myth. It happened to me in a bookstore in Northern California. Six years ago, I was a technical advisor to the producers of a public television series called "The New War on Poverty." There was a companion book to the series, and since I had been one of the contributing editors, the publisher asked me to give readings. This particular evening, I showed film clips from the series and spoke about the importance of several War on Poverty programs, including Head Start, the Job Corps, VISTA, Legal Services, and Upward Bound.

While I was signing books after the reading, a woman in her mid-twenties who looked like a quintessential California valley girl, blond hair, blue eyes, approached me with tears in her eyes. I asked if I had said anything that offended her. She replied that I had not and told me she was nonpolitical, conservative, and in her last year of law school. She had been a political science major at college but knew nothing about the history of the War on Poverty. She said she was ashamed because, despite having benefited from two of the programs I had spoken about, Head Start and Upward Bound, she had never before felt a responsibility to give back to her community, and to assure that these programs would be continued so that others could have the same opportunities she had.

Like this woman, the vast majority of volunteers I've worked with are not idealistic, but are serious realists. They are only too aware that as a nation we cannot squander our human and natural resources.

Community service not only exposes the sterility of this kind of idealism-versus-realism debate, but helps individuals to integrate their own idealism and realism. An idealist without a healthy dose of realism tends to become a naive romantic. A realist without ideals tends to become a cynic. Community service helps you put your ideals to work in a realistic setting. It creates a dynamic tension that gives you a coherent and comprehensive approach to complex problems. I've seen it happen time and again with my students, and with VISTA and AmeriCorps volunteers. Dr. Margaret Mead, one of my teachers in graduate school at Columbia, wrote that a truly healthy person is a thinking, feeling, acting person. That's what serving helps us to achieve.

The talk-show hosts and politicians who push these myths are scapegoating and attacking the most vulnerable segments of our society. They are adept at moralizing over the problems of the homeless and the hungry, the unemployed and the underemployed, drug users and the mentality ill, and over such issues as infant mortality, child and spousal abuse, and disrupted families. But they have neither the heart nor the will for rigorous thought and the work of finding cures, nor even relieving some of the suffering or symptoms. Just as military service and patriotism should not be politicized, neither should community service.

Nearly 40 years ago, when President John F. Kennedy launched the Peace Corps, he made this oft-quoted suggestion: "Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country." After 30 years of firsthand experience with hundreds of volunteers, I would make a follow-up suggestion: "Ask not what you can do for your community and the people you serve, but what they can do for you." Community service is very much a two-way street. It is about giving and receiving, and the receiving can be nourishing for the heart and mind. The very act of serving taps into a wellspring of empathy and generosity that is both personally gratifying and energizing. Again and again, former volunteers described their experiences with words like these: adventure, growth, human connection, exciting, spiritual, learning, and enjoyable.

I saw this in action 3 years ago when I decided to give the students in each of my classes, mostly university seniors, the choice between a mid-semester exam or sixteen hours of community service. The students unanimously chose service—though most of them didn't know what was in store for them. They had a choice of about ten different activities organized by the Public Service Center at the University of California, Berkeley.

Here's what one student wrote about this experience: "Before I started volunteering, I had very different expectations about the [after-school] program. I thought it would be very sports-oriented with little academic emphasis. Luckily, my expectations proved false. The program for fourth and fifth-grader at the Thousand Oaks/Franklin Elementary School, has a set schedule for each grade. The students rotate between free play, sports, library study time, circle time, and arts and crafts.

It was in the library that I saw how truly behind these children are in mathematics, reading, and grammar. In addition, I never expected to see the immense poverty that these children experience or to be so emotionally affected by it. Last week, I learned that one of my favorite children is homeless. It seems so silly to be reprimanding him for not doing his homework and not putting out the effort at school. This seems so trivial compared to the real-life horrors that he must experience. Although I had my expectations, never did I anticipate the emotional attachment that I now share with these children. I find myself yearning to become a teacher, which was a career I never thought about before this program. I know that as these children grow, they will probably forget about me; but I know I will never forget them. I have truly changed and matured as a result of them.

A second student wrote:

Before I started tutoring I was really scared, because I didn't know what tutors did in junior high schools. I was afraid of not being able to explain things so that the kids could understand. I thought I might also lose patience quickly with kids who were slower in understanding and for whom I would have to repeatedly state the same thing. I was concerned that the kids would resent me or not respect me because I wasn't the teacher and was closer to their age. And finally, I thought they wouldn't like me; the first day I even had trouble introducing myself because of this initial uncertainty.

Contrary to these preliminary fears, however, tutoring at Willard has been a life-changing experience for me. I've found that I have more patience working with kids than I've ever had in any other area of my life. I work hard to come up with lots of examples when the kids I'm working with don't understand. We relate well to one another because I'm close to their age, yet they respect me because I go to Cal and they know that I'm there to help them. It's been the joy of my semester to work with these students, who I really appreciate.

These comments were typical of the experience of nearly all 80 students. Their testimony is consistent with the more formal academic research and evaluations, which tell us that service-learning clearly enriches and enhances the individual volunteer in multiple ways. And the same things happened to me during my own community service 35 years ago, when I taught in Harlem during the early years of the War on Poverty and VISTA.

My students now, and I back then, confronted the complexities of the everyday worlds of individuals and communities quite different from our own. We are forced to deal with difficult social and economic realities. It was an eye-opener to learn about the inequities and injustices of our society, to see firsthand the painful struggles of children who did not have the educational, social, or economic opportunities that we took for granted. This experience was humbling and it broke down my insularity, for which I'm truly grateful. Again, it was Dr. Margaret Mead who called this "heart-learning."

Community service also taught me an important lesson about our society: ethical values and healthy communities are not inherited. They are either recreated through action by each generation, or they are not. That is what makes AmeriCorps, VISTA, and other forms of community service unique and valuable. They help us to regenerate our best values and principles as individuals and as a society. From Plato to the present, civic virtue has been at the core of civilized behavior. My experience as a teacher and with service-learning has taught me that moral and ethical values cannot survive from one generation to the next if the only preservatives are texts or research studies. Real-life experience is the crucible for shaping values. Out of it develop an intuition and a living memory that are the seeds of a humane and just society.

The task of passing along to the young our best civic traditions is made more difficult by the steady shift of emphasis away from qualitative values civility, cooperation, and the public interest, to quantitative ones, competition, making it, and privatism, as well as the demoralizing pursuit of mindless consumerism and trivia force-fed us by the mass media. Just about every parent and teacher I know has, in one way or another, expressed the concern that they cannot compete with the marketing techniques of the mass media, particularly television. They are worried about the potential consequences of the growing acquisitiveness, the indulgence, and the self-centeredness of children. You hear this from conservatives, liberals, and moderates. Small wonder. The average eighteen-year-old in the United States has seen more than 380,000 television commercials. We haven't begun to comprehend the inherent brutality of this media saturation on our children's psyches.

Materialism and assumptions of entitlement breed boredom, cynicism, drug abuse, and crime for kicks. Passivity, isolation, and depression come with television and on-line addiction. Ignorance, fear, and prejudice come from insularity and exclusivity. A national and local effort to promote community service by young people is the best antidote to these social ills. The goals are inclusive and nourishing; they seek to honor diversity, to protect the environment, and to enrich our Nation's educational, social, and economic policies so that they enhance human dignity. On a personal level, volunteering, the very act of caring and doing, makes a substantial difference in our individual lives because it nourishes the moral intelligence required for critical judgment and mature behavior.

Dr. Seuss reminded us in The Lorax that "unless someone like you cares a whole awful lot nothing is going to get better. It's not." September 11, 2001, as tragic and traumatic as it was, can serve as a transformative event for the American people. We responded to this crisis with introspection, generosity, and caring. Now is not the time to push the snooze button and return to civic fatuity and complacency. Just as we marshaled our forces and mobilized our capacities to confront a foreign enemy, we can take action and confront our domestic problems and conflicts on the home front. In the real world, we know that taking ordinary initiatives can make a difference. It is within our power to move beyond a disaster and to create new opportunities. What it comes down to is assuming personal responsibility. If we decide to become involved in voluntary efforts, we can restore idealism, realism, responsiveness, and vitality to our institutions and our communities.

At her memorial service, it was said of Eleanor Roosevelt, the most influential American woman of the twentieth century, "she would rather light a candle than curse the darkness." What was true for her then is true for us now. The choice to make a difference is ours.●

HONORING NEW YORK CITY'S COURT OFFICERS

● Mrs. CLINTON. Madam President, as we approached the 1-year anniversary of 9/11, I rise today to again honor all of the public safety officers whose courageous and heroic acts saved thousands of lives at the World Trade Center. In particular, I want to highlight a group of public safety officers who deserve to be honored for their heroism. The New York City court officers risked their lives and contributed immensely to the rescue and recovery operations at Ground Zero.

I especially would like to honor three court officers who gave the ultimate sacrifice—their lives. Their heroic deeds have earned them the nomination for the Public Safety Officer Medal of Valor—a testament to true American heroes.

I would like to say a little bit on each officer.

Captain William "Harry" Thompson, of the Bronx, was widely respected and beloved by all 1,600 court officers in New York City as senior instructor at the New York State Court Officers Academy. A 27-year veteran, he was the father of two adult sons and was the sole supporter for his widowed mother. All who knew Captain Thompson considered him a "spit and polish" type of officer. Captain Thompson was proud of his profession and New York is so very lucky that he devoted his life to public service.

Senior Court Officer Thomas Jurgens was part of a family who believed in giving back to one's city and country. Senior Court Officer Jurgens was the son of a firefighter, and was a volunteer fireman from Lawrence, Long Island. He made all of us proud by serving his country in the Persian Gulf war as an Army combat paramedic. Senior Court Officer Jurgens was a 4-year veteran at the Manhattan Supreme Court, and he was married in June 2001.

Senior Court Officer Mitchel Wallace, of Mineloa, Long Island, worked at the Manhattan Supreme Court for 2 years. Before September 11, the New York State Court of Appeals Chief Judge Judith Kaye honored him for resuscitating a man who had collapsed from cardiac arrest aboard a Long Island railroad train. Senior Court Officer Wallace planned to marry Noreen McDonough in October, and he called her "Cinderella."

In addition to these brave heroes who were lost, 22 other court officers risked their lives to save others at the World Trade Center. These men and women have been honored for their bravery on September 11. They are: Deputy Chief Joseph Baccellieri, Jr., Officer Tyree Bacon, Sgt. Frances Barry, Captain John Civelia, Sgt. Gerard Davis, Officer William Faulkner, Officer Gerard Grant, Officer Edwin Kennedy, Officer Elayne Kittel, Officer William Kuhrt, Officer Theodore Leoutsakos, Officer Craig Lovich, Sgt. Patricia Maiorino, Major Reginald V. Mebane, Sgt. Al Moscola, Sgt. Kathryn Negron, Officer Joseph Ranauro, Sgt. Albert Romanelli, Sgt. Richard Rosenfeld, Officer Andrew Scagnelli, Officer Mahindra Seobarrat, and Sgt. Andrew Wender.

Hundreds of court officers volunteered to work on recovery efforts at Ground Zero. After working full shifts at the courthouse, these officers would then work a full shift at Ground Zero. They would return home, clean the dust and debris from their hands, and return to their jobs at the courthouse. Through valor, duty, and commitment, they did all that they could to assist in the rescue and recovery operations.

On behalf of the American people, I express my thanks and appreciation for these public safety officers whose dedication and patriotism strengthen the resolve of our Nation. These officers went above and beyond the call of duty, sacrificing their lives in order to save others, not because it was their job, but because it was their sense of duty of pride. These officers represent the very best in America.●

IN MEMORIAM: WILLIAM A. SCHWARTZ, VICE CHAIRMAN AND VOLUNTEER CEO, NATIONAL PROSTATE CANCER COALITION

● Mr. CLELAND. Madam President, William A. Schwartz died today from the disease that he fought so tirelessly to defeat, prostate cancer. Bill was a 35-year veteran executive of the media industry and a staunch leader in the fight against prostate cancer. His endless passion, devotion, drive, and caring for his family, friends, and community, along with his unwavering commitment to save lives from cancer, will always be remembered.

After being diagnosed with prostate cancer in 1994, Bill dedicated himself to fighting the disease by promoting awareness and launching lobbying efforts to increase research dollars. He served as vice chairman and volunteer CEO of the National Prostate Cancer coalition, board member of CaP CURE, and president of the Prostate Cancer Research Political Action Committee. His work also included cancer projects for the Department of Defense and the National Dialogue on Cancer. The results of his work will continue to benefit countless men and families for many years to come. Georgia was very fortunate to have Bill, his wife Marlene and their three children reside in Atlanta for the past 23 years.

Thank you for letting me take this time to remember our friend, Bill Schwartz and to offer our prayers for the loss of a great American. Prostate cancer is the most commonly diagnosed cancer in America among men and nearly 40,000 American men lose their lives to this disease each year. I know the best tribute we can pay to Bill and his family is to continue his work and find the cure for prostate cancer.●

NATIONAL ASSISTED LIVING WEEK

● Mr. WYDEN. Madam President, I want to draw the Senate's attention to National Assisted Living Week, which begins September 8 and continues through September 14. Since 1995, the National Center for Assisted Living has sponsored National Assisted Living Week to emphasize the importance of this service that nearly 1 million seniors rely on for long-term care.

Assisted living offers hope to seniors who can no longer live independently at home but do not need the level of care provided by nursing facilities. In assisted living facilities, seniors find dedicated caregivers to provide assistance in the activities of daily living in a setting that truly becomes a home. It is predicted that the demand for assisted living will continue to grow as more and more seniors and their families seek out home-like independent living with the benefits of 24-hour supervision.

The theme of this year's National Assisted Living Week is "Honoring the Spirit of Our Nation," which is intended to honor the Nation's rekindled interest in our heritage and values. It is an appropriate theme because it celebrates the residents' lifetime of memories, devotions, and patriotism and the dedication and service of assisted living caregivers. The theme for National Assisted Living Week will highlight the variety of ways assisted living meets the different needs of seniors in our Nation.

I am proud that Oregon has led our Nation in the concept of assisted living. Assisted living has developed differently in each State and its importance in meeting the needs of seniors continues. I believe offering these choices for seniors is important in order to provide them with security, dignity, and independence. It is also important for us to continue to support options that allow seniors and their families a choice of settings in order to assure that they get the level of care they need and deserve.●

REMEMBERING A GREAT GEORGIAN AND A DEVOTED LEADER IN THE FIGHT AGAINST PROSTATE CANCER

● Mr. MILLER. Madam President, I rise today to remember a great Georgian, a 35-year veteran executive of the media industry and a staunch leader in the fight against prostate cancer. William A. Schwartz died today at the age of 63 from the disease that he fought so tirelessly to defeat.

His endless passion, devotion, drive, and caring for his family, friends, and community, along with his unwavering commitment to save lives from cancer, will always be remembered.

After being diagnosed with prostate cancer in 1994, Bill dedicated himself to fighting the disease by bringing national attention to it and by lobbying for crucial research dollars.

Bill served as vice chairman and volunteer CEO of the National Prostate Cancer Coalition and president of the Prostate Cancer Research Political Action Committee. His work also included cancer projects for the Department of Defense and the National Dialogue on Cancer. His work will continue to benefit countless men and families for many years to come.

Bill was the former president and CEO of Cox Enterprises and held various executive positions with the company in New York, San Francisco, and Atlanta between 1973 and 1987. In the 1990s, he served as president and part owner of Cannell Communications and First Media Television and was chairman, CEO, and partner of Capital Cable.

A native of Detroit, Bill received a BS degree from Wayne State University in 1961 and did graduate work at Baruch College. After his military service in the Army Security Agency, he began his broadcasting career in New York with NBC. He eventually moved to Cleveland, OH, and helped put WUAB-TV on the air, and many years later purchased the station with several partners.

Always a music lover, Bill was a professional drummer, playing in jazz trios throughout college and his time in the Army. He marched in President John F. Kennedy's inaugural parade in college, and toured the Mediterranean with the USO.

An Atlanta resident for 23 years, Bill was also a philanthropist who generously donated his time as well as financial support.

I send my heartfelt sympathies to Bill's wife of 39 years, Marlene, and to their children and grandchildren.●

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION ON MENTAL RETARDATION AWARD WINNERS

● Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I am pleased today to join the Illinois chapter of the American Association on Mental Retardation, AAMR, in recognizing the recipients of the 2002 Direct Service Professional Award. These individuals are being honored for their outstanding devotion to the effort to enrich the lives of people with developmental disabilities in Illinois.

These recipients have displayed a strong sense of humanity and professionalism in their work with persons with disabilities. Their efforts have inspired the lives of those for whom they care, and they are an inspiration to me as well. They have set a fine example of community service for all Americans to follow.

These honorees spend more than 50 percent of their time at work in direct, personal involvement with their clients. They are not primarily managers or supervisors. They are direct service workers at the forefront of America's effort to care for people with special needs. They go to work every day with little recognition, providing much needed and greatly valued care and assistance.

It is my honor and privilege to recognize the Illinois recipients of AAMR's 2002 Direct Service Professional Award: Amy Burnell, Kay Grant, Hattie Gregory, Judy Harper, Dora Hildebrand, Mae Holmes, Sarah Kyakonye, Toni Lloyd, Bob Maas, Kelli Martin, Janet Maxton, Millicent McAfoos, Flo McMaster, Lisa Mitchell, Anne Pettus, Sharon Pritchett, LeVetta Rhodes, Ruth Rodenberg, Karin Schwab, and Judy Sheffield.

I know my fellow Senators will join me in congratulating the winners of the 2002 Direct Service Professional Award. I applaud their dedication and thank them for their service.●

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF COMMITTEE

By Mr. BIDEN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Treaty Doc. 96-53 CONVENTION OF THE ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN (Exec. Rept. No. 107-9)

(TEXT OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDED RESOLUTION OF RATIFICATION)

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein),

Section 1. Advice and Consent to Ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women, subject to Reservations, Understandings and Declarations.

The Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on December 18, 1979, and signed on behalf of the United States of America on July 17, 1980 (Treaty Doc. 96-53), subject to the reservations in Section 2, the understandings in Section 3, and the declarations in Section 4.

Section 2. Reservations.

The advice and consent of the Senate is subject to the following reservations, which shall be included in the instrument of ratification:

(1) The Constitution and laws of the United States establish extensive protections against discrimination reaching all forms of governmental activity as well as significant area of non-governmental activity. However, individual privacy and freedom from governmental interference in private conduct are also recognized as among the fundamental values of our free and democratic society. The United States understands that by its terms the Convention requires broad regulation of private conduct, in particular under Articles 2, 3 and 5. The United States does not accept any obligation under the Convention to enact legislation or to take any other action with respect to private conduct except as mandated by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

(2) Under current U.S. law and practice, women are permitted to volunteer for military service without restriction, and women in fact serve in all U.S. armed services, including in combat positions. However, the United States does not accept an obligation under the Convention to assign women to all military units and positions which may require engagement in direct combat.

(3) U.S. law provides strong protections against gender discrimination in the area of remuneration, including the right to equal pay for equal work in jobs that are substantially similar. However, the United States does not accept any obligation under this Convention to enact legislation establishing the doctrine of comparable work as that term is understood in U.S. practice.

(4) Current U.S. law contains substantial provisions for maternity leave in many employment situations but does not require paid maternity leave. Therefore, the United States does not accept an obligation under Article 11(2)(b) to introduce maternity leave with pay or with comparable social benefits without loss of former employment, seniority or social allowances.

Section 3. Understandings.

The advice and consent of the Senate is subject to the following understandings, which shall be included in the instrument of ratification:

(1) The United States understands that this convention shall be implemented by the Federal Government to the extent that it exercises jurisdiction over the matters covered therein, and otherwise by the State and local governments. To the extent that State and local governments exercise jurisdiction over such matters, the Federal Government shall, as necessary, take appropriate measures to ensure the fulfillment of this Convention.

(2) The Constitution and laws of the United States contain extensive protections of individual freedom of speech, expression, and association. Accordingly, the United States does not accept any obligation under this Convention, in particular under Articles 5, 7, 8 and 13, to restrict those rights, through the adoption of legislation or any other measures, to the extent that they are protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

(3) The United States understands that Article 12 permits States Parties to determine which health care services are appropriate in connection with family planning, pregnancy, confinement and the post-natal period, as well as when the provision of free services is necessary, and does not mandate the provision of particular services on a cost-free basis.

(4) Noting in this Convention shall be construed to reflect or create any right to abortion and in no case should abortion be promoted as a method of family planning.

(5) The United States understands that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women was established under Article 17 "for the purpose of considering the progress made in the implementation" of the Convention. The United States understands that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, as set forth in Article 21, reports annually to the General Assembly on its activities, and "may make suggestions and general recommendations based on the examination of reports and information received from the States Parties." Accordingly, the United States understands that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women has no authority to compel actions by States Parties.

Section 4. Declarations.

The advice and consent of the Senate is subject to the following declarations:

(1) The United States declares that, for purposes of its domestic law, the provisions of the Convention are non-self-executing.

With reference to Article 29(2), the United States declares that it does not consider itself bound by the provisions of Article 29(1). The specific consent of the United States to the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice concerning disputes over the interpretation or application of this Convention is required on a case-by-case basis.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DEWINE (for himself and Mr. DURBIN):

S. 2913. A bill to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, the Public Health Service Act, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide health insurance protections for individuals who are living organ donors; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. DEWINE. Madam President, I rise today to raise the awareness of an issue that affects over 22,000 people a year, and that issue is organ donation. The sad fact about organ donations is this: We have the medical know-how to save lives, but we lack the organs. We lack organs because most Americans simply are unaware of the life-giving difference they can make by choosing to become organ donors.

Sadly, each day the waiting list for those needing organs continues to grow. Today, nearly 79,000 people remain on the national transplant waiting list. Right now, more than 50,000 people, alone, are waiting for kidney transplants. That number is expected to double within the next decade. Additionally, between 12 and 16 people die each day just waiting for an available organ.

To remedy the organ shortage, we must increase public awareness. By educating the public and raising awareness, more people will choose to become organ donors. At the very least, through these efforts, we can encourage more families to discuss what their wishes are and whether they would want to be organ donors.

But our efforts must not stop there. We must do more than just implement public awareness campaigns, because the face of organ donation is changing. For the first time ever, the number of living organ donors outnumbered cadaver donors. Last year, there were 6,081 donor cadavers while 6,485 people opted to become living donors, usually giving up a healthy kidney to help a family member or friend.

Recognizing this, my colleague, Senator DURBIN, and I introduce a bill today that would help protect living organ donors in the group insurance market. Our bill would ensure that those individuals who choose to be living organ donors are not discriminated against in the insurance marketplace.

Our bill builds on the protections provided by the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act, so that living organ donors are not denied insurance nor are they applied discriminatory insurance premiums because of their living organ donor status.

Quite simply, a brother who donates a part of his kidney to his sister should not be denied health insurance. But tragically, that is what oftentimes happens. Frequently, individuals who are living organ donors are denied health insurance or restricted from the insurance market. Instead, we should celebrate living organ donors and remove obstacles and barriers for the successful donation of organs. Insurance shouldn't undermine someone's decision to be a living organ donor.

Some States are evaluating how living organ donors affect the market. States are amending their Family Medical Leave Act of 1993, so that living organ donors can participate and benefit from the program. The Federal Government, with the Organ Donor Leave Act of 1999, offered 30 days paid leave to Federal employees who chose to be an organ donor. But, paid leave and job protection doesn't mean much if people are denied health insurance or are required to pay higher premiums because they donated an organ to save another person's life.

The impact of living organ donation is profound. A living organ donor not only can save the life of one patient, but can also take that person off the waiting list for a cadaver donation. That means the next person on the waiting list is "bumped up" a spot—giving additional hope to the 79,000 persons on the national transplant waiting list.

Living organ donors give family members and friends a second chance at life and the opportunity to reduce the number of people on the waiting list to receive an organ. It is time for Congress to make a sensible decision in support of a person's decision to be a living organ donor. I encourage my colleagues to join me in co-sponsoring this bill.

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER:

S. 2914. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for appropriate incentive payments under the Medicare program for physicians' services furnished in underserved areas; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today I introduce the Medicare Incentive Payment Program Refinement Act of 2002. This bill makes needed and long-overdue changes to the Medicare Incentive Payment Program, an initiative conceived to address the growing primary care physician shortage in some of our country's most medically underserved communities. The number of physicians needed to care for all individuals, especially our aging seniors, continues to grow in remote rural areas and in underserved urban areas. However, rising health costs and the difficulties of operating a practice in underserved communities has exacerbated the physician shortage. Although the Medicare Incentive Payment Program aims to address the financial hurdles facing physicians in needy areas, the program has failed to achieve real results. This bill will make fundamental changes to improve the program's effectiveness.

Rural areas, in particular, are in need of efforts to retain primary care physicians, since the difficulties of operating a practice often drive doctors to larger areas with more resources and professional support. According to the Federal Office of Rural Health Policy, over 20 million Americans live in areas that have a shortage of physicians, and between 1975 and 1995 the smallest counties in the U.S., population under 2,500, experienced a drop in their physician-to-population ratio. More than 2,200 primary care physicians would be needed to remove all nonmetropolitan HPSA designations, and more than twice that number is needed to achieve adequate physician staffing levels nationwide.

According to the National Rural Health Association, nonmetropolitan physicians treat a larger number of Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries than their urban counterparts do, generating less income for physicians per patient. Furthermore, nonmetropolitan physicians are less likely to perform high cost medical services due to their limited number of resources. Understandably, MIPPP monies can affect the quality of life for rural physicians and help prevent the mass migration of needed health care professionals from underserved areas.

The Medicare Incentive Payment Program, as it exists today, has not fulfilled its original mandate, to recruit and retain primary care physicians in health professional shortage areas. Passed as part of OBRA 87, the program pays all physicians a 10 percent bonus for each Medicare recipient they treat. This enhanced reimbursement is meant to offset the financial advantage of providing service in more populous areas, as well as help physicians with the costs associated with operating a practice in an underserved community. Most importantly, the program aims to increase health care access for Medicare beneficiaries and improve the health of communities overall.

However, analyses from the Office of the Inspector General of HHS, the GAO, and independent health experts confirm that the program is unfocused and largely ineffective. All physicians are eligible for bonus payments, even when they may not be in short supply. Bonus payments are 10 percent, not enough to lure physicians to underserved areas, especially if the payment is based on a basic, primary care visit. Finally, many physicians do not even know this program exists, and those that do are often unsure whether they are delivering care in a HPSA and how to bill for the payment appropriately.

To improve the program, this bill increases the bonus payment from 10 percent to 20 percent and allows only those physicians providing primary care services, including family and general medicine, general internal medicine, pediatrics, obstetrics and gynecology, emergency medicine, and general surgery, to receive the incentive payment. Finally, my bill automates payments, so physicians no longer have to guess whether they are eligible for the program. These improvements will strengthen the original intent of the legislation, to recruit and retain primary care physicians in underserved areas, and strengthen the primary health care infrastructure of our country's most needy communities.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Incentive Payment Program Refinement Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. REVISION OF INCENTIVE PAYMENTS FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES FURNISHED IN UNDERSERVED AREAS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1833(m) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395f(m)) is amended to read as follows:

"(m) INCENTIVE PAYMENTS FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES FURNISHED IN UNDERSERVED AREAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of physicians' services furnished by a physician with an applicable physician specialty to an individual who is enrolled under this part and who incurs expenses for such services in an area that is designated under section 332(a)(1)(A) of the Public Health Service Act as a health professional shortage area, in addition to the amount otherwise paid under this part, there also shall be paid to the physician (or to an employer or facility in the cases described in clause (A) of section 1842(b)(6)) (on a quarterly basis) from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, an amount equal to 20 percent of the payment amount for the service under this part.

"(2) APPLICABLE PHYSICIAN SPECIALTY DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term 'applicable physician specialty' means, with respect to a physician, the primary specialty of that physician if the specialty is one of the following:

- "(A) General practice.
- "(B) Family practice.
- "(C) Pediatric medicine.
- "(D) General internal medicine.
- "(E) Obstetrics and gynecology.
- "(F) General surgery.
- "(G) Emergency medicine.

"(3) AUTOMATION OF INCENTIVE PAYMENTS.—The Secretary shall establish procedures under which the Secretary shall automatically make the payments required to be made under paragraph (1) to each physician who is entitled to receive such a payment. Such procedures shall not require the physician furnishing the service to be responsible for determining when a payment is required to be made under that paragraph."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to services furnished on or after January 1, 2003, in an area designated under section 332(a)(1)(A) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254e(a)(1)(A)) as a health professional shortage area.

By Mr. BIDEN:

S. 2916. A bill to put a college education within reach, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, as another school year starts, many college students are worrying not only about their class loads and their coursework, but about where the money to pay for their educations will come from. Today, the average cost of attending a public 4-year college has jumped to $9,000, up 7.7 percent from last year. This represents the highest rate of increase since 1993. For those families that choose to send their children to a private institution, that number rises. Up 4.7 percent from the year before, the average cost of a private 4-year institution is now close to $24,000 a year.

What do these rising tuition costs mean? Hard working American families are spending a larger percentage of their incomes than ever before to send their children to college. To attend the University of Delaware, where I went to school, it costs nearly 20 percent of a Delaware family's average annual income to cover costs. To attend a private college or university, that number, in some instances can jump to over 40 percent of annual income.

To help remedy this situation I come to the floor today to reintroduce legislation to help American families afford their children's tuition. This comprehensive package, "The Tuition Assistance for Families Act," builds upon previous steps that others and I have taken to make it possible for more families to provide their children with a college education. I introduce this bill so that the decision to send one's child to college will not be overshadowed by the decision of how to pay for it.

The "Tuition Assistance for Families Act" will provide middle class American families with a $12,000 tuition tax deduction each year. Based on legislation that I introduced with Senator SCHUMER last year, at $12,000 this deduction provides real, meaningful tax relief. Tax relief that American families have been waiting for. Tax relief that can go a long way in helping them afford room, board and tuition.

The bill that I am introducing today also expands the two tuition tax credits enacted in 1997—the Hope Scholarship and the Lifetime Learning Tax Credit. Under current law, the Lifetime Learning Credit allows a 20 percent tax credit on the first $10,000 in higher education expenses in year 2003. Under my bill, the Lifetime Learning Tax Credit percentage would jump from 20 to 25 percent and raise the amount of education expenses subject to the credit to $12,000. In terms of real dollars, this would mean that a student who files in tax year 2003 under my plan could get up to $3,000 back in taxes. Under current law, the maximum allowable credit is only $2,000. That is a $1,000 difference. $1,000 that can go directly into a student's pocket to pay for books, a computer or tuition. The also raises the income limits for each credit to $130,000 per family, per year, so that more families are afforded the help that they need.

This bill reintroduces the idea of a $1,000 merit scholarship to be awarded to the top 5 percent of each high school's graduating class. These types of scholarships not only reward student achievement, they help to ensure that the best and brightest students have the ability to go on to college—thereby increasing the pool of well-qualified American workers for the information technology age.

This act also increases the maximum Pell Grant award from $4,000 to $4,500. During the 2001–2002 school year, the maximum Pell Grant award covered about 42 percent of the average tuition, room and board at a public 4-year university. During the 1975–76 it covered 84 percent of these same costs. Clearly, the purchasing power of these grants has dramatically declined. As such, the debt load of American families and American students has increased considerably over the years as students have looked to federal and private loans to finance their educations. A report released just this March by the State PIRG's Higher Education Project found that at the end of the 1999–2000 school year, 64 percent of college students graduated with student loan debt at an average of $16,928, nearly double the average debt load just eight years ago. Double the debt load in 1994.

It is the dream of every American to provide for their child a better life than they had themselves. Helping families afford the increasing cost of a college education will move us closer to making that dream a reality. For this reason, I have spent a great deal of time in the Senate fighting to provide tax relief for middle class American families struggling with the cost of college. And while I was pleased when some of the ideas I advocated were adopted in the 1997 tax cut bill, it is clear that as tuition costs rise dramatically, working Americans need additional assistance. The "Tuition Assistance for Families Act" will provide extra help so that more families can afford to give their children a brighter and better future. Let's not allow a college education to become a luxury when, in the information technology age, it is an absolute necessity.

Mr. REID (for himself and Ms. CANTWELL) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions:

S. CON. RES. 138

Whereas ovarian cancer is a serious and under recognized threat to women's health;

Whereas ovarian cancer, the deadliest of the gynecologic cancers, is the fourth leading cause of cancer death among women in the United States

Whereas ovarian cancer occurs in 1 out of 57 women in the United States;

Whereas approximately 50 percent of the women in the United States diagnosed with ovarian cancer die as a result of the cancer within 5 years;

Whereas in cases where ovarian cancer is detected in the beginning stages, more than 90 percent of women survive longer than 5 years;

Whereas only 25 percent of ovarian cancer cases in the United States are diagnosed in the beginning stages;

Whereas in cases where ovarian cancer is diagnosed in the advanced stages, the chance of 5-year survival is only about 25 percent; and

(1) the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health—

(2) the Secretary of Health and Human Services should submit to Congress a report on the research described in paragraph (1)(A), including an analysis of the effectiveness of the medical screening technique for identifying ovarian cancer; and

(3) if the research demonstrates that the medical screening technique is effective for identifying ovarian cancer, Federal health care programs and group and individual health plans should cover the technique.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I rise today for myself and Senator CANTWELL to submit a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of Health and Human Services should conduct or support research to improve early detection of ovarian cancer. Specifically, our resolution encourages continuing and accelerating the development of an ovarian cancer screening test currently underway through a public-private partnership including the National Cancer Institute and the Food and Drug Administration.

Ovarian cancer is the deadliest of the gynecologic cancers and the fourth leading cause of cancer death among women in the United States. Ovarian cancer occurs in 1 out of 57 women, and an estimated 13,900 American women died from ovarian cancer in 2001 alone.

Currently, approximately three-quarters of women with ovarian cancer are diagnosed when they are already in advanced stages of the disease, and only one in five will survive five years. However, if the disease is caught early, the five-year survival rate jumps to 95 percent. Thus providing a way to routinely identify the disease in its "Stage 1" phase could have a dramatic impact in what is now a very deadly cancer. No screening test exists that can accurately detect ovarian cancer in the early states when it is highly curable.

In the February 2002 issue of The Lancet, scientists from the Food and Drug Administration and the National Cancer Institute reported that patterns of protein found in patients' blood serum may reflect the presence of ovarian cancer. Using an innovative testing approach, analyzing patterns of blood protein rather than identifying single blood biomarkers, researchers were able to differentiate between serum samples taken from patients with ovarian cancer and those from unaffected individuals.

However, this research finding was only a first step. Before the scientific community will agree that protein screening is an accurate and beneficial tool, additional multi-institutional trials must be completed.

Patients would certainly be more willing to be tested if all that it involved were a simple, finger-stick blood test, thus eliminating the need for surgery, biopsy, or other painful, invasive, or risky procedures. The critical advantage of such a screening test is early detection, finding the disease when it is most treatable. Of course, early detection of ovarian cancer will save health care costs, but, more importantly, it will save lives.

This is why I am submitting this resolution. Our resolution encourages the Department of Health and Human Services to rapidly evaluate the efficacy of this cutting-edge work in the area of testing for ovarian cancer. If the screening tests are proven effective, the public must have the widest possible access to them. Toward that end, the resolution provides that they be covered by Federal health care programs and group and individual health plans.

Representatives STEVE ISRAEL, and ROSA DELAURO, both tireless leaders on cancer research and health issues, introduced this resolution, in the House of Representatives. Through their efforts and bi-partisan support, H. Con. Res. 385 was passed by the House of Representatives on July 22. The resolution deserves the Senate's prompt attention, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL CONSTRUCTION SAFETY TEAM ACT

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 510, H.R. 4687.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

A bill (H.R. 4687) to provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, today the Senate will consider H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act. The Senate companion, S. 2496, was introduced by Senators CLINTON, SCHUMER, LIEBERMAN, and DODD, and is currently pending before the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, which I chair.

At the urging of our colleagues, particularly Senator CLINTON, the committee has agreed to move the House version of the legislation in the hopes that action on this bill might be completed by September 11. The committee has worked to accommodate those requests to move this bill. In that effort, the committee has made some changes to the bill to clarify its purpose and to address some technical issues.

The National Construction Safety Team Act would provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life. The bill seeks to address several problems identified as a result of the collapse of the World Trade Center Towers. For example, no Federal agency is clearly charged with investigating building failures. The bill would solve this problem by giving the National Institute of Standards and Technology, NIST, clear responsibility to handle such investigations. Further, there are currently no guarantees that investigations will begin quickly enough to preserve valuable evidence. The bill would require NIST to act within 48 hours of a building failure. In addition, no Federal agency has the investigative authority needed to ensure access to a building's structural information. Therefore, the bill would provide to NIST clear authority to enter sites, access documents, test materials, and move evidence, as well as clear authority to issue subpoenas. Finally, there is no mechanism for keeping the public informed of the progress of an investigation. The bill would require NIST to provide regular public briefings and to make public its findings and the materials that led to those findings.

I would like to enter into a discussion with my friend Senator MCCAIN, the ranking member of the committee, regarding the provisions in the bill relating to a construction safety team's final report and membership.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the chairman of the Commerce Committee. When a construction safety team issues its report on the likely technical cause for building failure, along with recommendations under Section 8 of this legislation, it is my understanding that any strongly held minority or dissenting views would also be included in that report. I believe that is the committee's intent.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The ranking member is correct. While it is our hope that teams would be able to issue a consensus report, the committee urges the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, when setting the procedures to govern construction safety teams, to ensure that any such minority or dissenting views are included in any report.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would also like to clarify an issue regarding the composition of a safety team. It seems appropriate to permit employees of Federal agencies to serve as members of construction safety teams. And certainly in the event that a construction safety team investigates the collapse of a Federal building, a representative from the General Services Administration should be included on the team.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I agree that is the committee's intent. I thank Senator MCCAIN once again for his cooperation in this matter and urge the Senate to pass this legislation, as amended.

AMENDMENT NO. 4514

(Purpose: To provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that posed significant potential of substantial loss of life)

Mr. REID. Senator HOLLINGS has a substitute amendment at the desk. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered and agreed to; the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; the bill, as amended, be read the third time and passed; the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; and that any statements and colloquies relating to this matter be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4514) was agreed to.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

The bill (H.R. 4687), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2002

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, September 10; that following the prayer and pledge, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate resume consideration of the Interior Appropriations Act under the previous order. Further, that the Senate recess from 12:30 to 2:15 p.m. for the weekly partly conferences, and at 2:15 p.m. the Senate resume consideration of the Homeland Security Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member except the majority leader, the minority leader or the minority whip limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRBACHER) for 5 minutes.

HONORING COMMANDER MASSOUD

Mr. ROHRBACHER. Mr. Speaker, today is the first anniversary of the murder of Commander Massoud, a leader of the anti-Taliban forces in northern Afghanistan. Two days before the attack on the United States, bin Laden's terrorists, posing as journalists, killed Commander Massoud. They blew him up. The Taliban and the al Qaeda were free from their most effective opponent, and the world lost a champion.

Those of us who dedicated ourselves to eliminating communism from this world know what a great debt that we owe to Commander Massoud. It was his courage, his tenacity and skills in battle that played an indispensable role in the outcome of that global fight between good and evil known as the Cold War.

I first began communications with Commander Massoud when he sent his brother to see me when I worked at the White House in the 1980s under Ronald Reagan. At that time Commander Massoud was already a legend. His courage and wisdom served his own people well. It also inspired freedom-loving people throughout the world, and let me admit to that I was one of those who was inspired by Commander Massoud. It was my honor to have communicated with him over the years as well as to go and meet him in Afghanistan about 5 years ago, meet him in one of his mountain retreats, one of his mountain holdouts, and strategize with him on how to free Afghanistan from the grip of the Taliban.

Commander Massoud, along with the other leaders of the resistance against Soviet occupation, leaders like Abdul Haq, were heroes in the truest sense of the word. Massoud was never defeated by those Soviet troops during the long battle for Afghanistan. It is unfortunate that after the Soviets were defeated that chaos and a lack of support from Afghanistan's Western friends prevented Massoud and others from unifying and democratizing their country. Americans can be proud, however, that we helped Commander Massoud and the Afghan freedom fighters, people like Abdul Haq, as I say, in their fight to thwart Soviet aggression, but we should be ashamed that we walked away after that great victory and left them with no resources to rebuild their country.

It is also sad that the United States, under President Clinton's leadership, never provided Massoud or the other freedom fighters what they needed to prevent the tyranny of the Taliban from dominating Afghanistan. But as we know, Commander Massoud was able to stand like a giant. Like the Soviet troops before them, the Taliban were never able to defeat Commander Massoud.

Today as we try to rebuild a peaceful Afghanistan where people can raise their families and live without fear, Commander Massoud is sorely missed. Although he made mistakes, and all leaders make mistakes and there were some judgments, of course, things that happened that were not absolutely all totally correct, this is the real world, but by and large Commander Massoud, one can say of his life, he fought for the right. He was a major force for good. But as we remember him today on the first anniversary of his death, let us commit ourselves to his vision of a free, prosperous, and more peaceful Afghanistan. And in achieving this we will assure that Commander Massoud will never be defeated.

One year ago, upon hearing of Commander Massoud's death, and as I say, it was an assassination that took place 1 year ago today, 2 days before September 11, I went into a state of shock. It was like taking the breath right out of my lungs. But after regaining my composure, I realized, yes, my friend had been assassinated, but I realized that those who killed Massoud had a purpose. They meant to attack the United States and were eliminating the person that we would turn to to rally the people of Afghanistan and lead a counterattack against the Taliban. That meant that an attack on the United States was imminent.

I called the White House and asked for an emergency meeting with Condoleezza Rice and the top members of the President's National Security Council. I got a call back and was told that the earliest that they could meet me, and they were taking my request very seriously, would be at 2 o'clock the next day.

Well, at 8:45 a.m. that next day, the hijackers' planes began to slam into the World Trade Center. Yes, that could have been averted had we had Commander Massoud fighting against the Taliban much earlier. Unfortunately, we did not provide him the effort and what he needed to defeat the Taliban then.

Commander Massoud would have been making history all this year and would have been doing and helping things for the better, and we will avenge his death and all the victims of 9-11 by rebuilding a peaceful Afghanistan free of tyrants and fanatics.

NEXTWAVE AUCTION BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from California (Mr. ROHRBACHER) for his continuing support in recognizing this anniversary. NPR had a great tribute to the general this morning which I listened to. I think it is altogether appropriate that the gentleman do this on the House floor, of course, and I want to thank him.

Mr. Speaker, on another matter, I rise to deal with something that is more close to home, and that is dealing with something I am involved with in telecommunications. I am urging my colleagues to support a bill that I introduced to eliminate impediments that restrict the ability of certain wireless telecommunication providers to, I think, meet the urgent need of the consumers. The bill has bipartisan support and the support of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and the Internet on which I serve.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, that a recent editorial in the Wall Street Journal supports my actions on this matter, and I will be providing the Wall Street editorial to be made a part of the RECORD and part of my speech.

The affected providers are the successful bidders for wireless spectrum that the Federal Communications Commission auctioned off in Auction No. 35. Some of the spectrum had previously been licensed to companies, including NextWave Personal Communications, whose bankruptcy filings, and subsequent failure to pay amounts due to the FCC for their licenses, led to the cancellation of those licenses. The FCC subsequently reclaimed the licenses and reaucted them off in Auction No. 35 for about $16 billion.

In June 2001, the D.C. Circuit held that "the Commission violated the provision of the Bankruptcy Code that prohibits governmental entities from revoking debtors' licenses solely for failure to pay debts dischargeable in bankruptcy." In August 2001, after the issuance of that court's mandate, the FCC restored the NextWave licenses to active status. More recently, the Supreme Court granted the FCC's petition for a writ of certiorari to review the D.C. Circuit's judgment. The Supreme Court will not hear argument in the case until the fall of 2002 and is unlikely to announce a decision until the spring of 2003. If the Court reverses the D.C. Circuit's decision, there will be further litigation on remand in D.C. Circuit to resolve issues that court did not reach in its first decision. As a result, there is not likely to be a final resolution of the status of the NextWave licenses any time soon, and the FCC therefore will not be in a position to deliver licenses to the winners of Auction No. 35, until three or more years from the time the auction was concluded.

Now, the status of NextWave's license has been the subject of extended litigation in not only the bankruptcy court, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, and soon to be, the Supreme Court of the United States.

Although the FCC recently returned most of the downpayment funds previously deposited by all these successful bidders, it continues to hold, without interest, Mr. Speaker, substantial sums, equal to 3 percent of the total amount of the winning bids. It apparently intends to hold these sums indefinitely.

Despite the lengthy delay in delivering the licenses, moreover, the FCC takes the position that the successful bidders remain obligated, on a mere 10-day notice, to pay the full amount of their successful bids if and when the FCC, at some unknown future date, establishes its right to deliver those licenses.

Now, I think, as the Wall Street Journal points out, this is grossly unfair to those who bid on these licenses and did so in good faith. Companies calibrate their bids on the understanding of the auction, implicit in any commercial arrangement, that the delivery of the licenses will occur in a reasonable time following these auctions. That expectation is especially crucial in the context of spectrum licenses. Given the recent volatility we have seen in the market prices for spectrum, we can understand that there would be some action by the FCC after the auction.

Moreover, it is particularly burdensome to some companies to have the FCC hold even a small portion of their enormous downpayment without any interest on these amounts. It is not done in the private sector; it should not be done in the government. They are paying no interest on these deposits for extended periods of time.

In addition, winning bidders are obligated, as I mentioned, on very short notice to pay the remaining $16 billion they bid for the license at issue. Obviously, this adversely affects their capacity to serve the needs of their customers, because they must have this capital always on hand and they cannot use it for long-term benefits for business. This need to keep itself in a position to fulfill that obligation at an indefinite future date impedes its ability to take, as I mentioned, interim steps for building their own businesses.

The FCC's failure to respond appropriately to alleviate these serious burdens, I believe, deserves the public interest. That is why I have dropped bill H.R. 4738. It addresses this problem in two ways, Mr. Speaker.

First, it requires the FCC promptly to refund to the winning bidders the full remaining amount of their deposits and their downpayments. Second, it gives each winning bidder an opportunity to elect, within 15 days after enactment, to relinquish its rights and to be relieved of all further obligations under Auction No. 35. Those who choose to retain their rights and obligations under Auction No. 35 will nonetheless be entitled to a return of their deposits and downpayments in the interim period. If and when the FCC is in a position to deliver the license at issue to those who remain obligated, they will be required to pay the full amount of their bid in accordance with the FCC's existing regulations. Those who elect to terminate their rights and obligations under this auction will be free to pursue their business interests without the burdens under which they must labor.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this timely and much-needed legislation, and I appreciate the Wall Street Journal bringing to the attention of the Nation this very important problem, and I also hereby submit for the RECORD the article I have referred to.

ANOTHER TELECOM FIASCO

The telecom shakeout (or meltdown) continues, with Qwest ditching assets to stay solvent, and VoiceStream pursuing a merger in wireless with Cingular. The market will sort all of this out, though it sure would help if the Federal Communications Commission stopped making things worse.

Consider the FCC's ongoing NextWave spectrum fiasco. That small wireless carrier won spectrum licenses in a 1997 FCC auction, but later defaulted on its payments. The FCC revoked the licenses and reaucted them—even as NextWave was suing to get them back. NextWave won its case, and a red-faced FCC had to tell the other carriers that had just bid $16 billion that it had nothing to give them.

In the real business world, the FCC would have cancelled the reauction once it couldn't deliver the licenses. But rules are different in FCC-land. The agency may not have delivered any licenses, but it has nonetheless held on to the hefty deposits the second batch of carriers gave it. And, by the way, the FCC has informed those carriers that when it does finally turn over the spectrum (in 2004, optimistically, if ever), it expects them to cough up the entire $16 billion within 10 business days.

All of this is playing havoc with an industry already in chaos. Verizon Wireless, for instance, bid $8.7 billion for its share of the spectrum. The FCC took a deposit from the company of $1.7 billion, and then sat on it—interest free—for 14 months. The FCC finally gave back some of the deposit earlier this year, though it still holds the bureaucratic pocket-change of $261 million.

Verizon is also stuck with a large liability—money it can't effectively touch because of the 10-day future payment obligation. Credit agencies say they may downgrade its debt because of the $8.7 billion overhang. Meantime, the company can't afford to run in place for years while the FCC fiddles, so it has redrawn its business strategy around the lost spectrum—which means it may not need it even if it comes free.

The FCC usually hands over licenses within three months, and for good reason: The industry changes faster than a politician's mind. Since January 2001 when the reauction ended, wireless and equipment companies have laid off tens of thousands of workers and lost $350 billion, or 65%, in market value. (Would that the FCC shrank 65% in size.) Wireless officials estimate that if the reauction were held today, the bids would be about 40% of the original $16 billion.

But that gets to the heart of the FCC matter: money, and creative accounting. It turns out that when NextWave bid its $4.8 billion in 1997, the FCC booked the entire amount in the federal budget. Then, when the reauction happened in 2001, it booked that $16 billion as well—adjusted for what it had lost from NextWave.

Chairman Michael Powell keeps promising a telecom revival, but this FCC money-grubbing doesn't help. The reauction is tying up much-needed investment capital: According to a recent study from AEI economist Gregory Sidak, the frozen $16 billion, if released, would increase GDP between $19 billion and $52 billion. Consumers are also losing out, as new services such as mobile videophones are delayed.

The FCC isn't even helping itself, if it cares. Reputation counts, even in government, and the agency has important auctions to come. Carriers may discount future bids because of uncertainty of ever receiving licenses. Several big players may not be able to bid at all, since the FCC is already sitting on their capital.

We still believe FCC auctions are the most efficient way of allocating spectrum. But their purpose is defeated when the government keeps the cash but won't deliver the goods.

FEDERAL TRANSIT FORMULA GRANTS FLEXIBILITY RETENTION ACT

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5157) to amend section 5307 of title 49, United States Code, to allow transit systems in urbanized areas that, for the first time, exceeded 200,000 in population according to the 2000 census to retain flexibility in the use of Federal transit formula grants in fiscal year 2003, and for other purposes.

H.R. 5157

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. URBANIZED AREA FORMULA GRANTS.

Section 5307(b) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the last sentence of paragraph (1);

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively;

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following:

“(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003.—

“(A) INCREASED FLEXIBILITY.—The Secretary may make grants under this section, from funds made available to carry out this section for fiscal year 2003, to finance the operating cost of equipment and facilities for use in mass transportation in an urbanized area with a population of at least 200,000 as determined under the 2000 decennial census of population if—

“(i) the urbanized area had a population of less than 200,000 as determined under the 1990 Federal decennial census of population;

“(ii) a portion of the urbanized area was a separate urbanized area with a population of less than 200,000 as determined under the 1990 Federal decennial census of population; or

“(iii) the area was not designated as an urbanized area as determined under the 1990 Federal decennial census of population.

“(B) MAXIMUM AMOUNTS.—Amounts made available pursuant to subparagraphs (A)(i) and (A)(ii) shall be no more than the amount apportioned in fiscal year 2002 to the urbanized area with a population of less than 200,000 as determined in the 1990 Federal decennial census of population. Amounts made available pursuant to subparagraph (A)(iii) shall be no more than the amount apportioned under this section for fiscal year 2003.”; and

(4) in paragraph (3) (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this section) by aligning subparagraph (C) with subparagraphs (A) and (B).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CUMMINGS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI).

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The Transit Operating Flexibility Act, the bill before us, is bipartisan legislation that will allow the transit systems in 52 communities that grew to more than 200,000 in population as defined by the 2000 census to retain flexibility in the use of their Federal transit formula grants in budget year 2003.

H.R. 5157 was favorably reported without amendment by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on July 24 of this year. The bill now has a total of 45 original cosponsors. Legislation was developed with the assistance and cooperation of the Federal Transit Administration, and has been endorsed by the American Public Transportation Association.

The 2000 census made wholesale changes in urbanized area designations. Some of the communities that are crossing 200,000 in population simply grew since 1990. Others were absorbed into nearby major metropolitan areas. Yet others were combined with another nearby small city. Many of these communities were not aware they were going to cross 200,000 until the final urbanized area notice was published in the Federal Register in May of 2002.

Under current Federal transit law, areas of more than 200,000 cannot use Federal formula grant funds to pay for transit operating expenses. The Transit Operating Flexibility Act will allow the 52 communities affected by the 2000 census change to retain their operating flexibility in budget year 2003 to the same extent that they did in fiscal year 2002.

Without this legislation, some transit operators in the affected areas may be so strapped for resources that they will have to drastically reduce service or even shut their doors. We cannot allow a change in census definition to result in a loss of public transportation services.

This bill does not change the amount of transit formula funding that these communities or any other community will receive under TEA-21 in fiscal year 2003. The Federal Transit Administration will apportion formula grant funds to its grantees according to the 2000 census numbers as they are required by law to do. H.R. 5157 gives these 52 communities some breathing room to adjust to their new urbanized area status as they plan how to fund these transit services under their new urbanized area designation.

I urge that the House pass the bill that is before us, H.R. 5157.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), for advancing legislation, H.R. 5157, that will allow local flexibility in the use of Federal transit funds in the newly designated urbanized areas over 200,000 population.

H.R. 5157 amends the Federal transit program to allow transit systems in urbanized areas that for the first time exceeded 200,000 in population to retain flexibility in the use of Federal transit formula grants in fiscal year 2003 for operating and capital assistance.

Without this flexibility, some transit systems would not have sufficient revenues to continue to provide public transportation services. The lack of flexibility in the use of Federal transit formula funds may result in the interruption in transit services or unnecessary hardship on transit systems.

Mr. Speaker, as the committee moves forward with legislation to reauthorize the surface transportation programs, the flexibility needed for transit systems in urbanized areas will be addressed in the legislation.

In the interim, I urge the enactment of H.R. 5157.

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5157. This bill will allow Boise, ID and dozens of other transit systems around the country to maintain bus and transit service.

Boise, like many other communities around the Nation, depends upon its Section 5307 grants under TEA-21 to meet the operating costs of maintaining bus service. Unfortunately, the current 5307 program restricts federal funds to capital costs when an area's population increases to over 200,000. Boise and 51 other cities crossed that benchmark in the last census and now face losing the funds they need for operating bus services.

When TEA-21 was passed in 1998 the potential disruption after a census was not taken into consideration. Forcing communities to make major changes in their financing is unfair, particularly when that program, and its rules, are to be reauthorized in less than a year.

H.R. 5157, Mr. Speaker, will prevent large disruptions in service Idaho and nationwide. It will protect the jobs of those who commute to work by public transit. It will help the environment, and relieve traffic congestion. It will give community leaders another option in planning the growth of their cities and enable our transit systems to build for the future.

Boise is one of the fastest growing areas in the Nation, and is suffering the growing pains of traffic congestion and air pollution. An integrated program of highway and transit development is essential to meeting growth. At the same time federally provided funds must be flexible enough to meet the unique needs and challenges of each community.

As this House prepares TEA-21 reauthorization I will fight for more generous and flexible funding of transit needs in Idaho and other fast-growing rural states.

I want to thank Chairman YOUNG of the full committee for introducing this bill, and Chairman PETRI for managing the debate today. I also want to thank Kelly Fairless of Valley Ride in Boise, Grant Jones of Boise Urban Stages, and Steve O'Neal of the Idaho Transportation Department of their work on behalf of Idaho transit, and the drivers and maintenance personnel for Valley Ride who work everyday to bring mobility to the people of the Treasure Valley.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5157.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CUMMINGS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI).

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 401, honoring the over 100,000 men and women who serve as flight attendants. As we near the final anniversary of the September 11 attacks, I think it is appropriate that we stop to recognize these everyday heroes.

America's flight attendants dedicated their lives to ensuring the safety and the security of their passengers. There are over 20,000 commercial airline flights each day, and on these flights, flight attendants put the well-being of each of their passengers ahead of their own. They are the first responders to all emergencies in the cabin of an aircraft. They provide in-flight medical assistance to passengers in need. They may be the only line of defense should terrorists once again attempt to take control of an airplane.

It was the flight attendants who subdued attempted shoe-bomber Richard Reid aboard American Flight 63 last September. Last year, 23 flight attendants lost their lives aboard the four hijacked flights on September 11. In recognition of their important role, the House overwhelmingly passed legislation that would significantly increase self-defense and situational training to aid flight attendants in the case of another terrorist hijacking.

I would like to express my profound gratitude for all airline flight attendants for their daily service to make air travel safe and secure, and urge the passage of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to commend the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), for their action on House Concurrent Resolution 401 that recognizes the largely unsung heroism that airline flight attendants display on a daily basis.

On September 11 of last year, 25 flight attendants lost their lives as a result of terrorist attacks. When they left their homes and loved ones that morning, I am sure that none of them knew what tragic events would unfold before the day's end, and what role they would play in it. Five flight attendants working on United Airlines Flight No. 93 helped prevent hijackers from reaching their intended target of Washington, D.C. I am sure that many of us have to give credit to them for perhaps saving our lives.

Everyday a workforce of 100,000 flight attendants make it their mission to ensure the safety of passengers that rely on them. In the war on terrorism, they can be compared to ground soldiers. They are our front line of defense. Not only did flight attendants display acts of heroism on September 11, but they also have repeatedly reacted courageously to thwart acts of terrorism on American aircraft.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to acknowledge the heroism and bravery of flight attendants. After September 11, when many were afraid to return to the air, these courageous workers devotedly returned to their jobs. I admire their sense of dedication and professional attitude. I urge my colleagues to support this very, very appropriate resolution.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of West Virginians and Americans as a whole, I want to express our deep appreciation for the flight attendants who provide outstanding service while ensuring public safety for thousands of Americans on a daily basis. In addition, I want to commend our Nation's flight attendants for their acts of heroism. A considerable number of them demonstrated their great courage during the September 11th attacks that occurred almost exactly one year ago today.

It should not be overlooked that in the days, weeks, and months following that terrible day, America's flight attendants bravely resumed their duties serving our flying public. This contribution aided the almost immediate restoration of air service, and it provides a profound demonstration of this country's refusal to let the terrorists win. Our flight attendants, and by extension, all of us would not allow a few evildoers to destroy our daily activities and our unique way of life.

As we approach the anniversary of September 11th, we must remember the contributions of this group of individuals who have so ably demonstrated their importance to this country and to its citizens. They stand as an example for the brave efforts of all hard-working Americans as we cope with the events and the aftermath of that infamous day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, a great many things changed on September 11, 2001. Among them, Americans began thinking differently about air travel, and we all gained a greater respect for those who are pledged to guarantee our safety as we fly.

For its part, Congress has moved to make air travel safer, and I have not doubt we will do more. But one of the main lines of defense against events in the air rests with the pilots and flight crews.

The professionalism, courage and common sense exhibited by these individuals is clearly exemplified in the actions of Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney, who was a flight attend aboard American Airlines Flight 11 on September 11. That was the first aircraft to crash into the World Trade Center.

Showing courage under pressure, Amy was one of the first individuals to use a cell phone and notify the world of the hijackings that were underway. Her last acts of bravery were critically important in identifying and exposing those terrorists who threatened our lives, our country and our values.

Ms. Sweeney is a true American hero. She was many things to many wonderful people, a faithful wife, a loving mother, and a devoted daughter. But she will be remembered by most Americans for her extraordinary heroism and devotion to duty on a fateful day.

Consider this—those who hijacked American Airlines Flight 11, had years of training and preparation for their terrible mission. They had plenty of time to consider what they were going to do. But for Amy, the decisions of a lifetime were compressed into a few terrible minutes. Yet she responded with tremendous courage, calmness and common sense. She did her duty in the face of death. And at the last moment, she called out to God for salvation.

I had the honor earlier this year to attend a ceremony in Massachusetts where she became the first individual to be awarded the "Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney Award for Civilian Bravery." It is in recognition of Amy Todd Sweeney's heroism and courageous spirit that this award was created.

Future recipients—awarded annually on the anniversary of her death—must demonstrate exceptional bravery, without regard for personal safety, in an effort to save the life or lives of another or others in actual or imminent danger. It is a fitting tribute to her conduct that this award has been established. There can be little doubt that many people are alive today because of her quick thinking and her heroism. Her actions remind us that courage is rightly esteemed as the first of human qualities because it is the quality that guarantees all others.

And we should remember that courage does not mean an absence of fear, because without fear there can be no courage. Courage is doing the thing you think you cannot do.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to enter into the RECORD a recent article from the New London Day entitled, "A Hero On Flight 11, She Put Her Job First: Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney."

May God bless and keep you, Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney, and may God bless America.

A HERO ON FLIGHT 11, SHE PUT HER JOB
FIRST: MADELINE AMY TODD SWEENEY

9-11: THE SHADOW OF A DAY

(By Bethé Defresne)

Once the extended family of Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney verified that she was aboard the flight, there was no waiting for a miracle. There was no use praying that the blond, blue-eyed young mother with the dazzling smile had been caught in some pocket of hope within the ashes of the World Trade Center, and that somehow she would rise up and come home to them.

Relatives and friends of victims who worked in the towers would spend days or even weeks holding off the inevitable. But for Sweeney's loved ones, there was only the swift, burning onslaught of grief.

She was a flight attendant on American Airlines Flight 11, the plane that hit the north tower at 8:48 a.m. on Sept. 11, when the world still thought it must have been some terrible accident.

Sweeney's colleagues in air control back at Logan International Airport in Boston, where the flight had taken off that morning bound for Los Angeles, were among the few who knew better—because she had told them.

Calmly, and with painstaking attention to detail, Sweeney had explained that the plane was being hijacked. What she said would later help federal investigators reconstruct how the plane was taken over.

Sweeney reported the seat numbers of the hijackers, including suspected ringleader Mohamed Atta, and the progress of their assault. She described the landscape below after the flight was diverted, right up until the shocking end.

Her last words were, "I see water and building. Oh my God! Oh my God!"

Sweeney's father, William A. Todd of Norwich, expects that some day he'll listen to a tape of conversations from the airplane. But he's not ready.

This Sept. 11, Todd will be in Boston, the point of Sweeney's departure, not New York, the site of her tragic end, to mark the anniversary of the terrorist attacks. There he will witness the presentation of the second annual Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney Award for Civilian Bravery, posthumously presented to her in February with her family in attendance.

Sweeney lived in Acton, Mass., with her husband, Michael, and their two children, Anna, 6, and Jack, 5. The award, in the form of a medallion, is to be given each year to a Massachusetts resident who exemplifies the courage that Sweeney displayed.

Her reports from the doomed airplane have been credited with helping officials make the crucial decision to ground all airplanes on Sept. 11, perhaps saving many lives.

It's good, Todd acknowledged, to have something to do and somewhere to go on this grim anniversary. And he really didn't want to be in New York.

"It's too much," he says.

Mike Sweeney, who could not be reached, is reportedly coping as best he can, and also plans to be at the presentation in Boston on Wednesday.

Reflecting today on what enabled his 35-year-old daughter to show such remarkable strength under intense pressure, Todd draws upon an apt and familiar analogy, that of a soldier in battle. As an Army war veteran who saw combat in Korea, Todd, 65, says his daughter was doing what she was trained to do in a situation like that: focus not on yourself, but on your job.

Todd treasures an American flag carried in Sweeney's honor aboard an F-16CG Falcon during a Jan. 26 combat mission over Afghanistan. The flag was sent to him along with a citation from the 332nd Air Expedition Group, called "The Tip of the Spear," certifying that the flag was carried "In Memory of the Grace and Bravery of Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney, who lost her life to a terrorist attack on the WTC while serving on American Airlines Flight 11 on Sept. 11, 2001."

Todd hasn't decided yet where to display the flag, which he handles reverently, like a flag that has been draped over a soldier's coffin. It was a nephew in the Air Force, Patrick Todd, who arranged through his commanding officer to have the flag carried and delivered.

Sweeney came from a large extended family, with numerous aunts, uncles and cousins. She reveled in those myriad relationships, said Todd, and will be especially missed at the Sept. 28 wedding of her brother, William Todd III, who lives in Massachusetts. He was her only sibling.

Sitting at the kitchen table in his home on Corning Road, Todd, who retired after 15 years as a welder at Electric Boat in Groton, appears to take some comfort in thinking about the lasting impression his daughter's life has made on others. But he is not a man given to displaying an excess of emotion.

"What can you say?" he asks. "Not a day goes by that I don't think of her."

Tears well up in his tired eyes, but he won't let them go. His wife of 23 years, Doris, is more talkative and openly emotional. Sweeney was like a daughter to her, she says, although they only got together on visits, mostly during the summer. Todd and his first wife divorced when Sweeney was 10, and she continued to live with her mother in Nashua, N.H.

It's not very difficult for family members to imagine what Sweeney, whom everyone called Amy, would have been doing this past year had she not been among the 3,008 victims of Sept. 11. She would have continued to love being a wife and mother, kept in close touch with her large circle of friends and family, and, of course, kept on flying.

The 12-year veteran of American Airlines was at a point in life where, it seems, she had everything she wanted. "She loved to fly, and she loved to travel," says Todd. She especially relished trips to the Caribbean.

The flight to Los Angeles was also one of her favorites, Todd says, because she got a layover in California.

After Sweeney graduated from high school, before she married and went to flight attendant school, she took a year off to live and travel in California, says Todd. This was her one real fling with being totally carefree.

But shouldering responsibility was something Sweeney apparently did willingly, with a modest touch that endeared her to family, friends and colleagues, as well as passengers.

She was "a natural at being a flight attendant" wrote one of her peers in a tribute booklet put out by American Airlines and given to all the families of those who died on Flight 11. She was a genuine people person, it was said, always the first to volunteer when help was needed.

In her heroic death, Sweeney is forever linked with one colleague in particular, fellow flight attendant Betty Ong. The two women worked as a team to alert ground officials about what was happening.

The Todds have a tape of a Prime Time TV segment on the two women, hosted by Diane Sawyer. Sweeney's husband, Mike, is featured along with several members of Ong's family. So, too, are home videos of Sweeney playing and singing with her children.

But most of the program is devoted to what happened on Flight 11.

Doris Todd cries softly, and her husband sits stoically upright in his chair, as a Logan flight manager who got the first call recounts his conversations with Sweeney.

"Amy, honey," he began, "what's going on?" Everything after that was dark—throats slashed, orders from hijackers—but Sweeney remained purposeful and calm through it all.

The Todds find this tape difficult to watch, but say they've looked at it several times. During the program, the Ong family reports that a bone and a flesh fragment from Betty Ong were recovered from the WTC site.

"Nothing was found of Amy," says Todd, not even a bit of DNA. But this is not something to dwell on, he says. He'd rather hold the flag that was carried over a battlefield in her honor, or point out the sign in her memory attached to his truck, the one he drove in the June parade for A Reason to Ride, an organization that raises funds for disabled and homeless veterans.

There's been talk, Todd says, that Sweeney and some other Sept. 11 heroes might be posthumously awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom. U.S. Rep. Rob Simmons, R-2nd District, and Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts are among those who have proposed Sweeney for the prestigious award.

The Todds haven't gotten involved in the debate over what kind of memorial should be erected at Ground Zero, but they do have two thoughts on the subject. "It should be tall," they say. "And it should have all the names, like the Vietnam War Memorial."

Sweeney didn't have enough information in that early hour of Sept. 11 to go on the offensive, like the crew and passengers of United Flight 93, forced down in a field in Pennsylvania. But she died in service to her passengers and, it turned out, to her country.

It's almost impossible to find a source of gratitude in the horror of Sept. 11. But the Todds say they're at least glad to know that almost to the last moment Madeline Amy Todd Sweeney was not living in terror, but helping others.

RECOGNIZING THE AMERICAN ROAD AND TRANSPORTATION BUILDERS ASSOCIATION FOR REACHING ITS 100TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 442) recognizing the American Road and Transportation Builders Association for reaching its 100th Anniversary and for the many vital contributions of its members in the transportation construction industry to the American economy and quality of life through the multi-modal transportation infrastructure network its members have designed, built, and managed over the past century.

H. CON. RES. 442

Whereas, founded in 1902 by Horatio Sawyer Earle, a visionary Michigan public official, the American Road and Transportation Builders Association is the Nation's oldest national association exclusively representing the transportation construction industry;

Whereas, for a century, the American Road and Transportation Builders Association has successfully advocated for strong Federal investment in transportation infrastructure, highlighted by the world's greatest road network, the Dwight David Eisenhower System of Interstate and Defense Highways;

Whereas the transportation construction industry that the American Road and Transportation Builders Association represents works to constantly improve America's transportation network, including our Nation's roads, bridges, airports, mass transit systems, ports, and waterways that are the foundation on which the Nation's economy stands and grows;

Whereas the American Road and Transportation Builders Association incorporates educational, research, and charitable efforts to advance the transportation construction industry, improve transportation education, maintain the highest industry standards of excellence, and ensure the public health, safety, and welfare; and

Whereas the multi-modal transportation infrastructure network that American Road and Transportation Association members have designed, built, and managed over the past century, in partnership with government at all levels, has made America's economy the envy of the world and provided the American people with an unmatched quality of life: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress—

(1) acknowledges the American Road and Transportation Builders Association for its 100th Anniversary;

(2) commends the many achievements of the transportation construction industry; and

(3) encourages the American Road and Transportation Builders Association to continue its tradition of excellence in service to the transportation construction industry and to the public.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CUMMINGS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI).

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the American Road and Transportation Builders Association is the Nation's oldest national association exclusively representing the transportation construction industry. I have worked with ARTBA on many legislative issues, and they have played and will continue to play a large role in the development of our country's transportation infrastructure.

Founded by Horatio Earle, ARTBA has consistently advocated a strong Federal investment in our transportation network and has played an integral role in the development of the Dwight David Eisenhower System of Interstate and Defense Highways, known as our interstate system.

Under the leadership of ARTBA, the transportation construction industry maintains the highest standards of excellence to ensure the public safety and welfare of those traveling throughout these United States.

I look forward to working with ARTBA as Congress moves forward with reauthorization of TEA 21 next year. I urge the Congress to join me in commending ARTBA and its members for their 100 years of service to the construction industry and the important work they do every day in building America.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI) for moving forward with H. Con. Res. 442, to recognize the 100th anniversary of the American Road and Transportation Builders Association, also known as ARTBA.

For more than a century, ARTBA has carried forth the visionary efforts of its founder, Horatio S. Earle. The legacy of this organization rests firmly on the guiding principles of its founder to improve the Nation's transportation system. Horatio Earle advocated an interstate system to link the Nation's capital with every State capital throughout the Nation. Mr. Earle's vision was realized with the creation of the Highway Trust Fund to provide funding for the construction of the Nation's highway interstate highway system.

From its inception, ARTBA has advocated strong Federal investment in the Nation's transportation infrastructure, to meet the public demand for safe and efficient travel and shipment of goods. ARTBA has led the efforts to increase the level of funding for transportation and infrastructure improvements. Through its leadership, perseverance, and skills of its organization, ARTBA has established a legacy that has helped to strengthen the American economy.

Today, ARTBA represents an industry that generates more than $200 billion in United States economic activity annually and sustains the employment of 2.2 million Americans.

Mr. Speaker, it is a high honor to recognize ARTBA for its 100 years of continuing support for the Nation's transportation. As the Congress moves forward with legislation to reauthorize the surface transportation programs, I look forward to working with ARTBA to assist in building a national transportation system that will continue to serve this great Nation.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, as a co-sponsor of House Concurrent Resolution 442, which recognizes the American Road and Transportation Builders 100th Anniversary, ARTBA, I want to publicly commend our Nation's oldest association exclusively representing the transportation construction industry. For a full century, ARTBA has been a strong and successful advocate for federal investment in transportation infrastructure. As the legislation notes, the construction and upkeep of our Nation's roads, bridges, airports, mass transit systems, ports and waterways are the foundation on which America's economy stands and grows. Our transportation network also allows Americans to pursue their constitutional Right to Travel. On behalf of West Virginia, I suggest that as many Americans as possible should exercise their Right to Travel by using available transportation opportunities in order to come to our fine state where they can visit its cities, towns, and scenic vistas.

Transportation construction has been vital to West Virginia's improving industrial and communications networks. This, in turn, creates greater job and education opportunities. Recent flood control and community restoration efforts were also made possible by the ability to utilize multiple transportation modes. In addition, transportation construction has greatly improved West Virginians' daily access to much-needed health care services, retirement benefit providers, and the like.

Further, as President Dwight Eisenhower clearly understood, our Nation's transportation network provides a critical infrastructure element for national security. In the immediate wake of the September 11th attacks, the strength of our Nation's transportation networks enabled emergency responders from various different areas to get to the crisis areas in New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania in the most expeditious manner possible. Employing this quick response ability aided our nation in providing much-needed assistance and in coordinating the subsequent recovery efforts. ARTBA's long-standing contributions which enabled such quick response following September 11th, deserve recognition as the association celebrates this milestone.

Our Nation owes a clear debt of gratitude and commendation to the ARTBA for their continuing efforts, which have contributed to this country's great infrastructure strength.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 442.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 5157, H. Con. Res. 402, and H. Con. Res. 442.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

CONGRATULATING THE VALLEY SPORTS AMERICAN LITTLE LEAGUE BASEBALL TEAM FROM LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, FOR THEIR OUTSTANDING PERFORMANCE IN THE LITTLE LEAGUE WORLD SERIES

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 516) congratulating the Valley Sports American Little League baseball team from Louisville, Kentucky, for their outstanding performance in the Little League World Series.

H. RES. 516

Whereas the Valley Sports American Little League baseball team from Louisville, Kentucky, is the first team from the United States to win the Little League World Series since 1998;

Whereas the Louisville team is the first team from Kentucky to ever reach the title game of the Little League World Series in the 56-year history of the Little League Junior Division championship;

Whereas the Louisville team has attained a select position as one of only 10 United States teams to win the Little League World Series in the last 35 years;

Whereas the members of the Louisville team demonstrated perseverance that rivals that of any adult, with a season that started in June and required winning both State and regional championships to reach the World Series;

Whereas throughout their season, the Louisville team scored 106 runs, while allowing their competition to score only 10 runs;

Whereas the Louisville team played expertly against a determined and talented Japanese team for the Little League World Series title;

Whereas the Louisville team broke multiple Little League World Series records through a single pitcher achieving 44 strikeouts and 21 scoreless innings;

Whereas the 12 players on the Louisville team are a model to the Nation's youth because of their dedication, determination, and sportsmanship;

Whereas in the legacy of world-renowned Louisville Slugger bats and Hall-of-Fame members Jim Bunning, Happy Chandler, Earl Combs, and Pee Wee Reese, the Louisville team has continued a long tradition of Kentucky contributions to the game of baseball;

Whereas the Louisville team's performance demonstrates to parents and communities throughout the Nation how athletic participation builds character and leadership in children; and

Whereas the Louisville team's spirit and camaraderie and the support of the team's family members are a testimony to baseball's ability to bring families together: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) congratulates the Valley Sports American Little League baseball team from Louisville, Kentucky, for their outstanding performance in winning the 2002 Little League World Series;

(2) recognizes Troy Osborne, the manager of the Louisville team, assistant coaches Keith Elkins and Dan Roach, and players Aaron Alvey, Justin Elkins, Ethan Henry, Alex Hornback, Wesley Jenkins, Casey Jordan, Shane Logsdon, Blaine Madden, Zachary Osborne, Jacob Remines, Josh Robinson, and Wes Walden for demonstrating excellence and character throughout a summer of little league baseball; and

(3) commends Little League Baseball for its 63-year tradition of encouraging the development of sportsmanship and confidence in youth through its sponsorship of world-class baseball.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 516.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution extends heartfelt congratulations from the House of Representatives to the Valley Sports American Little League baseball team from Louisville, Kentucky, for winning the Little League World Series.

On August 25, 2002, the Valley Sports American Little League team won the 56th Little League Baseball World Series title by defeating the team from Sendai, Japan 1-0.

Mr. Speaker, the Valley Sports American Little League team is the first team from the United States to win the Little League World Series since 1998. The following is a description of the team from Louisville, Kentucky, as described by Little League Baseball:

"They may not have been the most talented team in the tournament. They may not have been the biggest or the strongest 11- and 12-year-olds in Williamsport during the last 9 days; but they had worked the hardest, dedicated themselves in ways others could not, and now the Valley Sports American Little Leaguers from Louisville, Kentucky, are the best in the world."

Coaches and players alike have achieved something very few have. This is an accomplishment that will be with them for the rest of their lives, and it is in the finest tradition of Kentucky baseball.

Perhaps one of these days one of these young players will follow Kentucky's Hall of Famer, Jim Bunning, and serve in the House and the U.S. Senate. But I am sure that they will all be a credit to their country, to Kentucky, to Louisville, and to their families. They have started out well.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that the House recognize the dedicated work and outstanding accomplishments of Valley Sports American Little League Baseball team from Louisville, Kentucky. The Louisville team's performance demonstrates to parents and communities throughout the Nation how athletic participation builds character and leadership in their children.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all Members to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Valley Sports American Little League team from Louisville, Kentucky, captured their city's and the Nation's attention with the 1-0 victory over Sendai, Japan, in the Little League World Series title game last month.

Valley Sports, which won the national championship game against Worcester, Massachusetts, became the first U.S. team to win the World Series since East Toms River, New Jersey, in 1998.

When the team held its first practice on June 16, they had not yet developed their trademark, which became pitching and defense. This came with hard work and determination. During the first few days, the team looked nothing like the one that would win the Little League World Series. The basemen had difficulty catching; and, of course, nobody could make a great throw. But the coaches figured the only way to get better was through hard work. The team routinely held 5-hour practices on week days and sometimes as much as 8 hours on weekends. Defense was constantly being reinforced and it paid off.

Japanese teams had won two of the previous three World Series titles; but the Valley Sports team used their recipe for success, pitching, defense and discipline, to win the big game. The coaches, Troy Osborne, Keith Elkins, and Dan Roach demanded discipline on and off the field. The team was required to answer "yes, sir" or "no, ma'am" when addressing adults. Does that not sound interesting? They were expected to conduct themselves properly with no showboating allowed. The team got better and better with every game.

In a little more than 2 months, 12 young boys used their free time to dedicate themselves to our national pastime, baseball. Team work, commitment, dedication and discipline and a positive attitude transformed the Valley Sports Little League team into a national and international championship team.

We always place a premium on winning. But I think that when we have great little league programs with the active involvement and participation of parents and other adult volunteers, every child, every young person perhaps is a winner. And not only is this an opportunity to salute the Valley Sports Little League team, but it is also an opportunity to salute all of those parents and volunteers and coaches and young people throughout America who engage and involve themselves in disciplined activity that is designed to develop men, in many instances, and women, out of boys and girls.

I also take this opportunity to salute those Little League teams in my own community, Dwayne Truss and Cata Truss who developed the Mandela Little League; and of course everybody in my city of Chicago knows about the Jackie Robinson West Little League and the Southeast Little League and the North Lawndale Little League Baseball teams.

So it is a great day for Little League activity. It is a great day for young people being engaged, involved, disciplined with adult supervision. That, Mr. Speaker, is what I think will keep young people off the streets, will keep young people from ending up in correctional institutions, and will help America continue to grow and become the Nation that it really has the potential of being.

So I join in giving all of the accolades that we can muster to the Valley Sports Little League team, who became not only the best in their city, the best in their country, but the best internationally. We honor them as we honor America.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleague from Illinois in commending all of the little league teams around the country. As a former little league team mom, and my husband being a little league manager for many many years with our two sons, it is a great pastime. It is a great opportunity for our young boys and girls to participate in little league. I would like to commend my colleague, the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP), for introducing this legislation to commend our little leaguers from Kentucky and to salute all of our little leaguers around the United States and the world.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 516.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

PETER J. GANCI, JR. POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5336) to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 380 Main Street in Farmingdale, New York, as the "Peter J. Ganci, Jr. Post Office Building."

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5336

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PETER J. GANCI POST OFFICE BUILDING.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 380 Main Street in Farmingdale, New York, shall be known and designated as the "Peter J. Ganci, Jr. Post Office Building".

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the Peter J. Ganci, Jr. Post Office Building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5336, introduced by our distinguished colleague from New York (Mr. KING), designates a post office in Farmingdale, New York, as the Peter J. Ganci, Jr., Post Office Building. Members of the entire House delegation from the State of New York are cosponsors of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, immediately after a jet struck the first tower at the World Trade Center, Peter Ganci, chief of department for the New York City Fire Department, rushed to the scene from his command post in downtown Brooklyn and started the rescue effort.

He was in the basement of Tower One when it collapsed. Miraculously, he survived, dug himself out of the rubble and went back to work.

It then became apparent that the second tower would fall. Ganci, as the highest ranking uniformed officer on the scene, directed everyone to clear out of the area, but Ganci did not himself leave while his men were inside the tower. Ganci said, "I'm not leaving my men," and advanced toward the towers to continue his life's work of saving and protecting others.

Chief Ganci was in the basement of the second tower when it collapsed.

Prior to joining the New York City Fire Department, Ganci served in the Farmingdale Fire Department as a volunteer and in the 82nd Airborne Division. Ganci served in the New York City Fire Department for 33 years and was decorated repeatedly for bravery.

Ganci is survived by his wife, Kathleen; his sons, Christopher and Peter; and his daughter, Danielle. His son, Peter Ganci, III, now serves with Ladder Company 111 of the New York City Fire Department.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 5336.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

As a member of the House Committee on Government Reform, I am pleased to join my colleague today in the consideration of two postal naming bills: H.R. 5336, introduced by the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING), which names a post office in Farmingdale, New York, after Peter Ganci; and H.R. 4797, introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), which names a post office in Los Angeles, California, after Nat King Cole. These measures have the support of their respective State congressional delegations to name United States postal facilities after very deserving individuals, and I urge their swift passage.

H.R. 5336, to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 380 Main Street in Farmingdale, New York, as the Peter J. Ganci, Jr., Post Office Building, was introduced by the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING) on September 5, 2002.

An American hero, Peter J. Ganci was the New York City Fire Department's highest ranking chief who died when the World Trade Center came down. Chief Ganci had been on the radio in front of the trade center directing the rescue efforts when the building collapsed.

Who was Chief Ganci? He was 54-years-old and a resident of Massapequa, New York; the chief of the department, one of the highest ranking uniformed officers in the fire department; husband to Kathleen; father to Peter, III, Christopher and Danielle. He was also a 33-year-old veteran of the New York City Fire Department, whose son Peter is a firefighter assigned to Ladder Company 111 in Brooklyn, New York, and Brooklyn, New York, is the place where Peter Ganci got his start in 1960.

After serving in engine and ladder companies, Mr. Ganci rose to lieutenant, captain, battalion chief, deputy chief and then acting chief. He also ran the Bureau of Fire Investigation, was appointed the chief of operations prior to becoming chief of the department.

A hands-on man, Chief Ganci was doing his job, commanding the rescue operations at the New York World Trade Center.

Accordingly, I urge swift passage of this bill and commend my colleague for seeking to honor Chief Peter J. Ganci, Jr., in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that we have any other requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield as much time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING), the author of this legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to rise today in support of this legislation. Pete Ganci was a constituent of mine. He was an individual who personified the leadership and the bravery which resulted last September 11 in the greatest rescue operation in the history of this country.

Twenty-five thousand people were rescued that day, and it was done primarily through the efforts of the New York City Fire Department, and Chief Pete Ganci was the chief of the department, who was also the highest ranking uniformed officer ever to die in the line of duty, and as the gentlewoman pointed out, Chief Ganci was there that day with his men. Chief Ganci was there in the line of duty.

Chief Ganci was there directing the operation against this horrific attack that was carried out against our country, and when the first tower fell, Chief Ganci barely escaped with his life, and when he saw the terrible carnage that resulted and saw the terrible danger which was still being faced by the north tower, which had not yet fallen, Chief Ganci ordered the entire operation to be moved north.

As the entire operation, including the mayor and other officials, went north, Pete Ganci went south to be with his men, and that personified the type of leadership which Pete Ganci gave in the New York City Fire Department. As the gentlewoman pointed out, he had been a member of the department more than 33 years, rising to the highest office in that department, chief of the department. Prior to that, he had been a paratrooper in the 82nd Airborne, and until his death, he was an active member of the Farmingdale Volunteer Fire Department in New York.

Mr. Speaker, at this point also, before I digress, though, I want to pay a special debt of thanks to Sal Pontillo, the Nassau County legislator who represents the district in which Mr. Ganci lived in Nassau County, and he has come to me with this request. We have worked closely on it, and he has also served as liaison with the Ganci family and helped to bring this about.

Mr. Speaker, many of us look back on the date of September 11 and we realize what a turning point it was in the history of our country. It was a turning point for many reasons. The point I would like to focus on today is that after that attack, actually as the attack was going on, as the buildings were burning, as the buildings were coming down, as people were being killed, as people were being rescued, what the eyes of the world and the eyes of the country saw was the valor of the New York City firefighters and police officers, those who were carrying out this rescue operation under the most trying circumstances, and the person who was leading that operation was Chief Ganci. Just think what would have happened if he had not done what he did, if the firefighters had not responded the way they did, instead of running into the building, Chief Ganci had run out of the building and kept going, but instead he went back right in the line of fire, the battlefield commander who died with his men, and it was that type of courage that was shown that day, that type of heroism that was shown that day, that type of spirit that was shown that day which I think has inspired our country to fight back, to come back and to win this war against international terrorism, and even just as importantly, to show that America cannot be vanquished, that we can take the best shot of the enemy and come back stronger than ever.

That is what Chief Ganci personified that day. In fact, it is the type of story, that if somebody had produced a movie about it, it would not have been believed, for a person to be there when the first tower came down and somehow survive it and go back in and to be killed in the second tower, which to me is the type of courage that I cannot even begin to fathom.

This was the first battle, Mr. Speaker, and the first great war of the 21st century, and Chief Ganci died as a battlefield commander in that war, and for that, this country owes him its untiring thanks and gratitude for all that he has done.

I want to say a special debt of thanks to his wife, Kathy, who has shown tremendous courage throughout this entire almost now 363 days, and his son, Pete, who is a member of the New York City Fire Department, his son, Chris, and his daughter, Danielle.

I also want to thank the other 30 members of the New York delegation for unanimously supporting this resolution. To me, it is just another indication of the tremendous regard that all the men and women of the New York City Fire Department had for Chief Ganci and, indeed, all of the members of the New York delegation, everyone who had the opportunity to know Chief Ganci.

I can say I was at his funeral last September 15. It was one of the most moving moments I have ever been involved in, to see the tremendous outpouring of support from his community in North Massapequa and Farmingdale, all of the surrounding community, by the thousands, coming out to join in this salute to Chief Pete Ganci.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me the time. I thank the House for considering this resolution today, and I extend my very best thoughts, prayers and gratitude to the Ganci family for all they have gone through.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank my colleague for introducing this legislation to honor the chief of the New York City Fire Department. As the wife of a professional firefighter for almost 30 years, I know the bravery that these firefighters have, and I have had people tell me why they let chiefs send men in there to their deaths, and I have told them quite clearly, if he would not have sent them in, I know the firefighters would have gone in, anyway. That is just the type of bravery they do have, and again, I thank my colleagues, and I urge adoption of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5336.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 4797, introduced by the gentleman from the State of California (Mr. BECERRA), designates the post office located at 265 South Western Avenue, Los Angeles, California, as the Nat King Cole Post Office. Members of the entire delegation from the State of California are cosponsors of the bill.

Nat King Cole was truly one of the most unforgettable entertainers in our Nation's history. Born in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1919, Nat King Cole was a musical pioneer that helped to pave the way for countless black musicians to achieve success in the United States. Most widely known for his music as a pop ballad singer and jazz pianist, Nat was also the first African American man to have his own radio show, which began in 1946. Ten years later he was the first African American to host his own television show, and it was enormously popular as well.

Although his life was sadly cut short in 1965, his legacy has lived on in part because of the great success of his daughter, Natalie, who has revived much of Nat King Cole's music by singing many of his songs in recent years.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to honor Nat King Cole by supporting this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

H.R. 4797, to redesignate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 265 South Western Avenue, Los Angeles, California, as the Nat King Cole Post Office, was introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), on May 22, 2002.

Nat King Cole was born Nathaniel Adams Coles in 1919 in Montgomery, Alabama. He moved to the great jazz city of Chicago when he was four because his father, a Baptist minister, had accepted pastorship of the True Light Baptist Church.

In Chicago, Nat King Cole's mother, Perlina, directed the choir at her husband's church and introduced all the Coles children, Edward, Nathaniel, Eddie Mae, Evelynne, Issac and Lionel, to music early on. All four of the Coles sons went on to become professional musicians.

Nat's singing career began early. He was just four when he performed, "Yes, We Have No Bananas." He went on to take piano lessons and play the organ in his father's church. While attending Wendell Phillips High School in Chicago which, of course, is in my congressional district, Nat and his brothers became true believers of jazz music and constant fixtures on Chicago's South Side, the center of jazz.

Growing up, he was most influenced by pianist Earl "Fatha" Hines. After organizing and playing in a series of music groups, Nat "King" Cole moved to Los Angeles, where he formed the group which later became the King Cole Trio. He recorded his first National hit, Straighten Up and Fly Right, and went on to record such favorites as The Christmas Song, Mona Lisa, Route 66, Chestnuts Roasting on an Open Fire, Rambling Rose, and many more.

Not only a talented singer, he was also the first black jazz musician to have his own weekly radio show in 1948 and 1949 and network television show in 1956 and 1957. He was also an actor in St. Louis Blues, 1958, and Cat Ballou in 1964.

Although a great man with a fantastic voice, Nat "King" Cole was not immune to discrimination. His television show was canceled because he could not find a national sponsor. Being black was seen by many as the reason for the lack of advertising. When he moved to an exclusive section of Los Angeles in 1949, neighbors formed an association to keep him from moving in. In 1956, while playing to a segregated audience in Birmingham, Alabama, he was attacked by a group of white men. After completing his performance, Nat "King" Cole vowed never to return to the South, and he never did.

In 1965, after battling an advanced case of lung cancer, Nat "King" Cole died on February 15 at Saint John's Hospital in Santa Monica, California.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge swift passage of this bill and commend my colleague from California for seeking to honor the legacy of the late Nat "King" Cole in this manner.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Los Angeles, California (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois, someone who represents the area where Mr. Cole lived for a time, for yielding me this time. I also would like to thank the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), and the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS) as well for this opportunity to bring forward a tribute to an individual who will go down in the annals of America as not just a grand entertainer but a decent and loving American.

I want to extend my thanks to my colleagues from California, the 54 Members of the California delegation, which includes our two Senators, for their support of the Cole family in this effort to give Nat "King" Cole the recognition in this small way that he so deserves from this country. I would also like to thank the many other Members who signed onto this legislation as original cosponsors, many from the Congressional Black Caucus and other colleagues who recognized that it was fitting to pay tribute to this individual.

Mr. Speaker, Nat "King" Cole is but a legend in America, but in our hearts he is someone who was able to touch us. H.R. 4797 is but a small token of appreciation that will forever give memory to his work and his love of this country. On South Western Avenue in Los Angeles, California, at the site of 265 South Western Avenue, those who happen to cross that busy street will have an opportunity to see the name of Nat "King" Cole, and, hopefully, they will appreciate what it takes to have one's name on the marquis of a post office, a building owned and operated by the people of this government and of this Nation.

I cannot, however, nor can my colleagues, be the only ones to take credit for this opportunity to fete Nat "King" Cole. The fact that we are designating this post office after a legend is truly due to the people who live in and around the area of 265 South Western Avenue, because it is the folks who live in the community that surround this area who chose Nat "King" Cole as the person to pay tribute to and to name this post office after. I want to thank all of them for having stepped forward and in a very democratic process and deciding that it was best and most fitting to name this post office after a former resident of the area, and certainly a man that we will all remember.

As my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), had said, Nat "King" Cole remains an icon as one of America's most beloved entertainers, even 37 years after his untimely death in 1965. His story is one of determination, courage and resilience. We recognize him today as one of the pioneers who left his mark in an industry that is now part of the fabric of Los Angeles. But his impression on our city and this Nation goes far beyond that.

Nat "King" Cole was born Nathaniel Adams Coles in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1919 during that very regrettable period of segregation in this country. At the age of 4, Nat's father moved the Coles family, and it is Coles with an "s," to Chicago, where his father accepted the pastorate of the True Light Baptist Church. Nat spent his childhood in the ghettos of the South Side of Chicago. But while Nat did not have the means to dream, he certainly had the capacity to do so, and, ultimately, live out those dreams.

Perlina Coles, Nat's mother, directed the choir at the True Light Baptist Church, and she is the one that introduced the Coles children to music early on. Nat's musical talents exhibited themselves at a very, very young age. His first public performance was at the age of 4 in Chicago's Regal Theater. As a youngster, Nat would sing and play the organ at his father's church. His mother wanted Nat to become a classical pianist, but Nat's passion was jazz.

Chicago was just the place to be for Nat "King" Cole to satisfy those tastes for jazz music. The city, at the time, hosted jazz talents like Louis Armstrong, Fats Waller, Earl Hines. And we should all recognize that not long ago, this past week, we lost Mr. Lionel Hampton, another great of American entertainment and art and a great jazz artist in his own right.

Nat and his brother Eddie would go off as often as they could to hear jazz musicians play and to perform in Chicago's South Side, which was the African American community's center for jazz action in the 1930s. Even when Nat could not afford the price of admission, he would stand at the alley and listen right next to the stage door.

During his teenage years, Nat "King" Cole was involved with several musical groups. He loved to perform and to share his music with others. In 1937, Nat and Eddie joined a revival of the review "Shuffle Along." The show took the road after 6 weeks in Chicago. When the show suddenly folded, Nat found himself in Southern California, and that is where he decided to stay. This was the beginning of his life in the Los Angeles area, and we are all fortunate for his impression on Southern California.

In the late 1930s, Nat "King" Cole was asked to form a small group to play at a Los Angeles nightclub. It was the owner of this nightclub, Mr. Bob Lewis, who gave Nat his new renowned nickname of "King" Cole, and he asked Nat to wear a crown of gold on stage. In fact, the group became known as the King Cole Trio, and it was led by Nat. While the gold-colored paper crown did not last, the name and its significance endures to this day.

Many legends of entertainment got their break in Los Angeles and in Southern California, and that area proved to be fertile ground for Nat "King" Cole as well. The King Cole Trio developed a huge following. They found almost constant work in the Los Angeles area. And by the way, prior to booking the King Cole Trio, many of these nightclubs had never hired African American entertainers before. This trio went on to make some of their own recordings on what was known as the "race record" market, which is what made it possible for Nat "King" Cole to do the recordings. Because, remember, those were days when it was very difficult for talented men and women of African American descent to record and even to present their music and their talents before audiences.

Trio. The Trio's recording on that label of Straighten Up and Fly Right became a smash hit in 1944, and it appealed to not just black audiences but white audiences as well. Nat "King" Cole composed this song and based the lyrics on one of his father's sermons. The recording also brought jazz and popular music together. The other works of this Trio included For Sentimental Reasons and The Christmas Song, which emphasized Nat "King" Cole as a vocalist for the first time. Before that, Nat "King" Cole would sing only on occasion to add some flavor to the instrumental trio.

In fact, if you look back at history, Nat would say that he never thought of himself much as a vocalist. And while we find that very hard to believe, that is what he thought. And not just then, but he held that view of his singing abilities even after he had become one of this country's most recognized singers. In fact, one of the world's most recognized singers. All of us would have to disagree at least on that point in his assessment of his vocal abilities. Most would say his voice was "Unforgettable."

Nat "King" Cole indeed was a man with talents that could not be contained by any particular genre. He slowly moved away from jazz and towards popular music. In 1955, the King Cole Trio disbanded, but Nat "King" Cole continued to find success with songs like Too Young, Answer Me My Love, Mona Lisa and, of course, Unforgettable. Mr. Cole sold more than 50 million records. He contributed so much to the success of Capitol Records that its headquarters became known as the "House That Nat Built." His popularity would make him the first African American to have his own radio show and he would later also host his own TV shows.

However, Nat "King" Cole did not always have an easy road. He was not immune to the intolerance of the mid 20th Century. Indeed, as we look at his impressive songbook, we cannot forget the struggles he had to overcome as an African American performer during that period in our Nation's history. In October 1956, Nat "King" Cole was given his own television show by NBC. This show received good ratings but failed to receive sponsorship and it was taken off the air after only one year. Most believed that the primary lack of interest by advertisers was due to Nat "King" Cole's race.

But being taken off the air was not the only injustice Nat "King" Cole faced for being a successful black artist at the time. Nat faced physical intimidation and violence. In 1956, Nat returned to his native Alabama where his integrated group performed in front of a segregated audience in Birmingham. As a reaction, four members of the White Citizens Council attacked him on stage. But so determined was Nat

"King" Cole, that even though he was hurt, he returned to the stage and finished his show.

In Los Angeles, where we will honor him with a post office that carries his name, Nat was not immune to prejudice. When Nat and his family wanted to move into the exclusive Hancock Park section of Los Angeles, residents of the all-white community formed an association to keep him and his family out. But despite the threats, Nat "King" Cole purchased and moved into his English Tudor mansion in Hancock Park.

Nat "King" Cole exemplifies the American dream. He endured the racism of the time and overcame the poverty to which he was born and worked to be one of the most beloved American entertainers of our time. Thirty-seven years after his untimely death from lung cancer on February 15, 1965, his legacy lives on. Modern popular music entertainers like Celine Dion continue to record songs made famous by Nat "King" Cole.

With determination, courage, and resilience, Nat "King" Cole overcame tremendous obstacles to leave a lasting impression on music lovers of all ages and races. The Oakwood post office at 265 South Western Avenue in Los Angeles is Nat's post office. He lived within a few miles from the station and he is the pride of the community. I believe that this bill provides a fitting tribute to a man whose legacy is simply unforgettable.

To the many residents and friends and neighbors who made this possible today, and who will, when we have a chance to see President Bush sign this legislation into law, be present to commemorate this post office after Nat "King" Cole, I say, "Thank you so much for recognizing an American hero," and, "Thank you so much for helping us in the people's House recognize the accomplishments of great Americans."

Mr. Speaker, with great honor and deference, we recognize a man who will live far beyond our lifetime.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) for his introduction and certainly for the statement the gentleman has just shared with us.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATSON).

Ms. WATSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. And I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) for introducing this legislation.

I was just up in New York at the funeral for Lionel Hampton; and all of the way through, the talented performers would recall when they were all together, and Nat King Cole was part of that group. He was a man whose artistic talent was matched only by his efforts to break down the barriers that divided America from itself.

Nat King Cole had a gift of enormous musical talent. He did not like his singing voice; he thought it was not good enough so he thought he should play, but they talked him into singing while he was playing. He was known most for his singular voice, bringing alive such tunes as "Mona Lisa," "Rambling Rose," "The Christmas Song," and "Unforgettable." His daughter, Natalie Cole, would say that for many a year she mourned her father's death and did not have the courage to record with him until much later after his death; and the song "Unforgettable" truly will live forever. He was truly unforgettable.

But many experts considered his work as a pianist as his most significant contribution to American music. He was recognized among jazz musicians as one of the most formidable and technically proficient pianists of his day. His trio format influenced jazz pianist greats Ahmad Jamal and Art Tatum. In the 1940s, he played piano on recordings with jazz seminal jazz greats Lester Young and Charlie Parker.

In 1956, Cole debuted his own television show, which quickly became a major hit. Despite its success, many major advertisers refused to have commercials aired on it for fear that they would alienate the white population and, in particular, their Southern customers.

Nat King Cole first recorded with Decca Records, and later with Capitol Records. Sales of his albums brought Capitol unprecedented commercial success, and some have even labeled Capitol Records' famous circular building in Hollywood as "The House that Nat Built."

But Nat King Cole's contribution to American art was matched by his contribution to American society. Cole was a quiet, but consistent force for integration. During an age when many black artists were resigned to the reality of racial segregation, Cole refused to play in segregated clubs. In 1949 when Cole moved with his family to the exclusive Hancock Park neighborhood in Los Angeles, an area represented now by the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) and myself, Cole faced hostility from his new neighbors. Yet Cole stood his ground, and successfully integrated the neighborhood, which remains one of Los Angeles' most prestigious addresses. So I am proud to join the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) and the rest of my colleagues to rename a post office in the Hancock neighborhood after Nat King Cole. He is lovingly remembered as a great musical talent, but also as a great American.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF SPECIAL CEREMONIAL MEETING OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS HELD IN FEDERAL HALL, NEW YORK, NEW YORK, ON SEPTEMBER 6, 2002

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that proceedings of the special ceremonial meeting of the United States Congress held in Federal Hall, New York, New York, on September 6, 2002, be printed in the RECORD, and that all Members have 5 legislative days to insert their remarks on the topic of the ceremonial meeting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

COMMEMORATIVE JOINT MEETING OF THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE VICTIMS AND HEROES OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001, AND IN RECOGNITION OF THE COURAGE AND SPIRIT OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, FEDERAL HALL, NEW YORK, NY, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 2002

The SPEAKER. The special ceremonial meeting will be in order.

The invocation will be given by the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Chaplain of the House of Representatives, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following invocation:

Lord God, this is a day of history. Bless this exceptional joint meeting of the 107th Congress which commemorates the tragic events that occurred here last September 11. The gaping hole left in this city tore into the fabric of this Nation, but there was no greater suffering than in New York.

Once again, we commend to Your loving mercy, the victims, survivors, and their families. We also honor those public servants and ordinary citizens who joined professionals in healing wounds and rebuilding lives in this proud city of life and diversity.

Gathered in this historic place, You alone can renew us as You have in the past. May the vision of the Founding Fathers come alive again in this body politic to preserve the balance of power and assure the freedom of the law abiding people of this Nation.

The Bible here, used by George Washington when sworn in as President, speaks to Your consoling word: "I am with you."

Lord God, today is Rosh Hashanah. The traditional Jewish New Year prayer is for a good and sweet year. Many things You send us, Lord, are good, but they may hurt or are hurried. So with our Jewish brothers and sisters we pray today not only for a year of good things, but a year of sweetness, a chance to relish the blessings of the world and the freedoms You give us, and to enjoy the sweet kindness and love of one another.

May this be a good year for all Americans of all faiths, backgrounds, and traditions. We pray for a good year for America and for the world.

Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the Honorable Jerrold Nadler, Representative from New York, and the Honorable Harry Reid, Senator from Nevada, to lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance to our flag.

Mr. NADLER and Senator REID led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

The SPEAKER. Our National Anthem will now be sung by LaChanze.

The National Anthem was sung by LaChanze.

(Applause.)

The SPEAKER. My colleagues, we are here in Federal Hall in New York, New York, pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 448 of the 107th Congress to conduct a special ceremonial meeting in remembrance of the victims and the heroes of September 11, 2001, and in recognition of the courage and the spirit of the City of New York.

When representatives of the New York delegation introduced in the House and the Senate in 2001 Concurrent Resolutions that suggested that the Congress convene outside the seat of government to symbolize the Nation's solidarity with New Yorkers who epitomize the human spirit of courage, resilience and strength, my initial reaction of support was tempered by the realization that under article 1, section 5, clause 4 of the Constitution, "Neither House shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting."

There is no precedent for the convening of an actual session of Congress outside the seat of government, but on one special occasion the Congress has engaged in ceremonial functions outside the seat of government. Members of both houses traveled to Philadelphia on July 16, 1987, for organized festivities surrounding the bicentennial anniversary of the Constitution pursuant to a similar Concurrent Resolution.

On the strength of the precedent of the uniquely historical and national significance of that occasion, it is appropriate to dedicate another ceremonial gathering to a matter of transcendent importance at another place of basic institutional relevance to the Congress.

Thus, we are gathered in Federal Hall where the First Congress met in 1789 before moving the third session of that Congress to Congress Hall in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in 1790.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are, therefore, meeting here under that precedent.

The Chair recognizes the Honorable RICHARD B. CHENEY, the Vice President of the United States and President of the United States Senate.

(Applause.)

Vice President CHENEY. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each time Congress meets, we are mindful of the great charge that we have all been given as public servants. Assembled today in Federal Hall we are reminded of the ones who served before us and those who served first. It is a humbling experience to stand on the site where the First Congress met, where the first President was sworn, where the Bill of Rights was introduced.

Every Member of the House and Senate and every citizen of this country can draw a straight line from the events in Federal Hall to the life we all know today. When Congress convened here, America was a Nation of scarcely 4 million souls. The tallest structure in the city was Trinity Church, which still stands at corner of Broadway and Wall Street.

The rollcall of that First Congress included signers of the Declaration of Independence and men who marched in George Washington's Army. Two gentlemen from Virginia still in their 30's served in that Congress. Their names were Madison and Monroe. All the Members knew that great responsibilities had come to them.

As Vice President John Adams observed, "A trust of the greatest magnitude is committed to this legislature and the eyes of the world are upon you."

In their actions, the Members of the First Congress met that test. And although this city was the Nation's Capital for only a short time, from those early days, the eyes of the world have continued to be on New York. One year ago, this great center of history, enterprise, and creativity suffered the gravest of cruelties and showed itself to be a place of valor and generosity and grace. Here, where so many innocent lives were suddenly taken, the world saw acts of kindness and heroism that will be remembered forever.

When President Bush introduced Mayor Giuliani and Governor Pataki at the Joint Session last September, it was, said one New Yorker, as if the Members of Congress had recognized that these two men had come directly off the battlefield.

Today, Congress gathers near that battlefield to honor the character shown and the courage shown in New York these last 360 days, and to remember every innocent life taken in the attacks of September 11. Since the hour of those attacks, we have been a Nation at war called once again to defend our liberty and our lives and to save humanity from the worst of wars. As a Nation born in revolution, we know that our freedom came at a very high price. We have no intention now of letting it slip away.

The Members of the First Congress shaped events long into the future. The same is now asked of us. In the principles we stand for, the values we uphold, and the decisions we make we will set the course of this Nation and with it the future of human freedom and the peace of the world.

It is not given to us to know every turn of events to come. We know, however, that we are the elected servants of a good, a just, and a decent people. May we always act in that spirit, confident in our founding principles, clear in our purposes, choosing wisely and bowing only to divine providence.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk of the House of Representatives has laid upon the desk the list of representatives in attendance.

Vice President CHENEY. The Secretary of the Senate has laid upon the desk the list of Senators in attendance.

READING AND PRESENTATION OF HOUSE
CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 448

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vice President, leaders of the House and the Senate, on behalf of BEN GILMAN, Senator SCHUMER and Senator CLINTON, and the entire New York congressional delegation, we would like to thank you for your support of this resolution that gives us in New York an opportunity to say thank you for the way you responded to the attack on our city and our State.

You give our mayor and our governor an opportunity to be here on this historic event to say you did not treat us like New Yorkers, you treated us like Americans.

The text of the Concurrent Resolution was read as follows:

Mr. RANGEL. "Whereas on September the 11, 2001, thousands of innocent people were killed and injured in a combined terrorist attack involving four hijacked aircraft, the World Trade Center, and the Pentagon;

"Whereas in the aftermath of the attacks, thousands more were left grieving for beloved family and friends, livelihoods were compromised, and businesses and property were damaged and lost;"

Mr. GILMAN. "Whereas the greatest loss of life, personal injury, and physical destruction occurred in and was sustained by the City of New York;

"Whereas Government and the American people responded decisively through the bravery, sacrifice and toil of the fire and rescue workers, law enforcement, building trades, caregivers, Armed Forces, and millions more who through their many expressions of care and compassion brought forth comfort, hope, and the promise of recovery;"

Senator CLINTON. "Whereas the City of New York attended to the aftermath of the destruction of the World Trade Center with profound respect for the victims and compassion to the survivors; and

"Whereas the City of New York has invited the Congress to meet at the site of the original Federal Hall, where the First Congress of the United States convened on March 4, 1789: Now, therefore, be it"

Senator SCHUMER. "Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in remembrance of the victims and the heroes of September 11, 2001, and in recognition of the courage and spirit of the City of New York, the Congress shall conduct a special meeting in Federal Hall, New York, New York, on September 6, 2002.

Passed by the House of Representatives, July 25, 2002.

Passed by the Senate, July 26, 2002."

(Applause.)
 The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Members present, on behalf of themselves and the Congress of the United States, do hereby affirm the aforesaid Concurrent Resolution.

Would Mayor Bloomberg and Governor Pataki please come forward and accept the Concurrent Resolution.

Mayor Bloomberg and Governor Pataki of New York accepted the Concurrent Resolution.

(Applause.)

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the Honorable VITO FOSSELLA, Representative from New York, and the Honorable SUSAN COLLINS, Senator from Maine, in a reading and presentation of the commemorative plaque.

READING AND PRESENTATION OF COMMEMORATIVE PLAQUE

Senator COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vice President, on behalf of the United States Congress, we present this commemorative plaque to Director Mainella for her stewardship of our Nation's treasures, especially this building, Federal Hall.

The plaque is inscribed as follows:

"Commemorative Joint Meeting of the Congress of the United States of America in Federal Hall, New York, New York, this Sixth Day of September, Two Thousand and Two."

Mr. FOSSELLA. "Convened in remembrance of the victims and heroes of September 11, 2001, and in recognition of the courage and spirit of the City of New York.

"This gift to Federal Hall from the Congress of the United States of America was made from a section of Aquia Creek, Virginia, sandstone and used as an original building material of the United States Capitol. It was removed on the East Central Front extension in 1958."

The SPEAKER. Director Mainella, please come forward and accept the commemorative plaque.

Director Mainella accepted the commemorative plaque.

(Applause.)

The SPEAKER. Billy Collins, Poet Laureate of the United States of America, will now read a poem written for this occasion entitled "The Names."

READING OF "THE NAMES" BY BILLY COLLINS,
 POET LAUREATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COLLINS. This poem is dedicated to the victims of September 11, and to their survivors.

"THE NAMES"

Yesterday, I lay awake in the palm of the night.

A fine rain stole in, unhelped by any breeze,
 And when I saw the silver glaze on the windows,

I started with A, with Ackerman, as it happened,

Then Baxter and Calabro,
 Davis and Eberling, names falling into place
 As droplets fell through the dark.

Names printed on the ceiling of the night.
 Names slipping around a water bend.
 Twenty-six willows on the banks of a stream.

In the morning, I walked out barefoot
 Among thousands of flowers
 Heavy with dew like the eyes of tears,

And each had a name—
 Fiori inscribed on a yellow petal
 Then Gonzalez and Han, Ishikawa and Jenkins.

Names written in the air
 And stitched into the cloth of the day.
 A name under a photograph taped to a mailbox.

Monogram on a torn shirt.
 I see you spelled out on storefront windows
 And on the bright unfurled awnings of this city.

I say the syllables as I turn a corner—
 Kelly and Lee,
 Medina, Nardella, and O'Connor.

When I peer into the woods,
 I see a thick tangle where letters are hidden
 As in a puzzle concocted for children.
 Parker and Quigley in the twigs of an ash,
 Rizzo, Schubert, Torres, and Upton.

Secrets in the boughs of an ancient maple.
 Names written in the pale sky.

Names rising in the updraft amid buildings.
Names silent in stone
Or cried out behind a door.
Names blown over the earth and out to sea.
In the evenings—weakening light, the last swallows.

A boy on a lake lifts his oars.
A woman by a window puts a match to a candle,
And the names are outlined on the rose clouds—
Vanacore and Wallace,
(let X stand, if it can, for the ones unfound)
Then Young and Ziminsky, the final jolt of Z.

Names etched on the head of a pin.
One name spanning a bridge, another undergoing a tunnel.
A blue name needled into the skin.
Names of citizens, workers, mothers and fathers,

The bright-eyed daughter, the quick son.
Alphabet of names in green rows in a field.
Names in the small tracks of birds.
Names lifted from a hat
Or balanced on the tip of the tongue.
Names wheeled into the dim warehouse of memory.

So many names, there is barely room on the walls of the heart.

(Applause.)

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the Honorable RICHARD GEP-HARDT, Representative from Missouri and Democratic Leader of the United States House of Representatives.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Vice President,
Mr. Speaker, and my fellow colleagues of the United States Congress, today we speak of the unspeakable, we remember the unimaginable, and we reaffirm our utmost resolve to defend the birthright of this land and our gift outright to this world: Ideals of liberty and tolerance that will never die.

Today, we say to the families who look to this September 11 and know that they will know the pain of their piercing loss all over again, we are with you as one, as the family of America. We pray that, for you, memory will bring hope as well as tears.

We have faith that love out lasts life, and you prove it every day as you carry on the dream of a lost husband or a wife, for the child that was both of yours and, in the truest sense, always will be.

We think of those last calls on cell phones from a doomed building or plane. Those last good-byes. Yet the life of a good person is like a wellspring that does not run dry. Nothing reminds us more powerfully of that than the rescuers of September 11, so many of them taken too, who rescued our national spirit and, amid the smoke and the darkness at noon, sent a flickering light that became a shining beacon for America.

So we have wept together, we have prayed together, given to each other, and stood side by side since September 11 in common humanity and national purpose. The sorrow has been matched by strength. America is on a mission.
Not retribution or revenge, not just to defeat terrorism, but to show once again that good can triumph over evil and freedom can overcome fanaticism, as we did in different forums in a global arena twice before in the past century.

Some say that September 11, 2001, is another date that will live in infamy.
Surely that is true, but it is also true that we have never known an assault like this, not just on our Armed Forces, but on our people. Not just on our buildings and our possessions, or even on the principles that we profess, but on the very foundation of this open, diverse, democratic society.

We have grown accustomed, too accustomed, to war and slaughter in our world. But most always it was "over there." One place it came before in the heartland was the homegrown terrorism that struck in Oklahoma City.
Today, our caring and thoughts are there as well. And they are a half a world away with the young Americans who are on the front lines of freedom from fear.

For all our differences, how remarkably one we are all today. From Ground Zero to a sacred field in Pennsylvania, to a shattered but now rebuilt wing of the Pentagon, and all across this broad land. On the fatal flights of September 11, courage and resistance knew no bounds of party or race or status. They included a young father, a conservative columnist, and a gay man.

E Pluribus Unum.

So while we discuss and debate the next decisions, on the fundamental issue let there be no doubt. In this great and faithful struggle there are no Republicans, there are no Democrats, there are only Americans. None of us, no matter how long we live or what else marks our time, will ever forget September 11. And all of us, in the name of those who were lost for a concept of liberty that must never be lost, and in the cause of civilization itself, are as determined as an earlier generation of Americans to gain the inevitable triumph, so help us God.

(Applause.)

Vice President CHENEY. The Chair
now recognizes the Honorable TRENT LOTT, the Senator from Mississippi and the Republican Leader of the United States Senate.

Senator LOTT. Mr. Vice President,
Mr. Speaker, Members of the Congress, and distinguished guests, on behalf of the Senate and a united Congress, it is truly an honor to stand in this place in this city, New York City, today.

We are here to remember and to continue to mourn those that lost their lives, those innocent men, women, and children that were killed in that horrible event, September 11, a year ago.

appreciation for those that struggled so mightily to free and to save those that were trapped in the aftermath of the experience here in New York City and at the Pentagon.

But we are also here to express our recommitment to the people of New York and Pennsylvania and Virginia that we are with you. We will continue our efforts to help you to rebuild physically and spiritually, and to recommit ourselves to do everything in our power to make sure that America is secure against this horrible event or anything like it ever happening again.

Over the years, New York City has been called many things, from New Amsterdam to the Big Apple. Today, the Congress of the United States, Congressman RANGEL, call it home. We are here, we are comfortable here. We are here to stand with the people in this city because it is symbolic of how we stand together all across America.

We came here a year ago, the week after the infamous date. We expressed our commitment and we have been working every since to keep that commitment, and we will continue to do so.

This is a special place, as has already been said, because the First Congress began the work here that we continue this day. The work of ordered liberty, preserving, expanding the freedoms that now, as then, are the inalienable right of every person.

Two centuries ago, there were those who thought this was all nonsense. In their ignorance and arrogance, they called America a doomed folly. But history overtook them and their crowns and armies are part of the dustbin of history. There are those like them today who cannot see beyond the limits of their own hatred. It is so hard for us in America to even understand why there would be this hatred. They do not understand that in the unending struggle against tyranny, divine providence by whatever name we use is always on the side of freedom.

When the First Congress was meeting here in New York in January, 1790, President Washington asked its Members for "the cool and deliberate exertion of your patriotism, firmness and wisdom." As we face today's challenge to our country, we pledge to the people of New York just what we ask of them and all Americans: The cool and deliberate exertion of your patriotism, firmness, and wisdom.

We have seen it in this city. We have seen it in America, and we are here to do our part in that effort. The duration of our present conflict and its eventual price may be in doubt, but there can be no doubt as to its outcome. From this city's day of horror, out of all the loss and sorrow, has come a strength. I have seen it all across America. A resolve. A determination which, from Manhattan, to Mississippi, now binds us together for the mighty work that lies ahead.
Thank you very much.

(Applause.)

Vice President CHENEY. The Chair
now recognizes the Honorable TOM

DASCHLE, the Senator from South Dakota and Majority Leader of the United States Senate.

Senator DASCHLE. Mr. Vice President, Mr. Speaker, distinguished visitors and my colleagues, the United States Congress has come here to commemorate a shattering experience. One that has transformed America.

The poet Yeats, after a moment of violent upheaval in his own country, wrote: "All is changed. Changed utterly. A terrible beauty is born."

As we near the first anniversary of September 11 with profound sadness, our hearts ache for those who died and for their families and loved ones. At the same time, we are filled with an abiding sense of gratitude to the people who live and work in this great city, especially the courageous workers and rescuers, for the way they inspired and stunned a wounded Nation.

In their countless acts of heroism and compassion, a terrible beauty was born. In an hour of horror and grief, they showed us how to go on.

Here in New York, at the Pentagon, and in that lonely field in Pennsylvania, the wounds the terrorist inflicted were deep. But America's resolve was even deeper.

Let history record that the terrorists failed. They sought to destroy America by attacking what they thought were our greatest strengths, but they did not understand the true strength of America is not steel, it is not concrete, it is our belief in the ideals enshrined in our Constitution and in our Bill of Rights. It is in our shared faith in liberty and our unwavering commitment to each other.

So what happened on September 11 did not diminish our strength. It renewed it. We stand united today as proud citizens of the oldest and strongest democracy on earth. Our faith in that democracy and in our future is absolute and unshakable.

Next Wednesday, September 11, an eternal flame will be lit in Battery Park. That flame will symbolize our determination never, ever to forget.

We will never forget the heart-breaking loss.

We will never forget the selfless heroism.

We will never forget the terrible beauty that was born here one year ago.

Thank you.

(Applause.)

The SPEAKER. We are gathered here today in this ceremonial session to pay tribute to the people of New York and to the people of New York City who have suffered great loss, but persevered in the face of adversity. In doing so, we pay tribute to the American spirit.

It is altogether appropriate that we meet here today in Federal Hall. After all, it was here that the First Congress met to ratify the Bill of Rights and to inaugurate our first President of the United States, George Washington.

As in 1789, when ordinary Americans did extraordinary things to create a new Nation conceived in liberty and dedication to freedom, on September 11, ordinary Americans exhibited extraordinary courage in fighting a horrific evil.

New York lost hundreds of sons and daughters in that brutal attack on our Nation's freedom. She lost firemen and custodians, stockbrokers, police officers, construction workers and executives.

We also suffered a great loss in Virginia when a plane slammed into the Pentagon, and in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, when another plane that was headed for Washington, D.C., was brought down by the efforts of brave passengers.

We still feel the loss of every single person who perished on that fateful day. But as we lament the loss of life, we can marvel at the bravery of those who rushed in to help.

Such bravery was on display when Battalion Chief Orio J. Palmer and Fire Marshal Ronald Bucca of the New York Fire Department climbed to the 78th floor of the World Trade Center to organize a rescue. Their efforts saved the lives of dozens of people.

Bravery was also on display when several passengers of United Flight 93 decided that they would not let the terrorists complete their plans. They sacrificed themselves rather than let the terrorists win.

Stories of uncommon heroism were common on September 11. The genius of America could be found in the sacrifices of these brave martyrs of freedom.

As we remember September 11, we must look forward to the day when we complete the task at hand, when we vanquish once and for all the terrorists who seek to take away our Nation's freedom.

We thank those Americans who serve in our Nation's Armed Forces who fight to preserve our freedom and still work to bring terrorists to justice.

We elected Members of the 107th Congress, like those Members gathered in this location of the First Congress, simply reflect the desires of a people who cherish liberty and are willing to fight for freedom.

Let us always remember those we lost on September 11, and may God continue to bless America.

Thank you.

(Applause.)

"GOD BLESS AMERICA" SUNG BY CHAMBER CHOIR, STUYVESANT HIGH SCHOOL, NEW YORK CITY.

The SPEAKER. The Stuyvesant High School Chamber Choir will now sing "God Bless America."

The Chamber Choir, Stuyvesant High School, sang "God Bless America."

(Applause.)

The Members and guests sang "God Bless America."

The SPEAKER. Ladies and gentlemen of the House and the Senate, this concludes the special ceremonial meeting of the Congress. Members are asked to remain in their seats and make their exit with the colors.

The Chair will assure that the record of these proceedings will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The proceedings are closed.

The Colors were retired by the Color Guard composed of members of the New York City Fire Department, New York City Police Department, New York State Unified Court System Officers, Port Authority of New York and New Jersey Police, and the United States Capitol Police.

[Whereupon, the Commemorative Joint Meeting of the Congress was adjourned.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise first to thank all my colleagues for voting to bring the Congress here to New York. Its been more than 200 years since Congress last met in New York City. It is a fitting tribute that Congress has returned here at this most sorrowful time.

The past year has been a tragic and very difficult time for me and my fellow New Yorkers. We watched in horror as terrorists hijacked two commercial airliners and slammed them into the World Trade Center. We watched in horror as the Twin Towers came down and dust and debris blanketed lower Manhattan. We watched in horror as the names of the more than 3,000 people murdered that day were announced.

But, in the days and weeks that followed, we New Yorkers experienced something else. We felt the hopes and prayers of millions of Americans flow over us. We felt the pride of being an American swell and invigorate us all. We felt the determination of the greatest nation the earth has every known renew itself and commit to rebuilding.

The terrorists intended many things with their attack. They sought to grievously wound our nation. And we were—we paid with the blood of our fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, and brother and sisters. They sought to disrupt our economy. And they did—billions of dollars have been lost and will be spent on recovery.

The terrorists also sought to incite fear into the hearts and souls of every American. But, they FAILED. Instead, they inspired a nation of freedom loving people to stand up to those who would seek to deny them their liberties, their justice, and the American way of life. They inspired us to fight back, so that our children's children will grow up in a world where they can safely speak their views, engage in the political system, and worship in their own way.

As we meet here, in this historic location, I am reminded of one of our country's greatest Presidents, Abraham Lincoln. His words, spoken more than a century ago, are most fitting today: "we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

HOUR OF MEETING ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2002

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Tuesday, September 10, 2002, it adjourn to meet at noon on Wednesday, September 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTENTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R.
3210, TERRORISM RISK PROTEC-TION ACT

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 7(c) of rule XXII, I hereby announce my intention to offer tomorrow a motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3210.

The form of the motion is as follows:

Mr. FOSSELLA moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill, H.R. 3210, be instructed to agree to the provisions contained in section 11 of the Senate amendment, relating to satisfaction of judgments from frozen assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and the state sponsors of terrorism.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to offer this motion on behalf of myself and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT).

OPENING VICTORY FOR THE HOUS-TON TEXANS OVER THE DALLAS COWBOYS

(Mr. GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I intend to share my 1 minute with my colleague, the gentlewoman from Houston, Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Mr. Speaker, it has been a difficult year for Houston, between floods and Enron and reduced energy production, but last night I watched a community come together. Last night, the National Football League came back to Houston after more than 5 years of being gone, and we watched the Houston Texans, a new expansion team, take on our cross-State rivals, the Dallas Cowboys, on prime time Sunday night at the Texas Super Bowl.

I watched as a team that was not expected to win literally won convincingly. It had not happened in 41 years that an expansion team won their first regular season game. I want to congratulate the Houston Texans and Bob McNair for their effort, and they played like veterans.

To quote Willy Nelson, "Momma, don't let your babies grow up to be cowboys," and with the Houston Texans, the pro football team, we now have a new sheriff in town.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Texas. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Are the Members ready for football? They never believed we can do it; yes, we can. We have the Houston spirit. That spirit is that we won as an expansion team, the first time since 1961: Houston Texans 19, Dallas Cowboys simply 10.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN) has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have an additional 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Texas. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, the hometown boy, Clay Johnson, sang the catchy theme song and the Rocking Reliant stadium stood tall behind our Houston Texans.

I, too, would like to thank Bob McNair, the community, and all the fans that were out there, because we have ourselves a number one team, which is first in line, first in team, and first in scoring: The Houston Texans 19, the Dallas Cowboys 10. Victory for us yesterday.

CONGRATULATING THE VALLEY
SPORTS AMERICAN LITTLE LEAGUE BASEBALL TEAM

(Mrs. NORTHUP asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, the Valley Sports American Little League Team from Louisville won not only the World Series in this country, but the International World Series. This is a group of 11-year-old youngsters that not only played terrific games all the way through the playoffs, but conducted themselves with such sportsmanship and were such gracious winners that they captured the hearts not only of people in Louisville, Kentucky, but people all across this country.

They were totally unknown, went into the tournament with all the confidence and all the toughness that we would expect a group of 11-year-olds to have. They won the series in this country on Saturday night, and then won the International World Series on Sunday night.

They had the wonderful opportunity of meeting the President of the United States when he was in Louisville last week, and have been greeted with applause all across our community and all across this country. I just rise to recognize them.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening grievously concerned about the direction this House may be going as it considers the bankruptcy conference report.

G.K. Chesterton once said, the reformer is always right about what is wrong, and he is generally wrong about what is right. But we in this House may have the opportunity to do the work of reformers and the obligation to do what is right this week.

The bankruptcy reform bill has languished in Congress, Mr. Speaker, since before many of us were Members, including me. Many Members of both houses labored tirelessly to reform the old law. I honor them for their outstanding work.

I especially respect those from this House who worked so diligently and faithfully as conferees. They did produce a bill that will eliminate many of the abuses in the current system, encourage personal responsibility, reduce bogus filings, and will put spouses and children in a favored position in collecting obligations owed them by those who seek to hide behind our country's bankruptcy laws.

Mr. Speaker, I heard from my friends from finance and in retailing. They tell me that the bankruptcy reform accomplishes many good things. I cannot nor do I want to disagree with them. Yet, Mr. Speaker, and I say this advisedly, if this House sends this bankruptcy conference report to the President, without question we will have reformed the system, but we will not have done the right thing. We will have been wrong about what is right.

Mr. Speaker, as we all well know, there is language in this conference report that could deny the protection of bankruptcy laws to nonviolent protesters active in the right to life; not violent bomb-throwers or those who physically assault women at abortion clinics, as has been reported. No, as a just and peaceful society, we cannot support private violence for any cause. Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the quiet, dignified men and women who do no more than pray, sing hymns, or hold placards outside abortion clinics, men and women who are doing no more than what the first amendment of the Constitution provides, which every single one of us in this House swore an oath to uphold.

Mr. Speaker, even if we disagree with every fiber of our being, every one of us should be opposed to those laws and tactics that squelch legitimate speech and scare people from expressing their opinions. The bankruptcy law provides the tools to chill not only our first amendment rights of free speech, but our very soul as a Nation. Using the force of law to squelch dissent is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, this law, which was crafted so carefully to permit some protests but crush others, will have just that result. The wealthy and powerful will turn their lawyers loose on quiet, peaceful protesters for no reason other than that they dislike the content of the speech. The powerful law firms for abortion rights interests will see to it that peaceful protesters are hauled into the justice system, are forced into settlement that forever forecloses dissent, or into the risk of threats to take their homes, property, and businesses as long as they live.

We will have done the right thing in reforming the bankruptcy code if we pass this report, but, Mr. Speaker, we will have injured the first amendment. We will have set the precedent that the powerful can use the force of law to stamp out disagreeable speech, and we will have cruelly laid the foundation for a permanent debtors' class. This is a legacy I am not prepared to leave my country.

Mr. Speaker, as I think about the blessing that is America, and as I remember those who sacrificed so that I might exercise the right to disagree with my colleagues this evening, I cannot escape the haunting, simple words of the prophet Micah who says, "He has shown you what is good, to do justice, to love kindness, to walk humbly with your God."

With all the respect and honor that is in me to my colleagues, and especially my colleagues who labored so long on this bankruptcy bill, I believe it is incumbent upon us to remove the offending language and send it back to the other body to honor and protect our Constitution, and not miss this calling to do justice to peaceful Americans who would express their dissent in this, the most troubling issue facing our Nation.

CONGRESSIONAL CUBAN POLITICAL PRISONERS INITIATIVE: MAYDA BARBARA JORDAN CONTRERAS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw attention to a courageous struggle that is taking place on the island of Cuba. While Fidel Castro maintains his stranglehold on freedom of expression, association, and assembly, a growing number of nonviolent dissidents are speaking out to demand civil liberties and basic human rights for Cuba's 11 million citizens.

However, being brave enough to stand up to the regime can come at great personal cost. Opponents of the state are subject to punishments ranging from harassment and loss of employment to beatings and imprisonment. According to the best estimates of human rights groups, Cuban democracy groups, government and non-government organizations, there are over 400 political dissidents now languishing in Cuban jails. No other country of Cuba's size has held so many political prisoners for so long and under such cruel circumstances.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to be a member of Cuba Libertad's Congressional Cuban Prisoners Initiative. The initiative is a bipartisan effort to promote respect for human rights and democratic change in Cuba. Twelve prisoners have been selected to serve as symbols for the more than 400 men and women who are suffering in Cuban prisons for the expression of their political beliefs.

I would like to take this opportunity to highlight one such prisoner, Mayda Barbara Jordan. Mayda was one of hundreds of Cubans who sought freedom during the 1994 dissident uprising known as the Maleconazo, where hundreds of Cubans took to the streets to demand liberty. Mayda was arrested along with her sister for participating in this mass protest and trying to provide a better life for her family.

Her crime? The Cuban government calls it piracy. Her charge reflects the Cuban government's policy of sentencing dissidents for serious criminal acts in an effort to deny the existence of political prisoners.

Mayda is a mother of two young children and is suffering from the 8th year of a 15-year prison sentence. Mayda has served time in solitary confinement and has been denied family visits for continuing to voice dissent against the regime and refusing to undergo reeducation.

Her sentence is meant to dissuade others from protesting or leaving Cuba. I urge my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to join with me and demand the release of Mayda and all of Cuba's estimated 400 political prisoners. Through our efforts and those of such groups as Cuba Libertad, we can draw attention to the continuing atrocities against political prisoners in Cuba and let Castro know that we will not remain silent while these individuals are beaten, tortured and denied access to medical care.

Mayda Jordan and all those advocating for freedom and democracy in Cuba need international recognition for their courageous struggle. Their lives and the birth of a new democratic Cuba depend on it, Mr. Speaker.

HONORING DR. JERRY DONAL JEWELL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMMONS). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on August 17, 2002, Arkansas lost a great public servant and a fighter for social justice with the passing of Jerry Donal Jewell, a Little Rock dentist who made political history when he was elected in 1992 as the first African American president pro tem of the Arkansas State Senate.

A sharecropper's son, Dr. Jewell, who was born during the Great Depression, died at the age of 71 in a Little Rock hospital after a brief battle with cancer. Born in Crittenden County, Arkansas, Dr. Jewell attended public school in West Memphis. He later earned his B.S. degree from AM&N College, which is now the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff, and his doctorate of dental surgery degree from Meharry Medical School in Nashville, Tennessee.

He continued to practice dentistry for over 30 years in Little Rock until his death. Dr. Jewell was the first African American since reconstruction elected to the State Senate for the State of Arkansas. Until his election in 1973, no African American has been elected to the State Senate in the State of Arkansas in 80 years. Between 1963 and 1967 he was president of the Little Rock branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He became a lifetime member and president of the Arkansas Conference of the NAACP from 1965 to 1972. During this time and before, he worked throughout the State of Arkansas fighting segregation and racial injustice with the noted civil rights activist Daisy Bates and her husband L.C. Bates. Dr. Jewell played a role in national politics when he served on the National Democratic Party Credential Commission in 1972 and the National Democratic Party Charter Commission from 1972 to 1974.

Dr. Jewell was a hard worker and dedicated public servant who survived the harsh struggles of poverty to succeed not only in education but politics and medical practice. He became the acting Governor of Arkansas, as a matter of fact, when President Clinton was elected President; and when Governor Jim Guy Tucker left the State to come to the inauguration for 5 days, Dr. Jewell was acting governor, and during that time granted executive clemency to two individuals who were facing death row. Of course, that created quite a stir; but nevertheless he prevailed and hung in.

I am proud to know that we attended the same university, we are members of the same fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, and I am pleased to note that a great American did indeed provide tremendous service, not only to the State of Arkansas, but to the Nation as a whole.

HONORING DR. JERRY DONAL JEWELL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. SNYDER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to add my voice to those acknowledging the passing several weeks ago of State Senator Jerry Jewell in Arkansas.

I served with Senator Jewell from 1991 to 1993 as Congressman DAVIS noted, who, by the way, is an Arkansas native. He left Arkansas when he was 19, but he has never forgotten where he came from.

It was my pleasure also to serve with Senator Jewell in the State Senate. He certainly made history by being the first African American since Reconstruction to be elected to the State Senate. He was the first African American president pro tem and he became acting Governor. In Arkansas the way our Constitution works is if the Governor or lieutenant governor leaves the State, they lose their power as Governor, so Senator Jerry Jewell became acting Governor.

He had a very colorful civil rights history. I attended his funeral a couple weeks ago, and Dr. Roosevelt Brown told this story how when they were young men the efforts to try to desegregate a swimming pool during the summertime in Little Rock that basically involved Senator Jewell talking to the young person at the gate and two or three other young African American men running past and jumping in the pool and immediately all the white folks jumping out, the kind of story now that we think is humorous but at the time was deadly serious. It was a sign of his courage that he participated in those kinds of events.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) and I want to acknowledge the passing of Senator Jewell, the part of history he played in Arkansas, and the loss to his friends and family.

CONCERNING THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION POLICY FOR A "PRE-EMPTIVE" WAR AGAINST IRAQ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, like all Americans, I am concerned about the state of affairs in the world today, and how the United States government responds to the changing nature of threats to our national security—especially as we near the one-year anniversary of September 11th, how the Bush administration reacts to these challenges and its approach to solving other international challenges.

We are all committed to acting decisively to win the war on terrorism, and President Bush has had my full support in that effort. In fact, Congress voted as one voice after September 11th to give the President both moral support and authority to prosecute the war on terror and to bring those responsible for the attacks to justice.

I am also concerned that the proposed "pre-emptive war" against Iraq will divert the nation's attention and limited resources from our war on terrorism as well as from domestic needs, such as building up the economy and a prescription drug benefit for our seniors.

In speeches last week, Vice President CHENEY contemplated a "pre-emptive war" against Iraq—one giant step beyond the President's stated goal of a "regime change" that would oust Iraqi president Saddam Hussein, something most of us thought should have happened a decade ago. But Vice President CHENEY's "preemptive" prescription for dealing with Iraq represents a radical departure from two centuries of U.S. defense and foreign policy and it should be the subject of Congressional hearings and a vigorous public debate.

Also of concern are a number of arrogant and ideological statements made by other Bush administration officials over the course of the last couple of weeks. Especially troubling are those suggesting that the President already has the authority to attack Iraq at will and doesn't need to consult with and get the approval of this Congress by virtue of the 1991 resolution authorizing the use of force in Desert Storm and last fall's resolution supporting the war on terror. At best, this is simplicity without reason, and reason enough to make the U.S. Constitution "required reading" for presidential appointees.

Without ambiguity, the Constitution vested in Congress two powers, among others—the power of the purse and the power to declare war. And the War Powers Resolution of 1973 clearly calls for collective judgment of both Congress and the President in time of war. The act gives the President the authority to act alone only when there is an emergency, an act of defense against a threat; examples would be Pearl Harbor and the September 11th attacks. In others cases a Declaration of War or Statutory Authority must be issued.

President Bush has said that Iraq is governed by evil forces who possess weapons of mass destruction but he has not insisted on an immediate resumption of unfettered weapons inspection by the United Nations as one way of proving his point. Secretary Powell's call for U.N. inspections is a hopeful sign that the Administration is reconsidering. The President and his team should follow the example of his father and make the case to the American people, their Representatives and Senators in Congress, and to the world community that Saddam Hussein poses a real and dangerous and verifiable threat—not only to his own people and Iraq's neighbors in the Middle East—but to the United States and world peace.

From such an exercise, the President could rebuild and perhaps strengthen the coalition of nations that successfully prosecuted the Gulf War, dealing with Iraq from a position of unquestioned strength—based on a broad international consensus. This path also has the virtue of assuring that all other methods to resolve the situation have been tried and there is no other alternative. It's worth noting that this is the same strategy President Bush followed in getting other nations to join us in the fight against terrorism. He would be well advised to follow the same course as he ponders what to do with the Iraq situation.

On the face of it, it may seem easier to make war than to create peace, but it's worth remembering history's lesson that the costs of war are high—in human lives, resources, domestic needs left unmet and other global challenges, while the rewards of peace are far greater, measured by the savings of what would otherwise be lost or wasted—as the Bible says, "Blessed are the Peace-makers."

Mr. President and Mr. Vice President, "Blessed are the Peace-makers," and war should be the last resort, not the first. If you have exhausted all best efforts to resolve the conflict with Iraq by all other means—by prevention, not pre-emption—without success, then the Congress, the American people and the world will give you the mightiest weapon to be had in an arsenal: the moral authority to exercise leadership and prosecute a war that serves the common interest of humanity and advances the noble cause of world peace.

RUSSIAN/UNITED STATES ENERGY COOPERATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to encourage our colleagues to support a new direction for America as outlined by both our President and the President of Russia, President Putin.

Later on this month there will be a major energy summit in Houston, Texas, sponsored by the U.S. Energy Association. It will have the major energy players in our country and Russia come together to see ways we can cooperate.

This follows on with recommendations that many in this body took in a document that we produced last fall entitled, "A New Time, A New Beginning" which one-third of the House and Senate joined together in supporting. One of our major tenets was that we should work together with Russia on their energy exploration and development. The reason this is so critically important is, obviously, America's dependence on Middle Eastern crude and the problem it causes us as evidenced by the current crisis in the Middle East. Russia has huge supplies of energy. We have a need; we have the technology. We should be working together.

To that end, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of initiatives underway. I am circulating a memo in the House which I would encourage our colleagues to sign which is a joint statement that will be signed by both Members of the Congress, the House and the Senate, and members of the Duma and Federation Council. This document is followed through in a piece of legislation that I will introduce this week; and hopefully we can have that bill on the House floor before we adjourn at the end of September. In fact, my intent is to have the Duma ratify the document at the end of September. Eight hours later in Washington, the Congress will ratify the same document that calls for an expanded U.S.-Russian cooperation on energy.

Mr. Speaker, that document and the joint statement are as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT OF THE MEMBERS OF THE U.S. CONGRESS AND R.F. FEDERAL ASSEMBLY ON NEW ENERGY AND TRADE COOPERATION BETWEEN TWO NATIONS

On behalf of the U.S. Congress and members of the Russian Federal Assembly we strongly support the recent decision by President Bush on June 6, 2002 to extend market status to the Russian economy. The granting of market status is one of many mutually beneficial measures our two governments should continue to pursue to promote long-term engagement and integration of Russia into the world economy. A key component of new engagement is mutual efforts to bring greater stability to world energy markets and to support sustained economic growth in Russia and the United States.

Russia, with its vast oil and gas resources, a growing and diverse number of private sector companies, and a renewed commitment to investment by international energy companies, offers a unique opportunity to provide stability to an often volatile and insecure world energy market. We recognize that Russia and the U.S. can play a critical role in supporting energy development among the resource rich countries of the former Soviet Union (FSU).

In the coming months we will revitalize the work of the Duma-Congress Study Group on energy policy and coordinate our efforts with our respective Parliaments as well as efforts now underway by the government agencies of the United States and Russia. Among the specific legislative and other measures we commit to pursue are:

U.S. Congressional action to remove trade and economic barriers, including outdated laws no longer applicable to this New Time and New Beginning, such as the review provisions contained in the Jackson-Vanik Amendment of the 1974 Trade Act.

Duma action to strengthen investment incentives in the Russian energy sector, such as full implementation of Production Sharing legislation, encouragement of regulatory reform, and other measures to attract international investment into the Russian energy sectors. Of specific concern are legislative and related policy measures to permit full implementation of projects on Sakhalin Island and in the Timan-Pechora region, all of which offer unique opportunities to increase world and U.S. supplies of petroleum.

Regulatory and investment frameworks to expand Russia's oil and gas export capacities.

Joint parliamentary support for Russia's ascension to the WTO.

High level and sustained exchanges on energy development between official entities and private sector companies of Russia and the United States.

As our two governments proceed with this important Energy Dialogue we call upon them to consult widely with interested parties to promote exchanges and to seek support from the broadest cross section of our business and civil societies. Among the important non-governmental groups we value highly and whom we will continue to consult with are the Moscow International Petroleum Club, US-Russia Business Council, American Chamber of Commerce in Moscow, Russian-American Council for Business Cooperation, American-Russian Chamber of Commerce and Industry and other related entities that can play a critical role in policy assessments and promoting private sector exchanges. We will encourage the government agencies of Russia and the United States to consult widely with these groups.

H. CON. RES. —

Whereas the Russian Federation, with its vast oil and gas resources, a growing and diverse number of private sector companies, and a renewed commitment to investment by international energy companies, offers a unique opportunity to provide stability to an often volatile and insecure world energy market;

Whereas on June 6, 2002, Russia was granted market status economy [by the United States?];

Whereas the granting of market status is one of many mutually beneficial measures that the Governments of Russia and the United States should continue to pursue to promote long-term engagement and integration of Russia into the world economy;

Whereas a key component of new engagement is mutual efforts to bring greater stability to world energy markets and to support sustained economic growth in Russia and the United States; and

Whereas both Russia and the United States can play a critical role in supporting energy development among the resource rich countries of the former Soviet Union: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That—

(1) it is the sense of Congress that—

(A) in proceeding with [this important energy dialogue?] the Governments of the Russian Federation and the United States should consult widely with interested parties to promote exchanges and to seek support from the broadest cross section of business and civil societies; and

(B) the United States should remove trade and economic barriers [with respect to Russia?], including provisions of law that are no longer applicable, such as chapter 1 of title IV of the Trade Act of 1974 (commonly referred to as "Jackson-Vanik"); and

(2) Congress—

(A) supports the actions of the Russian Duma to strengthen investment incentives in the Russian energy sector, such as full implementation of production sharing legislation, encouragement of regulatory reform, and other measures to attract international investment into the Russian energy sectors;

(B) supports the actions of the Russian Duma to permit full implementation of [energy?] projects on Sakhalin Island and in the Timan-Pechora region, all of which offer unique opportunities to increase world and United States supplies of petroleum;

(C) encourages regulatory and investment framework in Russia to expand Russia's oil and gas export capacities;

(D) supports the accession of Russia to the World Trade Organization (WTO); and

(E) supports continued high level and sustained exchanges on energy development between the Governments of Russia and the United States and between businesses in the two countries.

Mr. Speaker, I would also call my colleagues' attention to a speech being given at the National Press Club this Thursday by Senator CONRAD BURNS. In that speech he will focus on the need for America to move toward joint U.S.-Russian energy cooperation.

Mr. Speaker, one final point, I will be contacting the administration tomorrow because the upcoming summit on October 1 and 2 in Houston is critically important, but to this date my understanding is it does not have a large focus on the legislative process as part of the energy initiative. And, obviously, we cannot have a joint energy relationship unless both bodies in both countries are directly involved. So I would call upon the administration to provide a provision in that conference for Members of the House and the Senate, members of the Duma and the Federation Council to speak to the issues of importance that will allow us to implement the ideas and the proposals of both President Bush and President Putin on ways that we can expand the cooperation between the U.S. and Russia in the energy arena.

UNITED STATES SHOULD PARTICIPATE IN UNITED NATIONS WORLD SUMMIT FOR SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I have just returned this last week from participation in the United Nations World Summit for Sustainable Development. It was truly an amazing experience, Mr. Speaker. It was the largest conference ever conducted by the United Nations. It was attended by over 100 heads of state who took part in the summit, joined by over 21,000 people, 9,000 delegates, 8,000 representatives of a variety of nongovernmental organizations and 4,000 members of the press. It was something that I will remember for a variety of reasons.

In one respect it was interesting in terms of the context in which the summit was taking place. Amidst news of drought, forest fires, devastating storms and flooding around the world, millions of people had been displaced in Asia, there were disastrous floods in central Europe, everybody that I met with and I had the opportunity to visit with the representatives of over two dozen countries, there was not one person when did not feel that the terrible ecological disasters that provided the backdrop in the news were not somehow connected to the cavalier treatment that we have accorded to the environment. There was virtually no skepticism expressed on behalf of the concerns for global climate change, for instance.

Now, while personally embarrassed that the United States did not have a greater presence, and somewhat overwhelmed by the environmental challenges we face, I returned from that experience with a greater sense of optimism than I would have thought possible just a month ago.

Now, make no mistake about it, I fear the United States was the big loser at that summit. I mention that there were 104 heads of state, not the President of the United States, who was staying on his ranch in Crawford, Texas, and participating in various fund-raising events around the country, allowing the United States to be portrayed as an obstructionist or uninterested in a conference to which most other countries sent their leaders. I found a certain amount of irony when the United States, at least some members of the administration are beating their drums for a potential action against Iraq, when a number of people noted the need if we are going to be moving forward to have a global alliance similar to that which was assembled by President Bush's father when he was involved with the war against Iraq with Operation Desert Storm. It seemed particularly ironic that the head of our government, who had an opportunity to meet with our global partners, strengthen bonds, and obtain support for difficult policies that require international cooperation was not there. It had a number of other spill-over effects. Frankly, we did not get credit for many of the more positive developments that we were involved with.

For instance, during the negotiations on the plan of implementation, which was the international agreement produced at the summit, the United States negotiators opposed most of the specific targets in the plan dealing with climate change and energy. The United States opposed language that would have set a goal for industrialized countries to increase their use of renewable energy by just 2 percent over the next decade. It is kind of hard to believe that the United States, with all of its resources and technology, its leadership, with a public that understands the need for energy independence and not being further reliant on unstable energy sources in the Middle East, hard to believe that our administration thinks it is not possible that the United States could meet the challenge of increasing our use of renewables in the next decade by just 2 percent.

It was disappointing that the United States seemed to avoid any discussion of global climate change, our contribution to the problem, and meaningful solutions.

The United States did finally support the summit goal to cut in half the number of people living without basic sanitation, matching our objectives for clean water, drinking water. This was important, Mr. Speaker, because by linking those two goals together, we have the opportunity to increase 300 percent the effectiveness of our investments. And I was pleased that at the last minute the United States abandoned its advocacy of destructive language that would have undercut women's reproductive health and freedom. It was a little embarrassing for a while that our partners in the fight for reproductive women's rights were those coming from the Arab states. In its original form it would have been a declaration that the Taliban would have felt comfortable with.

But as I say, this was one area where we were able to see some changes that took place.

Mr. Speaker, I have some other thoughts and observations relative to the experience here; but I note that I have been joined by my colleague, the gentlewoman from Los Angeles, California (Ms. SOLIS), and I yield to the gentlewoman to make some comments, a woman who is deeply concerned about environmental issues and provided leadership internationally and at home for herself in California.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I would like to also thank the gentleman from Oregon for putting this discussion here before the public.

And I too, Mr. Speaker, rise to express my frustration with the leaders of our country, particularly the Bush administration, in their failure to be fully supportive of all the participants at the recent Johannesburg World Summit on Sustainable Development. The Johannesburg conference was a meeting where nearly 200 countries came together for 10 days to search for ways to bring clean water and sanitation to nearly 2 billion of the world's poorest people, the world's poorest people.

Because of this administration's unwillingness to help meet the needs of our global society, there were a few binding commitments made at the conference and our world leaders left that conference without addressing some of the most pending issues, like issues regarding AIDS, smokestack emissions, or uneven benefits of global trade. Carbon dioxide emissions, as my colleagues know, have risen 18 percent above 1990 levels in the U.S., by 11 percent in Japan, 13 percent in Canada, and almost 30 percent in Australia. As our carbon dioxide levels have risen, so too have our instances of weather-related disasters, and we see that here in the U.S. more and more.

Since 1975 these natural disasters, namely droughts, windstorms, and floods, have increased by 160 percent, killing approximately 440,000 people and causing $480 billion worth of damage in the 1990s alone. And still the U.S. negotiators fought efforts to decrease our world's dependence on dirty fossil fuels and increase our focus on alternative energy use by refusing to commit to deadlines that would have held our world leaders accountable? Any teacher or student will say that deadlines are necessary to ensure progress. We know that. And yet this administration would rather continue to allow people to live in unsanitary and unhealthy and unthinkable conditions in the name of flexibility.

During this past week, we heard repeatedly from U.S. officials that actions speak louder than words. If our actions are truly commendable and beneficial, why does this administration fear committing to sustainable development not only in action but in clear words and statements? There must be some form of accountability. No longer can we live without the understanding that this is a global society and we have to work together with real plans and real goals and real accountability to ensure that development is sustainable, not just in this country, in the U.S., but in the entire world. We have a responsibility.

The world's scientists predict that the Earth's temperature could rise by a global average of 6 degrees celsius by the year 2100. This reality demands action now; and 10 years ago at the Rio conference, many new initiatives and goals were put forward, and at this conference there were only two instances where we set a true goal. Number one, by 2015 we committed cutting in half the proportion of people who did not have access to basic sanitation. Number two, we established greater marine-protected networks. And in every case existing commitments were either reaffirmed, watered down, or altogether trashed.

When are we going to get serious about solving the problems of sustainable development? The goal of the summit was to implement a vision for a healthier and more sustainable future; but it fell far short, and now our country risks falling behind our competitors who will develop innovative and profitable and clean and efficient technologies, but where does that leave us? Where does that leave the United States?

It is time for this administration to start focusing on sustainable development.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, we have also been joined this evening by the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR), my colleague from Carmel/Monterey, a gorgeous district in California. I have been impressed since the day I first came to Congress with the Congressman's deep appreciation for the environment and the leadership that he has provided, whether it is for scenic highways, coastal conservation, understanding the role that sustainable agriculture plays, and was host to the first White House conference on the oceans.

I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR) for comments on the world environmental summit.

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER), my colleague and good friend, for yielding; and I want to congratulate him and my other congressional colleagues who went to Johannesburg, South Africa. While he was in South Africa, I had the privilege of being in his beautiful State, in fact in his district of Portland, Oregon; and I can tell my colleagues that indeed the western United States and particularly Oregon is one of the most beautiful States in the United States; and I would recommend to everybody who wants to see spectacular scenery and uncrowded highways just to visit that great State.

My colleagues all came together in Johannesburg about 2 weeks ago to address the global issues that exist at the intersection of economic development and environmental sustainability. I happen to be very keenly interested in the outcome of that because my district that my colleague just mentioned is the salad bowl center of the world and we cannot continue to produce fresh fruits and vegetables if we do not have a clean environment, clean water, clean air; and we know that from our interest in trying to develop small business economy through tourism and ecotourism that indeed the environment sells. Well, the environment cannot sell and cannot be there for small businesses if it is dirty.

My colleagues all went to Johannesburg to declare along with other countries the commitment to making the Earth cleaner, a more healthy place for humans and all living creatures; and I, following the press article, I was struck by how many poor Nations, who could least afford to send representatives from their government and non-government organizations, but indeed did hope that they could persuade the richer countries to help them grow their economies in socially and environmentally sustainable ways.

I think one of the most positive outcomes of the summit was the agreement by all nations to begin managing the marine resources with an ecosystem approach and to restore fish stocks to sustainable levels by the year 2015. I pledge to continue to work with the U.S. and all nations to make these goals and reverse the devastating trends in pollution and overfishing that we see in the oceans all over the world.

I was shocked, as my colleague's comments pointed out, and I am sad to say that I believe that our administration remains blinded to these issues; and I think it remains blinded because they really have not listened beyond the short-term special interests, corporate interests in America.

Let me tell my colleagues that I represent the State of California and chair the Democratic delegation in that State. Look at California. I mean, we have that comment here that sort of anything but California, but indeed, California is a nation-state. It is 33 million people. It is the fifth largest economy in the world. It is the most diversified in businesses, everything from Hollywood to Silicon Valley to agriculture. It was the leading agriculture State; and it goes on and on and on.

Yet this State that is such an economic engine, which has more cars, more people to consume energy, more air conditioners, more houses, more buildings to heat and cool, more of everything, has created policies in that State, political policies, that are implemented and carried out. The bottom line is that California consumes the least energy per capita of any State in the United States.

Why am I saying this? Because if the U.S. remains unwilling to truly come to the global negotiating table, strong commitments toward such efforts as reducing the emission of greenhouse gases and urging a change of the way from an unsustainable pattern of consumption and production, then California is going to suffer, the businesses of California. Why? Because in business there is a need to have fairness, and fairness essentially is a question of certainty.

If one is going to take capital and put it into something at risk, they want enough certainty that they are going to be able to get a return for their investment. That is what California businesses do every single day. Only the balance of that certainty is shifted away because the Federal Government fails to take a lead in leveling the playing field, which means, really, upgrading the playing field so that California, which is doing things that are environmentally very sensitive, gets treated wrongly in this town. It hurts all the small businesses who are not able to compete on a level playing field, and it certainly hurts our big corporations.

Are they going to the State legislature and asking the State to repeal all these tough environmental laws in California? Absolutely not. In fact, our national leadership should be championing the leadership of cleaning up the pollution. This administration should be acknowledging the leadership of California Governors. When we look at them, Republicans and Democrats alike, Republican Governor George Deukmejian; a Republican, Governor Pete Wilson; and now Governor Gray Davis, who just signed the toughest automobile car sequestration emission standards in the world.

That is the kind of leadership that American people are asking for. Was it easy to do politically? Absolutely not. Everybody who was in the automobile industry opposed it; and yet California has the largest automobile sales, the largest consumption of automobiles in the United States.

Why was it accomplished? Because it really was the right thing to do. California really wants to move towards sustaining itself internally on energy and making sure that energy is clean. We are the leader of wind energy; we are the leader of solar energy; we are the leader in geothermal energy; we are the leader in biomass production. All of these alternatives, which show that we can meet these really tough standards and still make a profit, I think ought to be recognized.

Business really needs fairness at the national level, an equal playing field; and I ask this administration, I ask the President of the United States, to help bring up the rest of the Nation to California standards, to recognize, as the leaders in California, ought to be praising Governor Davis. But because it is an election year and people are sensitive about partisanship and the President is a Republican and the Governor is a Democrat, that instead of praising him for doing the right things, there is a criticism going on and that criticism is just unjustified when we look at the voices that were in Johannesburg and what they were saying.

They want this Nation to join California, to be more like California, so that together we can lead the world, not drag the world down, which is the image that we had in Johannesburg.

I am absolutely thrilled that members of the legislative branch, the checks and balance system that we have in our Constitution, were able to go to Johannesburg and to indicate to the delegates that not everybody in the United States was against setting some really tough global standards and to providing the money and capital and leadership to move the world in that way. I am thrilled that my colleagues and others, including, I see, the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN) is here, people that ought to be thanked by the American people for their commitment to making sure that the world understands that we in the United States are trying to, in Congress, invest moneys in developing appropriate technologies so that those technologies can be applied in the developing countries around the world so that they can indeed have a clean, healthy environment to raise their children in.

I thank my colleagues for representing us at the world summit and thank them for having this colloquy tonight.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I appreciate the gentleman's attendance and his focusing on the leadership, for instance, that has happened now in California dealing with more fuel-efficient cars. I think it is clear that the American public would have responded, if Congress and the administration, when we were dealing with an energy bill, would have stepped forward to produce similar standards on a national level to reduce our reliance on fossil fuels, to protect the environment, to reduce greenhouse gases has ultimately saved the taxpayer money.

The gentleman referenced our being joined this evening by our colleague, the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN). Let me just say that one of the positive aspects of this conference, for me, was watching men and women from around the world who were policymakers and who understand the need to protect the environment come together. I had the privilege of watching our colleague from Maine participate in an organization called GLOBE, Global Legislators Organized for a Balanced Environment, and I am pleased to say that the United States Congress was well represented in a bipartisan fashion.

I think the international president, or chair, is our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD), who was eloquent on several occasions in pointing out that there is some bipartisan support for improving environmental standards. The national chair is the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), and the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN) chaired some interesting negotiations with representatives from a dozen different countries around the world dealing with renewable energy.

I am pleased that the gentleman is here. I am pleased to have watched him in action provide some leadership in Johannesburg on behalf of not just the United States but parliamentarians from around the world, and I would be honored if the gentleman would join in this discussion at this point.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and it certainly was true that being in Johannesburg for the time we were there was a very interesting experience. My colleague mentioned the meeting I chaired on renewable energy, and that in itself was an eye opener, I guess I would say, because we had around the table several representatives from Japan, two from Slovenia, two from Sweden, one from Thailand, one from the Philippines, one from Uruguay, and I am sure some others. It was a cross-section of nations large and small from really all around the globe. South Africa was included as well.

The interesting thing, to me, is how much different countries are trying to make sure that these international goals that are being talked about more elsewhere than here in the United States somehow fit their own countries and their own experience. And that is basically what you would expect. But what is true, I think, from this experience and from others is that most other countries realize that the climate is changing fast; that it is due to human emissions, carbon emissions in particular, and that, and this is where the United States is not following, that we need to do something about it. We need to do something fairly serious quickly. It is clear that the Europeans are taking the lead in a number of renewable energy technologies, wind and solar and small hydro and others, and we are being left behind.

I happened to go to an exhibit by BMW, where they were describing an engine that can run both on gasoline or alternatively on hydrogen, and they were arguing that this kind of internal combustion engine that can run on hydrogen is a transition to a hydrogen future. One of the problems is that, of course, if we are going to have cars that run on hydrogen, and in fact where the by-product is not carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, or whatever, but water, where you could get to zero emissions quickly, we do not have a lot of hydrogen filling stations around this country or in Europe. And they were talking about this as a way to do a transition.

Mr. FARR of California. If the gentleman would yield. I am very curious about the gentleman's discussions. We spend a lot of time here in the House of Representatives and on the floor arguing trade issues, and obviously issues come up about trade sanctions. When the gentleman looked at the commitment that people were making in South Africa, did he get any feeling that we may be isolating ourselves from future markets because our standards are not good enough, our automobiles are not clean enough; and, therefore, they are not going to allow them to be sold in those countries; that our other exports of our machinery does not meet high enough standards to be marketed in those countries, and that we are really shutting off our ability to do trade?

Even though a lot of times the brainpower for that technology really rests in the United States, it is just that we have not had a commitment to investing that brainpower in the tools that can be incorporated in our polluting instruments.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no doubt that the gentleman is right. A couple of things. It is clear that the EU legislature and individual European countries are setting higher standards. They are setting some standards. They are setting higher standards, obviously, than the Federal Government here for carbon emissions. And the result is that they are triggering the need to do a substantial amount of research and development in renewable fuels, in ways of converting to new fuels, and to having more renewable technologies.

I think it is likely, based on what I heard in Johannesburg, that Europe is going to go roaring by the United States when it comes to developing new technologies of this kind. That is going to leave us, in the long run, at a disadvantage in the European market. And when carbon restrictions come in this country, as they surely will, it will leave U.S. automakers and others really behind the 8 ball.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Could I just interject for a moment? Because I enjoyed touring that exhibit with the gentleman from Maine by BMW, and it did strike several chords. One, to the point made by our colleague from California, we are already being foreclosed by certain market segments. Next year, there are three hybrid vehicles that consumers can choose from, all made in Japan. And they have a waiting list for them. People want them. They are in my colleague's district, in my district, and it is a little frustrating to see that.

We have, however, American automakers who are meeting the standards, the higher standards in Europe. They are meeting the 40-mile-per-gallon fleet standard. They are having to contend with that. They are competing in the European market already. But they are somehow feeling that they cannot impose those higher standards here at home. And I find that a little frustrating.

And I know that the gentleman's point is right. In the long run, to the extent to which we resist that, we are going to lose business, not just internationally but we are going to lose business here at home.

Mr. FARR of California. Well, it is rather embarrassing, if not shameful, that our country that is always sort of championed as being in a leadership role of higher quality, of better standards, of caring for living things, protection of species, and so on, would be so negative about in this race for to clean up the planet; that we are not at the front of the parade.

It is embarrassing for me from a State that is trying to be at the front of the parade but not having any cooperation from the Federal Government to keep us up there or to encourage us to go further by bringing the rest of the Nation up to those levels.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. If I could make one last point, then turn it back to my colleague from Maine. Just following up on that, in that session that the gentleman from Maine chaired, we were joined by a friend of ours from Great Britain, a member of parliament, Tony Coleman, who pointed out that in Great Britain in the 1990s, they made the transition from dirty coal-fired power plants to cleaner gas power plants to generate electricity.

We in the United States, if we, instead of as the administration is suggesting, undercutting the new source review and dealing with the requirement of our own Clean Air Act for these dirty power plants that are having a devastating effect on my colleague's State, amongst others, we would just deal with the spirit and the letter of the law, clean up those power plants, we would reduce our emissions to the level that we had in 1990 and be well on our way to meeting the Kyoto protocols.

Mr. ALLEN. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I do not think people realize that one-third of all carbon emissions in this country come from these old coal-fired and oil-fired power plants that are grandfathered under the Clean Air Act. If we just bring them up to new source review standards, we will do an enormous amount to improve the carbon emissions situation in this country. That is probably the easiest step to take. It is probably the first step that we will take at some point to deal with these old power plants, and it makes no sense to keep putting it off.

I thought it was interesting, the meeting that GLOBE held. They had all sorts of meetings. In fact, GLOBE was a very active organization in Johannesburg. They did a terrific job. But the meeting I was chairing was all about the most controversial topic in Johannesburg, which is whether we should set targets and timetables for renewable energy.

Right now, globally, renewable energy sources, as defined by the U.N., represent about 2 percent of all power generated in the world. And the question was should we move to a target of getting, as I recall, a 10 percent increase by 2020 over the 2 percent that was applicable today and in 2000. It was a major goal but an achievable goal. At least the rest of the world thought it was achievable.

But it struck me that the problem the United States has, and particularly the Bush administration right now, is we cannot argue for a position to be adopted internationally if we are not willing to advocate for that position at home. And the fact is that the President's Clear Skies Initiative, so-called Clear Skies Initiative, basically would reduce carbon emissions in this country by about as much as if we did nothing at all.

Carbon emissions are continuing to go up, but they are going up slightly less than they did in the past. Under the President's proposal, they will continue to go up at a significant rate but slightly less than they did in the past. The rest of Europe, the Japanese, and countries in Africa and in South America, are saying what good does that do? You have to first stabilize the emissions; stop them from growing. And that is really what we need to do.

So that was a tremendous point of contention throughout Johannesburg. The U.S. never gave in. They never agreed to any targets or timetables. But I believe that the reason is clear: The President has basically said global warming is a problem. Adjust to it. And that is not the kind of response that the rest of the world believes is responsible.

Mr. FARR of California. It certainly does not demonstrate leadership. There is no way anyone can take the United States position and argue that we are a leader in this field.

I think we have been a leader in bringing about the consciousness of global pollution and admitting that we are, as tremendous consumers of our material goods, leading the world in pollution. And we have been a leader in recognizing that we have to do something about it, but that has always been initiated more by local communities and States. There has been sort of an attitude in America that you think globally and act locally. And certainly that has been the response coming out of the West, and I think out of my colleague's State of Maine as well.

The frustration that I have experienced in my political life has been that without leadership we do not get commitment of research dollars, of essentially those key dollars or those lending programs through international banks.

Attention was brought to me by a constituent who actually worked out the technology with a lot of firms, none of which were American companies, on how we could reduce all oil dependence on all the islands around the world. All of the islands do not produce oil, so they have to ship it in. It is very costly. Yet they are surrounded by two things; they are surrounded by sun and they are surrounded by saltwater. If we could use the sun to convert the saltwater, one, we get fresh water for the island, which, in addition, could be used for mariculture, so we could start growing fish products onshore that would have global markets as well as a domestic market; and, two, we reduce the independence of having to ship this oil. Hawaii is a good example in our country. And we have a by-product of clean water and an energy source.

That is very expensive to do; and the first time it is done, it is not cost effective. There is no profit. There needs to be a risk, and usually those kinds of risks are taken by government loans and subsidies, but we have to get it started.

I wonder if there was any discussion in Johannesburg about how to get the money in place to do some of these absolutely essential things.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. We met with business people, governments, and with academicians from around the world; and it does not seem that this is something that should be beyond our capacity.

First, the simple fact is that the future of energy in some way is going to deal with solar energy. In 1 hour, the sun radiates as much energy as the world consumes in a year with all of its fossil fuels. Being able to advance the technology, which is moving forward, to be able to harness virtually an unlimited supply of energy for the Earth's needs seems to be a top priority.

We had advocated, all of us in the U.S. delegation, Members of Congress from both parties, suggested there be one simple step, that when we have all of these export credit agencies, OPEC, the World Bank, Ex-Im, that there be a commitment that 10 percent of the energy facilities be renewables. We could do that with the stroke of a pen. It would move forward, help jump-start this. Sadly, that was resisted.

The goal of 15 percent by 2015 seems to be within our grasp if we use opportunities like this. But both gentlemen have been talking about United States leadership. I am frustrated that the United States steps back and uses excuses in lieu of leadership. In that session that the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN) chaired, there was a minister from India, and we point out that the United States consumes 36 times the energy and has 36 times the greenhouse gas emissions than the average Indian. The average citizen of India emits one-sixth of the greenhouse gases of the world average, whereas the United States emits six times the world average, 25 percent for less than 5 percent of the world's population. Yet somehow the administration feels that this desperately poor country of India that is emitting less than one-thirtieth of the greenhouse gases than we are, somehow they should step up and assume leadership. I think it is an abrogation of our responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I appreciated the way the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN) guided that forward to have a resolution that was approved by these parliamentarians unanimously.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, his point is an excellent one. One thing that we need to do more of with both China and India, they are going to be using some coal. Both have supplies of coal. They are developing their economies faster than other countries around the world, both are in different ways. But the best technology we have for clean coal use we ought to be making sure gets transferred to the Chinese and the Indians so they can do the best they can in holding down emissions.

I want to say a couple of other things about the U.S. position. It struck me that the problem was not that the United States did nothing, but that our reach was so short. By rejecting any effort to set targets and timetables for getting to more renewable energy, we were basically sitting back on the primary issue before the conference.

I would say the administration took several positions. They said we want to establish partnerships, partnerships between governments and the private sector and the nonprofit sector. Many of them were rolled out, and many of them I think are going to make a contribution. There is nothing wrong with a proposal for partnerships that deal with some of these environmental issues. The administration was also saying that we need to insist on good governance because so often aid money has been wasted when it goes to governments that are corrupt or inefficient; and that, too, makes good sense. But, it fell so far short of what the expectations were around the world, and I think in many quarters here in the United States.

It was only right near the end of the conference, probably a day before I left, which was the day before Colin Powell spoke, that we actually agreed to one target which had to do with sanitation, trying to move and I do not remember the exact number, but to cut in half the number of people living without sanitary and sewage facilities around the globe by 2020. But there was a case where at last, after a lot of negotiation, the U.S. finally came around to the position that the rest of the world had arrived at a long time before, and we were the lingering hold-out.

I just want to make one more point about the mood. At a number of different meetings, I got the sense that we do face a crisis. Sustainable development is more than the environment. In fact, it is more than the economy of a country plus its environment. It also involves how people are living and whether they have a standard of living that is appropriate and one that is reasonable for them to expect given the circumstances of that country. In other words, sustainable development to the rest of the world has an economic component, an environmental component, and a social component. Often here in the United States we kind of leave out that social component, perhaps because we are at least generally the wealthiest country in the world. But it did seem to me that there was a sense both in a meeting that I went to on Latin America and in some of the conversations on Africa that this globalizing system, this growing uniformity of financial structures in developing countries, was not working very well for ordinary people.

In too many countries around the world which have been forced to open their markets both to goods and capital from other countries, they have found that the capital that comes rushing in can go rushing out just as fast; and they are concerned that their economies are not growing. They are stagnating. In Eastern Europe, after the breakup of the Soviet Union, in Africa, even Latin America, the rates of growth have been negative or so slow as to cause serious social problems.

Mr. Speaker, that is a component of this debate that needs to be addressed; and I think it needs to be addressed by making sure that when we set policies, whether trade policies or aid policies, we are doing things that empower people at the grass roots in countries so they can go out and make a living and start a business and have the kind of economic growth that we have experienced so often in this country.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, one of the things that concerned me was that we seem in the more developed countries to have a blind spot towards that equity, and there did seem to be a dual standard.

There was a fascinating meeting which discussed the devastating impact that the more advanced countries' agricultural policies have on poor countries. All three of us had deep reservations about the agriculture bill that passed on this floor and was signed into law by the President just a couple of months ago.

But the European Union, for example, is ignoring its own egregious agricultural practices, which are actually worse than ours. For instance, poor countries in Africa were denied access to the European sugar market where prices are kept artificially high, some three times the world price, to deal with the sugar beet industry in Europe. Poor countries cannot have access to that market; and the Europeans are producing so much that they are dumping that sugar on the world market, undercutting the poor sugar farmers in Africa, much like corn from the United States is going to Mexico and driving poor farmers out of business in Mexico. And our farmers are getting rich subsidies from our government. It costs them more to produce than they get from the market, and the surplus is dumped overseas.

Yet we have aggressive policies to try to force some of the poor countries to open their markets to protect intellectual property I understand, to protect capital I understand, to protect drug patents; and sometimes it is less understandable why we do not do more to protect poor countries, and yet we hammer them with our inconsistent, and I would be prepared to argue, improper agricultural policies that are bad for the taxpayer, bad for the environment, and bad for most farmers and end up devastating poor farmers around the world.

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I think what turns that around is leadership. Leadership needs to be provided to get us out of the broken modality.

I think back to the years when I was a Peace Corps volunteer and had no resources except the people. They did not want to necessarily be American consumers and have all these goods, because they could not afford them; but they wanted a better life-style. What I think they wanted from the leadership was how can we have a better life-style without having to pay the price of pollution. They would say we live in pollution and streets that do not have sewers. We live in houses that do not have clean water, or any water at all. We live in houses that have no electricity, or if we have it, it is very weak because it is borrowed from what they call contraband electricity.

They were not asking for more bad, more ugly, more evil; they were asking how do we use the smart technologies in the United States. And I think we have done that on a couple of examples. For example, cell phones, a great technology, have eliminated a need to wire everything. Those things are very, very costly; and we are using a technology where satellites can help us communicate all over the globe. That has a social impact. It allows people access to information, and we do not necessarily have to build poles. Look at how if we could tear down all of the power lines in the United States how much more attractive many communities would be if they did not have all of those wires hanging everywhere.

My experience has been to lead us into the appropriate technology that is necessary for us to be in this world. The gentleman mentioned corn in Mexico. The one thing that the Mexican farmers are doing is they are starting to grow organic. Where is the organic market in the United States? They do not have to buy a lot of expensive fertilizers and get into the expensive infrastructure to compete with America. They have cheap labor. Organic farming is labor intensive. It takes more people to produce a crop than just doing it with chemicals.

There were examples of where American technology, American ingenuity can help countries overcome some of their pollution problems. I think what we have not demonstrated in this country is the will, the political will, the leadership that it takes to move forward.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's recognizing the struggle that there was in Johannesburg with trying to defend America.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Does the gentleman from Maine have some concluding thoughts?

Mr. ALLEN. Just a few. One of the interesting things I found in Johannesburg is people look at us the same way that we look at other countries. That is, we look at the policies set by the current administration, whether it is Britain or France or Germany, Russia, wherever, as being sort of the beginning and end of opinion on that subject in that country. And I think that one function that the six of us served who were over there is that we had a different view from the current administration, and that seemed to be of great comfort to a lot of people, that we were having a debate in this country, that it was not simply the case that people in the United States were saying, "No, we're putting our head in the sand. We're pretending that climate change isn't going on. We've decided to adapt somehow."

I do not know about you, but in my State, every summer is warmer than the last. We used to have snow all the time at Christmas. Now it is relatively rare. The changes are visible to most people even though they are hard to quantify. But when you look at them, when you look at the numbers, and I can take one State, Alaska. In the last 30 years the average temperature in Alaska has increased by 5.4 degrees. That is an enormous increase. In many places the permafrost is melting, the roads are sagging, trees are tipping over, buildings have less secure foundations. It is leading to dramatic changes.

I just think that what we have got to do here at home, those of us who believe this is a serious problem that needs to be dealt with, is keep urging our friends and colleagues to take this issue seriously, because as soon as you take climate change seriously, a whole set of things follow. You have to have an increasing emphasis on renewable energy of all kinds, small hydro, wind, solar, fuel cells and all of those technologies. I suspect that all of the estimates of cost are a little out of whack, because what we are saying is, with the right commitment, we are going to stimulate new technologies, the development of new technologies, the implementation of new technologies that will give an additional boost to significant parts of our economy. The rest of the world understands that. That was evident at Johannesburg. It is time we caught up with the rest of the world.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I appreciate the gentleman's comments. I appreciate the leadership that he developed. I know it was not easy, having witnessed a little tiny bit of his Maine summer the week before, I do not know how hard it was for him to fly halfway around the world for a couple of days, but I think the conference was better for it and I deeply appreciate his willingness to do so. I must say that at the summit, I was encouraged by some other people that we encountered, where some of the hypocrisy of some of the richer countries, they were taken to task by well-organized and articulate poor people, by representatives of nongovernmental organizations, by a growing consensus of elected leaders like the gentleman helped guide dealing with renewable energy. We saw business step forward to embrace the challenge of the Kyoto Protocol.

The gentleman from Maine and I went to Abutu village where there were spectacular exhibits, one that was managed in part by the Smithsonian, that had a number of United States agencies that told a lot about the environment. But if you looked at that exhibit, and we walked through the exhibit tent, including the Department of Energy and NOAA and EPA, the Department of the Interior, there was no information on global warming, on climate change. None. But if you went next door to the exhibit of BP, British Petroleum, there they had information. There you had an international corporation that has sometimes had its problems with the environmentalists, but they have a saying, "BP stands for Beyond Petroleum." They have made a corporate commitment to meet the Kyoto protocols as a corporation. We found that the World Business Council for Sustainable Development joined in the fight for a real target for investment in renewable energy. We had citizen advocates and nongovernmental organizations that were effective in holding governments accountable. They were able to cut through the secrecy and the backroom deals. They provided us with the best information about what was actually occurring, who was doing what. I think it is important to note that their reactions were anything but knee jerk. I think they were very sophisticated in terms of their analysis of trade, environmental practices, the impact on our globe as well as proposing simple, commonsense solutions that are actually within our power to implement. I personally came away from that summit surprisingly encouraged.

Yes, at times the problems seemed overwhelming: 325 million children not in school; 1.1 billion people without clean water; 2.4 billion without adequate sanitation. Yet amazingly progress is possible in sanitation, water supply, affordable housing and agriculture. The citizens from around the world and business leaders are moving in that direction. It is clear that we have the know-how, the skill to change current destructive practices and teach people how to help themselves. I was stunned by the potential resources that are within our grasp. For what Americans spend on cosmetics every year, we could largely meet the target for sanitation, saving millions of lives each year and promoting a more stable world. By reforming our costly, environmentally damaging farm programs, we could help poor farmers around the world while we protect the U.S. taxpayer, the environment and our family farmers, cleaning up, as we mentioned, the dirty coal plants as required by the Clean Air Act in this country, and I salute the gentleman from Maine's leadership to try to make sure the United States does something about it, would put us on track to meet the Kyoto goals. Simply by doing what we know how to do, spending money more wisely, following our own environmental laws and heeding the wishes of the public, we can save the planet.

The world summit, I feel, was an important step in pulling these pieces together and making them a reality. The United States is the world's richest country. As its biggest polluter, it has a special obligation and responsibility to address these global environmental issues. I assure you that I am willing to work with you to make sure that we in Congress move in that direction.

Did the gentleman from California have any concluding thoughts?

Mr. FARR of California. I just want to thank the gentleman. I would love to see the leadership, the political leadership, elected leadership and the administration, would it not be wonderful if the electricity on the President of the United States' ranch was totally generated by solar power and that the vehicles that were driven on that ranch or were used were these hybrid vehicles as other countries have had. That is the kind of leadership. We need to demonstrate by our own actions as I have at home by using solar power to generate energy in my piece of property down on the Big Sur coast. That is the kind of leadership I think that the people are asking for, is demonstrate by your own use. My wife wants to get for our next car a hybrid car. I think each one of us can do our part. But at the same time we have to look and commend those areas, as I said, like California that has really moved on a huge scale to convert 33 million people into being energy-conscious, and to being environmentally sensitive.

I want to thank the gentleman for representing our Nation's viewpoint in the global conference in South Africa. I appreciate him and our other colleagues in this House attending that.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I thank the gentleman from California. When we talk about leading by example in energy efficiency, does the gentleman from Maine have any experience?

Mr. ALLEN. I have done the same thing with a vacation property I have in Maine, which is convert to solar power. It is absolutely wonderful. We all need to take whatever steps we can. The gentleman from Oregon referred to the hybrid cars that exist. I do understand that Ford next year is going to come out with a hybrid. I have not seen it yet, but I understand they are working on one. It may be out next year. So there are going to be opportunities for the American public to save energy, save money and contribute to making this a cleaner planet.

I thank the gentleman very much for organizing this special order.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I thank the gentleman for joining me.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER
AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 5319

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 5319. The record should reflect that the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) was intended to be an original cosponsor of H.R. 5319.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado? There was no objection.

THE IRAQI SITUATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERGUSON). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I found the previous speakers' comments interesting. In part their comments were accurate, but I should point out that when we talk about the Kyoto treaty, what they should bring to the attention of the body is that when it was voted on by the United States Senate, the vote was 99-0. 99-0. That was not all Republicans, that was Democrats and Republicans combined in the United States Senate. Not one vote in favor of that so-called treaty. Why? Because that treaty unfairly assaulted the United States of America.

Obviously we as elected representatives of this country want to stand in front of this body and stand in front of the American public and commit to do things that are better. We can do a lot more to conserve, everybody in this country, in this world, can do more to conserve and, frankly, conservation right now is going to get us a lot further than my colleague's suggestion that the President of the United States convert his ranch in Texas to solar power. Conservation is the answer right now. In the long run, solar power, in the long run energy from waves, in the long run energy from other sources is what is going to be the answer, but in the short time, sitting here and condemning the United States of America as some people might do or feeling that the United States of America should hang its head low is wrong. The leading technologies in the world on environmental control, on assisting us with stopping pollution, on making coal cleaner burning and so on, without a doubt the leading technologies in the world are developed by the scientists in the United States of America. There is no other country in the world that has helped more other countries with their environmental problems, assisting them, sending them financial aid, doing anything we can to assist, than the United States of America.

The United States of America has nothing to apologize about. The United States of America is committed to do things better. But I for one am tired of seeing foreign country after foreign country after foreign country bash the United States of America. And we see it come to this floor. Some of our colleagues, while well intended, seem to get up here and become apologists for the greatest country in the history of the world. This country, the United States of America, has fought for other countries, has gone overseas more than any other country in the history of the world to fight not for American land but to fight for other people in this world.

Who do you think led the battle in Bosnia? Who do you think got communism out of Europe? You can go to example after example after example. It is the United States of America. To see some of my colleagues, or to see people stand up and continually bash the United States and put a spin on it is discouraging.

Take a look at Berkeley University. I cannot even imagine. There is an actual debate at Berkeley University on the commemoration for September 11, whether they should allow red, white and blue to be worn. Not a flag, just the colors red, white and blue, whether they should be allowed to be worn on campus because it might offend somebody. The American flag might offend somebody, so maybe we ought to take it down. Come on. Give me a break. Patriotism in this country today is still very strong. This country has got a lot more things going right for it than it does wrong. This country will stand head to head with any other nation, not just existing nations today, but look in the history of the world, and I challenge my colleagues, look in the history of the world to find one nation that has done as much as this Nation has done for the poor people in the world, for hungry people in the world, gone to the defense of many, many nations in the history of the world, educated more people than any other country in the world, educated them to a higher level than any other country in the world.

And what is the biggest export of this country that no other country can match? In fact, cumulatively, if you put all the history of the countries together in the world, they do not even come close to exporting what the United States of America exports as its biggest item. What is that item? It is freedom. The United States of America has broken the ice. It has taken the lead. It has put the footprints in the sand for freedom. And we see that some of our citizens for some reason act ashamed of being an American. The beauty of freedom is that they can always move. If the beauty of this country is so bad that you do not think it can be improved or you think that you have to continually criticize this Nation, go somewhere else.

I am one of those people that likes to look at the good things that this Nation does. Look what this Nation has done for the world in the development of medicine, in the development of vaccinations, in the fight against cancer. We can go down a list of a thousand different items. You pick the items. And amongst the very top of doing positive things, of doing good things, is the United States of America.

Many times, many times the United States of America, when nobody else would stand up, it is the United States of America that ends up standing up. It is the United States of America that is the first one out of the foxhole, and it has not come without cost.

Many years ago, remember when the United States put weapons on European soil to stop the Russian Communist machine from moving in? And not all the students, but a bunch of student protests were organized, frankly organized by professionals in Europe; and the European leaders got pretty fragile, and I understand it. They were under a lot of pressure, get American troops off European soil. Americans go home. Americans, you are not welcome. The doctrine of appeasement. Communism is not going to take us. Communism, Americans are trying to over-exaggerate the situation.

In fact it went to the state where de Gaulle calls Johnson, gets Johnson on the phone. "Mr. President," he says, "I want all American troops off European soil." And, as the story goes, President Johnson replies to Mr. de Gaulle, "Mr. de Gaulle, does that include all of the American troops buried beneath your soil?"

America is a great country, but, once again, as we speak today, America will be called to a great task, a task not only brought to light by the events of 1 year ago on September 11, but a task that because of our strength, because of our capability to lead, the United States must answer the call; and it is not a small task, it is a great task, to which we have been called.

We have got to go out, and we have got to stop the proliferation amongst terrorists, amongst mad people, of these types of weapons that they are currently right now underneath our noses and in many cases with the knowledge of the world developing. So this evening I really want to focus my comments on our situation with the al Qaeda, and our situation with Iraq.

I do not know how many Members saw the headline today, what the al Qaeda said in the last few days, or at least it has now come to our attention. Pay very careful attention. Please, if you are doing something out there, colleagues, put it down. All I want, if you do not listen to anything else I say this evening, if you do not listen or do not remember anything else I say this evening, give me 15 seconds. That is all I am asking you for, 15 seconds. If this does not shake you up, I do not know what will. Give me 15 seconds.

This is the quote from the al Qaeda. For those of you colleagues out there, here is your 15 seconds. Take 15 seconds to look at this poster.

Let me read it. I was stunned when I saw this; not surprised, but stunned. Let us go through it. This is the al Qaeda, the leadership of the al Qaeda. This is not directed at the U.K.; it is not directed at France. It is directed at the United States of America, and, in turn, when it is focused on the United States of America, to our good friends overseas. And we have many allies overseas, and we have good allies overseas.

Do not be mistaken. Just because they are at the door of America's kindergartens today does not mean that they will not be at the door of your kindergartens tomorrow.

Look at what this says. This is why I want this 15 seconds: "We are emerging stronger, and we will hit America. We will hit America's shopping malls, their stadiums and kindergartens. This is our promise. Al Qaeda."

As I go on with my remarks this evening, I want to build a case for some of my constituents and for some of my colleagues who wonder whether or not we should not just kind of look the other way when it comes to the situation in Iraq.

Keep in mind that Iraq and the al Qaeda are comrades in arms. These people have one very strong common bond: they want to see the destruction of every man, woman and child, and keep in mind, child, kindergartners, of America. And when they are done with America, they will want to see the destruction of every man, woman and child in Canada. And when they are done with Canada, they will want to see it in France, and they will want to see it in the United Kingdom. They will want to see it wherever they can get it.

These people are mad people, but they are smart and they are intelligent. That is obvious by the strike they carried out against the United States.

This is a cancer we are dealing with. The people that speak like this, that carry out these acts, they are the equivalent of a horrible, fast-moving malignant cancer.

I spoke recently back in my district, and I said it is kind of like you are walking around and you go to the doctor, and the doctor says, "We just did an x-ray, and inside your foot, you do not feel it, but inside your foot our x-ray tells us that you have a malignant cancer that is developing and spreading very quickly."

You say to the doctor, "Doc, my foot feels fine. I do not feel anything in my foot. I really do not want to face cancer."

The doctor says, "Look, in trying to attack this cancer we may very well have to amputate your foot, which means you will never run again. It is going to be a severe interruption in your life. It is going to interrupt your financial status. It is going to have an impact psychologically on you. And the chemotherapy that may be necessary may have to be very aggressive, and it too will interrupt your lifestyle."

But you say to the doctor, "Doctor, I do not have any pain in my foot. I did not come in to see you about my foot. You show me this x-ray, but, I don't know, I am not feeling the pain. I am not feeling the pain. I do not know whether I want you to do what you say you have to do with my foot."

That is what we are dealing with here. We have got people in this country who say out of sight, out of mind. Do not be mistaken, Iraq is not an idle threat sitting out there. It is a very realistic threat that could happen today, it could happen tomorrow, or it could happen 5 years from now.

Saddam Hussein, keep in mind, I saw Bill O'Reilly tonight on TV, and Bill O'Reilly on TV was talking about a guy in jail in Texas that had allegedly killed 80 women, the most horrible criminal they have ever seen in their lives. Eighty women. It is a horrible person. All of us gasp at how horrible a person must be that commits these kind of murders. That is a serial killer. We all feel that way.

But, for some reason, when I talk to some about Saddam Hussein, when I listen to some of my colleagues, they hold that individual with higher esteem than they do serial killers within our own borders. And keep in mind what Saddam Hussein did. He invaded Kuwait. What did he do in Kuwait? They killed thousands of men, women and children in Kuwait in their invasion. His armies went in without provocation, and the reason his armies went in was to grab that oil in Kuwait.

And, once again, the country that I find more and more people apologizing for, or bashing, the United States of America is the one that led to the freedom and the liberation of Kuwait against a murderous tyrant, Saddam Hussein.

Keep in mind that it was Saddam Hussein for the first time, I think, and I am not a historian, a professor of history, but it was the first time I think that you had a coordinated assassination effort by the president of a country against the United States President.

Saddam Hussein, the evidence is absolutely clear, it was clear to the Clinton administration and it is clear to any law enforcement investigative agency, attempted to assassinate George Bush, Sr.; and it was only by a little luck that that assassination did not come off.

So we know that Saddam Hussein has killed thousands and thousands of men, women and children when he invaded Kuwait without provocation. That, standing alone, that standing alone ought to put him at the bottom of your list as far as respect or any kind of justification of why Saddam Hussein is still alive.

This guy is a bad guy. He is a malignant cancer out there. But Kuwait, if Kuwait is not enough, then take a look at what he tried to do to the President, our own President of this country, George Bush, Sr. If that is not enough, keep in mind our young men and women that are in the military, that are stationed in Turkey. Every day, almost every day of the week in the no-fly zones as designated by the United Nations, as agreed upon by Iraq, every day Iraq fires missiles at United States or allied aircraft in an attempt to destroy them. These aircraft are not flying out of their territory. They are flying within the territory designated as a no-fly zone by Iraq in joint agreement with United Nations. And yet for some reason people are reluctant to take out Saddam Hussein.

Look at the people within his own country that he gassed. Look at the Kurds. You can list example after example after example of how horribly evil, how malignant Saddam Hussein is and why we have got to do something.

We do not have any choice here; at least we do not have any viable choice. I guess we do have a choice. We can pretend that these weapons that they are developing, that they would have never used them or will never use them.

Frankly, I do not think Saddam Hussein, certainly if he had nuclear weapons today, and we know he has biological weapons, and I am going to read you some information about that here in a few minutes, I really do not think that Saddam would use them against the United States of America today. I think he would use them against Israel, but I do not think he would use them against the United States. He is no fool. He is a smart man. That is what I said earlier. He is a smart man. He knows that if he used them against the United States of America and the United States was able to track down, which we could probably do pretty quickly, as to where those weapons came from, who used them against us, that we have the weapon capability to destroy Iraq within minutes. So he is no fool. He does not want to see the United States of America retaliate with a massive, overwhelming attack that would destroy his country.

So do not think that Saddam Hussein will probably use the weapons himself. What he will do with these weapons is he will give them out. He will give them to the people like the al Qaeda, the people that swear that they are not done with America, that they are going after our kindergartens. Notice they do not say they are going after the military; notice they do not say they will engage in open warfare. They are going to go to the shopping malls, to the stadiums, and to the kindergartens.

The thing for me in Oklahoma City, what appalled me, the whole thing was horrible, a criminal act, but what was especially embedded in my memory of Oklahoma City was the fact that they had that preschool in there and Timothy McVeigh and his coconspirators, they did not care that there were small children in the Federal building in Oklahoma City. They killed those children without thought.

But that number was in the tens and tens. These numbers, if these people continue to develop the weapons and are given the weapons by people like Saddam Hussein, the next time they tally a hit against the kindergarten like we see in Oklahoma City, we will see numbers in the thousands and tens of thousands. New York City was 3,000; the Pentagon was a couple of hundred. Those casualties are stunning casualties, horrible, tragic; but the next time, their goal will be to add another comma to the fatalities, to the ravage that they wield upon the United States of America or upon our allies.

Now let me say that this problem of Saddam Hussein is not something that just came up under the Bush administration. I am amazed, frankly. And this is a bipartisan effort that we have to make. But I am amazed at the position that the Democratic party has taken. I am amazed at some of the leading Democrats in the United States Congress, the demands that they are making upon President Bush, the implications that they are making upon the President, that somehow he is some kind of wild Texas cowboy that wants to start a war.

I am going to go through what President Bill Clinton, their favorite President, the President most strongly supported by the liberal community, I am going to go through some quotes that President Clinton said several years ago about Saddam Hussein.

This is a very serious problem we are dealing with. I have never been more, I guess, in deep thought or sober about a situation than I am about the situation that we face today on the international circuit with the al Qaeda and with Iraq. I am stunned. Obviously, I do not disagree at all that the United States Congress, it is our obligation to be engaged in debate and to be engaged in the public policy, and to be engaged in the declaration of any type of war that this country might engage in.

So the comments that I am making are not whether or not we should have public debate in the United States Congress. I think that is good. What I am talking about this evening are how all of a sudden some of the individuals who stood right behind Bill Clinton and urged President Clinton, and these are Democrats, urged President Clinton to take immediate action to adopt a war resolution against Iraq, have done a complete reverse, saying, well, President Bush is going to have to answer a whole bunch of questions. We are not sure. Where is the justification for taking on Iraq? Where 3 or 4 years ago they were standing side by side, shoulder to shoulder, demanding that President Clinton and supporting him: We have to go into Iraq. We have to do something about that.

That is not stuff I am just making up. I have it right here. Let us go through it a little. This is probably an appropriate time. Let us look at President Clinton here.

President Clinton understood the threat then. Now, I think there has been a little spin put on it. I noticed that the other day the President said, or reported, and the President did not say it to me, I did not hear it from his mouth, but the President said if we were to take on Iraq, Saddam Hussein, that he, the President, that he does possess weapons, and the concern would be that he would use those weapons.

If we take that out logically, what we are saying is we should not go against Saddam because he might use these weapons. That is exactly the kind of leverage that Saddam Hussein wants to have with the rest of the world, the doctrine of nonproliferation.

And keep in mind, it was the liberals, and I am not trying to assail a particular affiliation, but there is a clear line here as to our ideas and our policies. It was the liberals that said, look, nonproliferation; let us hope this cancer goes away. Let us pray it away. Let us have peace throughout the world.

There are a lot of these countries out there that, unfortunately, no matter how much we pray, and I pray, and prayer is good, but no matter how much we pray, no matter how many hands we offer, no matter what we do, they are determined to wipe us off the face of the Earth. And it is not an idle threat. It was not an idle threat a year ago on September 11, and it will not be an idle threat a year from now.

We have to face up to the fact that there is a malignant cancer, no matter how much we pray, and it helps, and no matter how much we hope, no matter how well our neighbor talks to us and says, look, things are going to be all right, and they hold hands and we have lots of hugs and lots of tears and lots of love; people come up and say, we are going to help you, and all of that; that is all good, but the fact is that evil devil of malignant cancer is still in us, and that is the problem we have right here.

This kind of thing, this kind of thing right here, "We are emerging stronger, and we will hit America's shopping malls, stadiums, and kindergartens," that is a malignant cancer. We are not going to pray or hope that thought away. The only way we are going to be able to eliminate this threat is we have to take the fight to them.

Let us look at Bill Clinton's comments, the former President. I will read them: "What if Saddam Hussein fails to comply and we fail to act, or we take some ambiguous third route which gives him yet more opportunities to develop his programs of weapons of mass destruction, and continue to press for the release of sanctions, and continue to ignore the solemn commitments that he made? Well, he will conclude that the international community has lost its will. He will then conclude that he can go right on and do more to rebuild an arsenal of devastating destruction."

That was President Bill Clinton, February 18, 1998, 4 years ago; over 4 years ago; 4½ years ago those were the profound and well-spoken words, and right on point, of President Clinton. Does anybody in these Chambers believe that the capability, the destructive capability, of Saddam Hussein has reduced, has been reduced? Does anybody in here believe, really, truly in their hearts, that this madman has abandoned his weapons of mass destruction, which include chemical warfare and the attempt to get nuclear weapons?

We know in our hearts that he has not. We wish it were not true. Again, going to the example, we wish in our heart we did not have the cancer, we wish it was not true, we wish we were having a bad dream, and tomorrow morning we could wake up and it would be a bad dream, but it is reality. We have a commitment. We have a solemn commitment to the American people that we are willing and able to stand up to the great task which sits in front of us, and that great task, of course, is to secure the safety of not only this Nation but our allies, as well.

I know we are getting a lot of bashing by our allies, and we have a lot of allies that say, look, do it on your own. This is a dirty job. This is going to require some dirty work. We have some fair-weathered friends out there, but nonetheless, they are friends. They do not want to get their hands dirty. They do not want to get out there in the battlefield. They want the United States to do it.

If the United States does it alone and succeeds, we will be criticized for having done it on our own. But the reality of it is, somebody has got to do it. We cannot continue to let this cancer fester, because if we do, they are going to be successful. Knock on wood, and with the blessing of God, they have not hit our kindergarten yet. But Members know that is one of their targets. That is what they have told us. The statement is clear.

Let us go through some history here: "Administration rhetoric could hardly be stronger." This is an article, by the way, taken out of the Weekly Standard, the newsletter. "The President asked the Nation to consider this question." This is President Bill Clinton: "What if Saddam Hussein fails to comply, and we fail to act," as I said on the chart that I showed you, and this guy is allowed to continue.

This article goes on: "The President," again, referring to President Clinton, "His warnings are firm. If we fail to respond today, Saddam and all those who would follow in his footsteps will be emboldened tomorrow. The stakes," again, Bill Clinton, 4½ years ago on Iraq, "The stakes could not be higher."

This is a quote from Bill Clinton: "Some day, some way, I guarantee you he will use the arsenal." That is 4½ years ago, and our President ably and quite accurately recognized the threat. I can tell the Members that several of the leading Democrats, the Democrat leadership, got right behind the President in regard to the statement.

Yet those very leaders today are questioning President Bush: He is overreacting, he is overstating, he had better have the evidence to prove all of this. What a 360-degree or a 180-degree turn in the last 4½ years.

Let me continue on. Those are not the words of President George W. Bush in September of 2002, but of President Bill Clinton on February 18, 1998. Clinton was speaking at the Pentagon after the Joint Chiefs and other top national security advisors had briefed him on U.S. military readiness. The televised speech followed a month-long buildup of United States troops and equipment in the Persian Gulf, and it won applause from leading Democrats on Capitol Hill.

But just 5 days later, Kofi Annan, with the United Nations, struck yet another deal with the Iraqi dictator which once more gave the United Nations inspectors permission to inspect, and Saddam won again. Of course, much has changed since President Clinton gave that speech. The situation has gotten worse.

"Ten months after Saddam accepted Annan's offer, he kicked U.N. inspectors out of Iraq for good. We complained and the United States bombed a little. Then we stopped bombing. Later we stepped up our enforcement of the no-fly zones. A year after the inspectors were banished, the United Nations created a new toothless inspection regime. The new inspectors inspected nothing."

If Saddam Hussein was a major threat in February of 1998 when President Bill Clinton prepared this country for war, and United Nations inspectors were still inside Iraq, it stands to reason that in the absence of those inspectors monitoring this weapons buildup, that Saddam is even a greater threat today.

Now, keep in mind the history that we have seen with the Germans, for example, in World War I. The complaints that we see coming out of Iraq, oh, this is the proprietary area of our borders, for protection of our country; we should not be forced to have inspectors in the country; they are picking on poor old me; well, look at the arguments against inspections, although Germany agreed to it after World War I, as compared to what Saddam Hussein. And by the way, he has agreed to all of this. He signed a compact never to have these weapons in the history of his country.

But compare that back in history with after World War I, what the Germans did, and what the European response was to the Germans. It was a doctrine of, well, we are picking on him. We really should not be inspecting this country. We really ought to respect their borders. We ought to take them on their word, or make them promise. But U.S., you are exaggerating.

What was happening? The Germans were building up their gas munitions. We all know what happened a few years later when the Germans utilized these things. That is what is happening here, and that is what this article says.

The quotes that we have been giving, with the exception of this, this is not from 1998, this is very recent, but the quotes were from President Bill Clinton. He recognized the threat in 1998, and so did the Democratic leadership. Why is it that in 2002, the Democratic leadership is pretending as if none of this has occurred? They are making demands upon President Bush that they never made upon President Clinton.

I think every President has an obligation to their Nation, and I think they are constitutionally required to justify taking this country into a military action. After all, we are asking our sons and daughters to go in in defense of this country and to take an affirmative action against another country where the probability of loss of life is very high. We ought to meet the highest of standards.

But it is my position today, and I think it ought to be Members' positions, that those standards have been met for some time; that right underneath our nose we have a man who has cooperated with people like al Qaeda; a man who invaded another country and killed thousands and thousands of people; a leader, a man who poisoned and gassed his own people; a man who, almost on a daily basis, fires missiles against American and allied aircraft. We know what he is doing. We are meeting the standards that demand that America do something about this.

I would hope that our allies come on board. I would hope we get assistance from our allies. We cannot turn a blind eye to a malignant cancer, and we cannot turn a blind eye to Saddam Hussein.

You cannot do it. It will always come back to get you, and it will be your kindergartens that will suffer in the future if we do not respond affirmatively today.

Now does that mean we send in more inspectors? The only way you should send in more inspectors is on a time basis and those inspectors have unconditional entry into that country and they can go wherever they want in Iraq and do whatever kind of tests are necessary to run to ascertain that these weapons are, in fact, not in existence. I doubt seriously that that will occur.

Now, Iraq, by the way, may say, just to stall, they may say, okay, we will agree to it. But a week later you will find that there is a flat tire on the bus, that they are not going to let them go where they need to go. We cannot continue to fool around with this malignant cancer. We have got to sit up to reality. We have got to face reality. We have got to aggressively attack this cancer.

Now, I am not a military expert. I do not know what the military strategy should be. But I do know this, diplomatically we have not achieved the goal of concurring the cancer. It is like saying to a patient, I know you have prayed very hard about this. I know you have got a lot of family support in fighting this cancer. I know you have got a lot of hugs. I know that you have changed your diet. But the fact is the malignant cancer is still in your foot and it is aggressively moving up into the rest of your body. You face a very tough decision. It will inconvenience your life. But in the long run, it is the only decision for the preservation of your life that you can make, and that is that you have got to accept the reality that it is there, it is moving and it will kill you.

It is the same thing with Iraq. It is there. They are developing and have in their possession weapons of mass destruction and they will kill us. And if they do not attempt to kill us, they will give it to people like the al Qaeda that will carry this out. They do not care about our morality, values and our respect for our children and the preservation of life. That is obvious by their acts of September 11.

Let me continue with a few comments. Summing up the Clinton administration argument, Senator DASCHLE said, "Look, we have exhausted virtually all our diplomatic efforts to get the Iraqis to comply with their own agreements and with international law. Given that, what other option is there but to force them to do so? That is what they are saying. This is the key question. And the answer is we do not have another option. We have to force them to comply and we are doing so militarily.”

That is from the majority leader, the Democratic majority leader, the president of Senate. All of the sudden that is not what we are hearing today.

Let me continue. “JOHN KERRY was equally hawkish. ‘If there is not unfettered, unrestricted, unlimited access per the United Nations’ resolution for inspections and UNSCOM cannot in our judgment appropriately perform its functions, then we obviously reserve the rights to press the case internationally and do what we need to do in order to enforce those rights. Saddam Hussein has already used these weapons and has made it clear that he has the intent to continue to try by virtue of his duplicity and secrecy to continue to do so. That is a threat to the stability of the Middle East. It is a threat with respect to the potential of terrorist activities on a global basis. It is a threat even to regions near but not exactly in the Middle East.’”

These are comments made by leadership of the Democratic Party in 1998; and yet today when you read the paper, well, we should defer this decision until after the elections, as if Saddam Hussein schedules his development of weapons of mass destruction, he sets them so that they are convenient with our election dates in this country.

It amazes me that with these kinds of threats in existence, with the knowledge that we had in 1998 that we know has not changed in 4½ years, in fact, has only increased, that we have hesitancy, that we have hesitancy by some of these very leaders that advocated action in 1998, not to do action in 2002 or to delay it and wait and wait and wait. Maybe the doctrine of appeasement does not work. The fact is we have to deal with it.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERGUSON). The gentleman will refrain from casting reflections of sitting Members of the Senate.

Mr. MCINNIS. Let me finish off this article with this quote from President Clinton in 1998: “We have to defend our future from these predators of the 21st century.”

This is President Clinton I am referring to.

Let me repeat my comment. From President Clinton: “We have to defend our future from these predators of the 21st century.” To leave the quote for a minute, I absolutely agree 100 percent with what President Clinton was saying here. He was right then and George W. Bush is right today.

Continuing: “We have to defend our future from these predators of the 21st century,” he argued. “They will be all the more lethal if we allow them to build arsenals of nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons and the missiles to deliver them. We simply cannot allow that to happen. There is no more clear example of this threat than Saddam Hussein.” And as the article says: “What more do you need to say?”

Now, we have taken some steps and we have taken some bipartisan steps, our missile defense system. The President has made commitment and we, as a Congress, have increased significantly the budgets, our military budgets, our defense mechanisms, but here is our biggest weakness. We have a very large Nation geographically. It is very tough to defend these borders. For example, shipping containers that come in. We cannot inspect even close to the number of shipping containers that come into this Nation every day. It is kind of like having a village in the mountains and from somewhere on the mountain every day you got a sniper, somebody shooting into your village. You cannot possibly put up a wall to stop these bullets from coming in. Every day that goes by the sniper fires another shot into the village.

At some point the village has to decide we cannot defend our perimeter. We will have to take the fight to them. We will have to go up on that mountain and find where that sniper is.

That is the situation we face here today. We cannot just retract on our borders within the United States, as some of our allies may suggest, that the United States is poking their nose into somebody else’s business. Well, it became everybody’s business after September 11. And what President Clinton accurately forecasted in 1998 came into place on September 11, 1 year ago.

The time of being able to just sit comfortably here and hope that it was not happening out there or enjoying the privilege of the fact that it had not happened within the borders of the United States for a long time, assuming that Pearl Harbor could go into that classification, and it does, those days are gone. We now have to engage in this fight, and we have to engage in this in every way possible.

I am not condemning diplomatic pursuit of some peaceful resolution. I am not condemning using prayers if you are trying to fight cancer. I think it is very, very helpful. And I think diplomatic efforts are very, very necessary. And I am not saying that we should not have congressional debate. I think it is constitutionally required. I think it is healthy for this Congress, for the people who have elected us to represent their views to have that type of debate.

But what I am saying is we cannot dilly dally around. We cannot any longer afford to ignore the fact that the malignant cancer is out there. We cannot afford to debate the accuracy of the x-ray very long. The x-ray tells us there is cancer. It told us we had cancer 4 years ago when President Clinton very accurately said what he has, what Saddam Hussein had, and what Saddam Hussein, by the way, supplies to the al Qaeda. We know it is there. And it does not do us any good in my opinion to continue to try to pretend it is not happening, to try to pretend that there is some clean way to handle this, that we can call Saddam up on the phone and say, Knock it off. What are you doing? Put those weapons in the closet and quit doing this and live peacefully with the rest of the world.

They have no intention of doing anything but destroying as much of the rest of the world as they can. And at the top of their list are our kindergartens. Every mother and father in America should be in a state of absolute dismay and anger today after this quote was released yesterday about targeting kindergartens. These are kindergartens in America, kindergartens in the United States. Some of us knew that, obviously, we think they will target some of these other areas; but for them to come out and say, your kindergartens, that is what we will target in America, that ought to wake everybody up.

The time for a debate is rapidly approaching. We should have a resolution on this floor as quickly as we can get a resolution on this floor. Our allies that belong to the United Nations ought to wake up, a lot of them are; but they need to come to the table too. America does not want to do it alone. America can do it alone, but America wants to be a partner. And I will tell you, our partnership, whether it is France, whether it is Hamburg, Germany, whether it is in Poland, all free-loving countries in the world are under the threat of this cancer of Iraq and the al Qaeda. And we, frankly, despite my criticism today or my expression of dismay by some of the remarks we see coming from our European allies, I do want to take a moment to tell you that as most of you know our European allies have assisted us in many ways with this fight against terrorism. But for some reason, I am a little baffled by the fact that we cannot get them to come over to this side of the line to face the reality of the threat that Iraq has against the world.

It is the United States today. Sure, that is their number one target, the United States and Israel. But I can assure our allies it is like the big bad wolf. It is at our door today, but it will be at your door tomorrow. And we have to team up. This partnership has to stay together. This partner, the United States of America, does not want to take Iraq on by itself or take on the war against terrorism. And our partners have come to the table in large part against the war on terrorism. But they are not coming to the table like they ought to be on Iraq. And it is time for this partnership meeting, for us to cut to the chase, to get down to the work that has to be done, and it is dirty work and it is a large task in front of us; but if we do not do it today, we will have let down, in my opinion I do not think it is too strong a word to use the word betrayed, we will have betrayed future generations by knowingly allowing a threat to be built of nuclear weapons, chemical weapons, biological weapons, to knowingly let that threat and those weapons be built by a mad man with the kind of commitments they have made to target our kindergartens and we do not take the fight to them.

It is inherently a responsibility of those of us in Congress to debate this. I do not argue that, I said that earlier. But as inherently, as strong as the debate is to get that debate completed and to move in a unified fashion as this Congress and as the United States Senate signaled it would with President Clinton in 1998, and the threat has only grown greater.

I think it is time for both of these Houses to come together in 2002 and move against the cancer that exists out there as a threat against the borders of this country, and as I have said, against the borders of our allies wherever they might be located throughout the worlds.

So I would hope that in the next, I hope in the very immediate future, I know that the President is going to the United Nations this week, I hope our allies in the United Nations and the people of the United Nations understand what a threat this malignancy is out there, understand how unsuccessful we have been to convince through diplomatic efforts, through inspections, through economic sanctions, through no-fly zones, how unsuccessful these efforts have been to get Saddam Hussein to stop proceeding with these weapons, what the ramifications are of these weapons.

Do my colleagues think that the al Qaeda, if they would have had nuclear weapons within their hands, do my colleagues think they would have used aircraft on September 11? They would have used nuclear weapons.

Do not forget, this country suffered an attack, a chemical attack, anthrax within days of September 11. We got hit with a chemical, with a biological attack against this country. Do my colleagues not think if the al Qaeda did not have that in their hands in sufficient quantities that they would not have used that? They were probably surprised that the World Trade towers collapsed. We know from the video that we have seen, they were elated by the success of their attack, but this only set the base for the al Qaeda. This only sets a base for countries like Iraq.

The next attack, they want to make sure those casualties, children, women and men, they want to make sure those casualties are many, many multiples of what September 11, the horror that September 11 brought to this Nation.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I am trying to think of my history. I have been in Congress 10 years. The horrible fires we suffered in Colorado this year, all of the different things, big issues that I think over these last few years we have dealt with, I cannot think of anything that is of a more of a threat, that has more serious future consequences than the international situation that we face today. Not the economy, not the impeachment several years ago, not the fires. We have got to go after that cancer that has centered itself in Iraq and has spread to al Qaeda and throughout rest of the world.

Again, at the conclusion of my remarks this evening, let me repeat what President Bill Clinton said 4½ years ago. President Clinton, "We have to defend our future from these predators of the 21st century," he argued. "They will be all the more lethal if we allow them to build arsenals of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and the missiles to deliver them. We simply cannot allow that to happen. There is no more clear example of this threat than Saddam Hussein."

I will wrap up my comments with 15 more seconds. I would ask my colleagues to take 15 seconds and read the poster, and once again, what more of a threat, what more of a warning do we need, do we need as a Nation than exists out there today? If in 1998 what Saddam Hussein did in 1998 was not enough, then was September 11 enough? Then was the acts of aggression against Kuwait enough? Was the assassination against Bush, Senior enough? If that was not enough, if all of that was not enough, this statement standing alone, this statement standing alone ought to be enough to bring all of us to bear arms to assure the security of this Nation and our friends throughout the world.

DEFENDING OUR BORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleague from Colorado tonight in raising some concerns about the present situation in which the United States finds itself in terms of its relationships around the world, and as we all know, we are about to begin the debate on one of the most serious, perhaps more, in fact, the most serious topic that can ever confront this or any legislative body, and that is, whether or not we should commit the young men and women of this Nation who have valiantly volunteered their services to the defense of the Nation, whether we should commit them into harm's way in a far-off land in a war that could certainly become catastrophic in its dimensions.

We do not know, of course, how to plan for its outcome except to say that we do know that it will be fought, if, in fact, we engage in this thing, it will be fought by brave men and women who have always, as the President said, made us proud. If we commit those precious resources to the task at hand, the task that was laid out by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS), then it appears to me we must do everything humanly possible, everything humanly possible to protect and defend them in their duty and to protect and defend the people of the United States of America. That is, after all, our primary responsibility, our raison d'être, our reason for being.

The Federal Government has assumed many responsibilities over the years since the Constitution was written, and we have assumed those responsibilities sometimes, I think, without regard to what constitutional restraints were so clearly identified by the Founding Fathers. We are involved in innumerable activities, programs and sponsorships that were never, ever contemplated by the Framers of the Constitution, but the one thing that we must carefully consider is the responsibility that we were given to protect and defend the people and the property of the United States of America.

I can be persuaded by the gentleman from Colorado's (Mr. MCINNIS) arguments that our interests, our vital interests do, in fact, demand that we take a preemptive strike. I should say that we take preemptive action in Iraq. I can be persuaded that that is possibly the case. I must admit, however, that I need more information personally to cast a vote about which I have absolutely no misgivings if I am going to be voting to send sons and daughters off to war because I, I am sure like hopefully most of our colleagues in this body, will consider this in the following fashion.

Do I believe personally that this problem we face, that the threat that we face in the United States is so great that I am willing to send my son off to war, not just vote to send someone else's son or daughter, but am I willing to do so myself? This is a very high standard, and it is one that I believe every single Member must establish for themselves, and I can be persuaded that it is necessary to do so.

I must say that in this deliberation, there is something that is being left out. When people, even the President of the United States, says things like we will do everything necessary to defend the interests of this country, I like hearing it. I want to believe it. I want to believe that we will, in fact, do everything necessary to protect country, and while that might very well be to send men and women to Iraq, or places far flung all over the world, it is also completely logical, self-evident, that what we must do even before we do that in order to protect and defend the people of this country, what we must do is to defend our own borders, and this, I suggest, has not been done and is not being contemplated.

Over my August district work period I went to the borders and went to the southern and northern borders of the country. I first went to Arizona and then on to California where I observed firsthand the problems that we face on those borders, and let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the face of illegal immigration into this country, people coming across our borders without our permission or without our knowledge, the face of illegal immigration in my district, in Littleton, Colorado, perhaps the Chair's in Arkansas, but the face of illegal immigration in my district is one of a benign activity for the most part, people working menial jobs, for the most part in restaurants and landscaping activities, and people we say to ourselves, well, yes, they are here illegally, but after all, they are just trying to make a living.

The face of illegal immigration on the border, on our borders with Mexico and on our borders with Canada, that face is much, much uglier. That is the face of drug smuggling, of murder and of people coming into this country for the purposes of doing us great harm. That is what we see when we actually go to the border before it becomes diffuse throughout the land.

I visited the Tohono O'odham Indian reservation where they are under siege, and I mean that in the most literal definition of the term. They are under siege. The Tohono O'odham Indians have a 76-mile border coterminous with Mexico. Across that 76-mile border come 1,500 illegal aliens a day, and they are not just people coming for the good life. They are not just people coming to work at some sort of menial task in the United States, a task that "no American will take" and send their money back home, in this case to Mexico for the most part.

They are coming into the United States, many, in fact, perhaps even a majority, of the people coming across that border a day, 1,500 a day, it is estimated that well over 1,000 are involved with the drug trade and they are bringing with them literally tons of illegal drugs every single day. They have, in fact, put this Indian reservation into the status of being a captive nation. They have taken over two of the small communities in this reservation. When I say taken over, what I mean by that, I mean that they have threatened or coerced or bribed or addicted so many people in these two communities that they are essentially now nothing more than extensions of the drug trafficking of several Mexican cartels.

I met with people who told me that they are afraid to go out on their street at night; that they cannot let their children out. I saw 5-year-olds who were stoned, who had been given drugs. Their parents had been given drugs in order to coerce them and/or entice them, is perhaps the better word in this case, into becoming part of the drug trafficking network established by these cartels.

I saw the devastation to this particular Indian reservation. They are begging for help. As they say, their way of life is being destroyed. The vandalism, the robbery, the rapes, the incidence of all these things has gone up dramatically. Just one aspect, the trash alone that is hauled in and discarded by 1,500 people a day coming into their reservation is enormous. Where, may I ask, is the Sierra Club when we need them? Where are the Friends of the Earth? Where are all of the people who decry the devastation of our, of the natural habitats around the country and around the world? This Nation's natural habitat, their ecology is being destroyed by illegal immigrants coming across that border.

Hundreds of thousands of plastic water bottles, clothing, trash of every kind and description, discarded everywhere along their path. People racing through their communities, either trying to escape the border patrol agents or simply trying to make their way north have endangered the lives of their children so that they do not allow their kids to go outside and play. What I have just described, Mr. Speaker, is the face of illegal immigration on the border.

One of the things that they told us when we were down there is that it is not just Mexican nationals coming across now, but a dramatic increase, they have witnessed, in what they refer to as OTMs, or other than Mexicans. A dramatic increase in the number of Chinese coming through, a dramatic increase in the number of Asians from countries all over that part of the world, a dramatic number of Middle Easterners coming through. For what purpose, I would ask?

Does anyone think these people are coming across in order to get landscaping jobs? Are the Middle Easterners that are coming across that border illegally looking to work in restaurants as dishwashers, cooks and servers? In my own State, and in my own city, the biggest gang element is Asian. And they are quite predominantly illegals. But beyond that, what, we may ask, I think, are the Middle Easterners coming in for? What are they doing here? Why are they coming in illegally through Mexico?

Now, I suggest that there is a great possibility that they are coming in for purposes that are heinous. I do not know that. I have not been able to interview them because, of course, they come through without the slightest bit of intervention on our part. We do not stop them. We cannot stop them because we have no resources in place to do so. And even when we do stop them, even when they are interdicted farther inland, farther up into the United States, and when the INS is called and told we have a lot of people here in a van, in a truck, in a house, we have a lot of people here who are here illegally, the INS tells the local law enforcement agents, let them go, we do not have time. We do not have time.

Twenty-five illegal aliens were caught in a tractor-trailer truck in Dallas on July 27. The INS initially detained several, then released even these and "paroled them" into the United States. They have an automatic parole process. The INS can do this. The INS can say we will parole these people we have just caught, let them go, and then we will send them a letter later on telling them to report for their deportation hearing.

Now, this would be laughable, of course, if it were not so dangerous. This is a Saturday Night Live skit. "Here is your letter. We know you have snuck into the United States, so please report in 6 months to the following location for your deportation hearing." Right. "Thank you. Of course, I will." They actually call these letters "run letters." What they mean by that is that when the people receive them, of course they run. They go away. They do not go back to their country of origin, they run into American society.

Now, if we are so concerned about the possibility of a terrorist attack on the United States, which is the only thing we have heard again and again and again from the leadership, from Members of Congress who support our efforts, support the President in his desire to depose Saddam Hussein, if we are so concerned about that, and believe me, I am, then why would we not take just as much, no, not just as much, why would we not take even more care and concern about our own national borders?

On August 4 in Rogers County, Oklahoma, State troopers caught seven aliens who admitted they were illegally present in the country. The INS again would not pick them up and remove them.

During the Memorial Day weekend in New York the INS reportedly "did not want to be bothered," so they refused to take custody of several Mid Eastern illegal aliens. Local police officers had caught them at the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel during a terror alert. I remember this incident, Mr. Speaker. They actually had these people in custody. These were Mid Eastern illegal aliens. They called the INS. It was Memorial Day weekend, and so the call was routed from New York, because no one was at their workstation, it was routed to Vermont, where the person answering said to the police in New York City, "let them go."

These are just a few of the literally hundreds, if not thousands, of cases like this that I could relate to the body tonight. With all of the talk about the need to increase our efforts of vigilance and be careful about things we see and things we hear, with all of that, and with all of the efforts being made now to extend the war against terrorism beyond Afghanistan and into other parts of the Middle East, it is amazing to me, it is incredible to me, and it should be to every single Member of this body, that we leave our own borders undefended.

Does anyone believe for even a second that should we prosecute this war in a more aggressive fashion than is presently the situation that there will not be some reaction on the part of the people, specifically Saddam Hussein and al Qaeda and fundamentalist Islam? We are told that if we go into Iraq, we must be concerned about the ramifications throughout the Middle East; that perhaps other countries with governments more friendly to the United States may fall as a result of having internal dissent because the phenomenon of fundamentalist Islam is so pervasive in these countries. We are told that that is what we must watch out for, what we must be careful of. But we are not told, and there is no precaution being made right now, for our own security within this Nation. We know there will be a reaction. What will that reaction be? Does anybody think it will simply be confined to the Middle East?

Now, everyone knows, certainly Saddam Hussein knows, that he cannot win in a conventional war against the United States. He can make it bloody. He can make it ugly. But he cannot win. He knows that. The world knows that. What makes us think for a moment that we will be left unscathed in the United States if we embark upon this path of action in the Middle East? Certainly the possibility exists that al Qaeda agents, that fundamentalist Islam will react in a way so as to increase the number of people that they already have in the United States, the cells that are operating here, that we are told by our Justice Department are operating, that are here in the United States and are ready to go into action at a moment's notice.

We know there are cells operating in Canada. We know there are cells operating in Mexico. Why is it not the most logical thing for us to say, well, we have to be careful here. Before we even go into Iraq, we must secure our borders. The reason, I fear, Mr. Speaker, that we do not do that is because, as Governor Ridge said, right there in the well of the House, to a question posed to him from, I think, this microphone about his reluctance and the reluctance on the part of the administration, and in fact most of the Congress, I suppose. No, I should qualify that, because the House has in fact passed an amendment to the defense authorization bill allowing for the military to be used on the border, and we have done that year after year after year, but it has failed in the other body. But when asked why we have not used all of our resources to defend our borders, including the military, Governor Ridge said there are political and cultural reasons why we cannot do so.

Well, there may be political and cultural prices to pay. I do not even know what he meant by cultural reasons. I do know what he meant by political reasons. We are concerned that if we in fact secure our borders and prevent people from coming into the United States illegally, we will in some way or other jeopardize our relationship with the government of Mexico and that we will simultaneously lose votes from Mexican Americans who somehow feel that this is a personal affront if we try to defend our own borders.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that for a moment. I do not believe Mexican-Americans are any less concerned about the safety of themselves and their families than any other group of Americans. I believe that a case can be made to them and to every single person in the United States as to why it is imperative that we secure our own borders. I believe we can do that. I believe that we will benefit as a result in terms of the politics, but whether we do or do not benefit politically, who cares. Is it not our absolute and total responsibility to do so?

There are cultural and political reasons why we cannot defend our own borders. I wonder how if there is another event of some great magnitude, which we all anticipate, which we hear every single day is a distinct not just possibility but probability, and if this is perpetuated by someone who has entered this country illegally, and/or people who have been recruited into a terrorist network by people who have come here illegally, I wonder what we will tell the spouses, the sons, the daughters of those people who are killed in that event.

We will make many, many speeches about how heroic their loved ones were, how heroic the efforts were of the people who tried to save them. Will we also say, I wonder, that there were political and cultural reasons why we could not protect them? I do not know how anyone could look into the faces of the people whose loved ones have been lost in an event of that nature and say those words. But say them we would have to if we follow the path we are on today.

The President has just submitted an action plan in which he calls for smart borders, and there is quite a lengthy list of things the administration has proposed: biometric identifiers, permanent resident cards, single alternative inspection systems, refugee and asylum processing reforms, handling of refugee asylum claims, visa policy coordination, air preclearance, advanced passenger information, joint passenger analysis, a lot of stuff about customs and how to bring goods into the United States; and I applaud them all.

I do not for a moment suggest that these are not good and salutary measures to take; but I look in here, I look in vain for the most important measure we can take to create a smart border, and that is to put the military in place to defend that border. Right now we cannot do that. We cannot do it with the Border Patrol. They are inhibited from actually achieving the goals of securing our borders by the fact the administration, the INS, is incompetent and completely unmotivated to act in this particular capacity. They are restricted by a myriad of laws we have passed here, confusing, conflicting laws, allowing for people to be retained in this country even after they have been found to be here illegally. We have refused to provide the resources necessary to actually secure the borders for one reason and one reason only: because it is politically and culturally unacceptable.

Well, I do not know who it is culturally unacceptable to. I do not know who it is politically unacceptable to, but those are not legitimate reasons for abandoning our own defenses. And no matter how much we do in the Middle East, no matter how many resources we put into accomplishing the goal of deposing Saddam Hussein, no matter what we do around the world to increase the number of countries that would be categorized as democracies rather than dictatorships, we will be at every step of the way in that process putting our own people in greater and greater danger if we do not do everything possible to secure our borders.

I, of course, cannot promise even if we do everything I have asked for, even if we completely reform the INS, even if we give Border Patrol agents greater authority and ability to actually do their job, even if we put military on the border, I cannot promise that someone with malicious intent cannot or will not get through; but at least I can say we did everything we can do, which is living up to the President's admonition to us, that we must do everything that we can do. That includes defending our own border.

What an amazing world we live in. What an interesting and incredible dilemma we face. We are told every day that it is a war that we are in, a war for our own survival, that America's way of life is at stake. What nation can we think of in history that knowing that that is the situation they face, have not in fact done the most obvious thing to try to protect themselves? What this demands is leadership. It demands that the President of the United States tell the people of the United States what needs to be done, even if there is a political price to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it would not be a negative reaction politically. I suggest that the people of this country are yearning for and desiring him to establish the exact nature of the conflict and also the exact way in which we are going to defend against it. They are hoping that he will say to them that we will in fact secure our borders, and this may mean that we will not have the opportunity to hire cheap labor or recruit people into a political party as new voters. But nonetheless, it has to be done, along with all of the other things that have been outlined by the President, with which I agree and for which I commend him. The border must be secured.

I ask, no, I beg the President of the United States to use his power, to use his executive authority to do just that: protect our borders; order the military to the border, allow us to use the expertise and the technology and the manpower we have available to us on our first line of defense.

I mentioned that I went recently to the Mexican border, but I also shortly thereafter went to the Canadian border, a little town called Bonner's Ferry, Idaho, where I witnessed a very interesting activity. At the time I got there, there were 100 Marines stationed there just to see whether or not they could in fact coordinate their activities and help the Border Patrol and the U.S. Forest Service and the customs agency control the northern border because I assure Members, although I have spent a great deal of time talking about the southern borders, I assure Members that the problems are just as large on the northern borders.

There are over 20,000 Muslims living in Calgary, Canada, which brings into the United States component parts of methamphetamines. They are sold and the proceeds go back to the Muslim groups in Canada, and the money is used to finance terrorist activities throughout the world.

Osama bin Laden, because of Canada's peculiar process of establishing who is or is not a refugee, Osama bin Laden could land in Ontario, claim he is Omar the tent maker, not show any identification, and walk immediately into Canadian society, and, of course, shortly thereafter walk unfettered probably into the United States.

The problems up there are significant. So there are 100 Marines, and I do not know the genesis of the stationing of these people on that border. I do not know if it was part of a larger strategy or not, but they were using three UAVs, unmanned aerial vehicles, more often commonly referred to as drones, and a couple of radar stations that were to help identify people coming across that border illegally. It worked. The Marines told me that it was the best training they had ever received because it was real time, real bad guys, and very difficult terrain.

We need the resources of the military. We do not have to put people arm in arm along 4,000 or 5,000 miles of border. We have the technology to aid in this. I saw it with my own eyes. It can work. We can make our borders very secure, not perfect but much more difficult to cross illegally than is presently the case. We can do it. The only thing we do not have is the will to do it.

We unfortunately create a facade, a Potemkin Village. Prince Potemkin used to put up facades along the villages in his area and when Catherine the Great would sail down the river, she would see these beautiful villages. But behind these facades, of course, it was abject poverty. That is where the phrase Potemkin Village comes from. In a way that is what we have created or we have tried to create on the borders. We have increased the number of border patrol. We have established something called smart borders. We have told Americans that we are doing what is necessary to defend our borders, but it is nothing more than the creation of a Potemkin Village along the borders. They are just facades. They are not true defense mechanisms. Because what we are trying to do is to pretend to the American people that we are taking our responsibility of border defense seriously while at the same time assuring that people can come through illegally in order to, quote, take the jobs that no one else will take and in order to increase the ranks of political parties in the United States that benefit as a result of massive immigration, one particular political party, of course, the Democratic party, and the fear that if we actually got tough on the borders, there would be a political reaction. And there would be certainly outcries by immigration advocacy groups, especially immigration lawyers. They would raise Cain.

But is our responsibility here to pander to those political extremists? Or is our responsibility to protect and defend the people and the property of the United States of America? Again what a strange world we live in, whereby we can be talking about going off to war, recognizing all of the danger that that entails for the people we are sending but also for the people who are here, the people who remain, and not do anything to protect us. What an amazing situation.

Mr. Speaker, I hope and pray that our words, our admonitions, our concerns will be heeded by our other colleagues and by the administration. The stakes are so high, the risks are so great that we cannot possibly avoid doing what is right even at our own political peril should that be the case which, as I say, I do not believe for a moment would happen, but even if it did, that is what is required of us here, to do the right thing, even if it is politically or culturally problematic.

RAE AND MAL WEBBER CELEBRATE THEIR 60th WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

Monday, September 9, 2002

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to join the many family and friends who have gathered to congratulate Rae and Mal Webber of New Haven, Connecticut as they celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary. Throughout their six decades together, Rae and Mal have dedicated much of themselves to enriching our community—bringing the generosity and compassion they have shared together to us all.

It is not often that you find individuals who so willingly volunteer their time and efforts on behalf of their communities. Rae and Mal have a rich history of advocacy and unparalleled commitment—their unwavering spirit changing the face of Greater New Haven. I have often had the pleasure of working with both Rae and Mal and am continually inspired by their devotion and dedication to our community.

I have often spoke of our nation's need for talented, creative educators ready to help our children learn and grow. Committing a lifetime of work to our young people, Rae exemplified this ideal as an educator. Throughout her career, she touched the lives of thousands of children, ensuring that they were prepared with the skills and knowledge they needed to pursue their dreams. In addition to her professional career, Rae volunteered much of her time to community organizations. Through her efforts on behalf of the League of Women Voters, a non-partisan, non-profit organization that encourages the informed and active participation of citizens in government, Rae helped many Connecticut residents find ways to make their voices heard. Rae was also active in the coordination of the communal service held at the Immanuel Baptist Church on Martin Luther King Day. Her contributions, as a professional and community member, have truly made a difference in the lives of many.

A vocal public advocate, Mal's efforts on behalf of New Haven's Jewish community and the Greater New Haven area, have left an indelible mark that will not be forgotten. Education and the gift of knowledge were a central focal point of Mal's incredible work. As Chairman of the Board of Directors, during a pivotal point in its history, Mal led the efforts to save and enhance the New Haven Public Library—which has ensured the library's continued success today. Mal also served as the Director of both the Connecticut Jewish Community Relations Council and Anti-Defamation League during the times of the Civil Rights Movement—a tumultuous time throughout the nation.

Using his unique position in these two organizations, Mal worked diligently with clergy, political, and community leaders to sustain the relationship between our Jewish community and the Greater New Haven community as a whole.

Today, as they celebrate their lifetime together, we, as a community, extend our deepest thanks and appreciation for all that they have done to enrich our lives. I am proud to join their children, Susan, Henry, and Bruce, family, friends and community members in congratulating them on this very special occasion and extending my very best wishes for many more years of health and happiness.

Today I rise to recognize Marie Holinsworth, Legislative Chair for the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 2358 Ladies Auxiliary in Roseville, Michigan.

As Legislative Chair, Mrs. Holinsworth has been a tireless advocate for the VFW's "Priority Goals." No veterans' subject is insignificant to Mrs. Holinsworth. With her quiet strength and customary eloquence, Mrs. Holinsworth's letters to my office express a comprehensive understanding of the issues and clearly set forth the agenda the Ladies Auxiliary is pursuing.

At the recent Michigan VFW State Convention, Mrs. Holinsworth was recognized for her legislative duties by being the recipient of two top awards. The first was the "Most Outstanding Promotion of the Legislative Program" for her efforts in writing letters, working at polls and meeting with candidates and legislators. This distinction was enhanced by the announcement that she also won the award for the "Best Promotion of Priority and Security Goals," placing first among over two-hundred and fifty Auxiliaries in the state of Michigan.

THE MILITARY PHYSICIAN EQUITY ACT

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge support for the Military Physician Equity Act. This legislation will level the playing field for Uniformed Services (Title 37) physicians so that they have the option of receiving the same annuities as civil service physicians (NIH, HHS etc.) and Veterans Affairs (VA) physicians.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Currently, civil service physicians (Title 5) and VA physicians (Title 38) are allowed to have their recruitment/retention bonuses counted as part of their "high-three" for purposes of determining their retirement annuity. The "high-three" is the system whereby one's highest three consecutive salaries are used to determine an annuity. By allowing for recruitment/retention bonuses to be counted as one's salary, a retiree receives a bigger retirement check each month from his former employer. We do not feel it is just that Title 5 and Title 38 physicians should have received this benefit while military physicians do not. Our bill does not create any unique benefit; it only allows Title 37 military physicians to receive the same benefit that other Federal physicians receive.

In addition to the fairness issue, it is also a matter of good policy. The government cannot pay physicians on the same scale as physicians employed in hospitals, HMOs, and universities. Consequently, enhancing the benefits of our military physicians is an essential way to retain our best doctors. Passage of this bill would help offset the loss of income for Federal physicians if they choose to remain a public servant. This important legislation helps ensure that the government can recruit and retain highly trained and well-qualified physicians and I urge my colleagues to support it.

IN COMMEMORATION OF THE PLACER HERALD'S 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOHN T. DOOLITTLE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to recognize the 150th Anniversary of my hometown newspaper, the Placer Herald, which traces its roots to the first printing press used in California.

On September 11, 1852, the first edition of the Placer Herald was published for 25 cents per copy in Auburn, California, not far from where gold had been discovered a few years earlier. Established by Tabb Mitchell, Richard Rust, and John McElroy to serve the mining community in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada, the newspaper was housed in a plain, board-sided storefront office. As an interesting historical note, the paper was printed on California's very first printing press—the one that Sam Brannan had brought to publish The California Star.

In 1892, a new, two-story brick building measuring 30 feet by 75 feet was erected on the site of the Placer Herald's original headquarters. After changing hands many times over the subsequent years, new owners moved the paper in 1963 to Rocklin, California, where it continues to be published.

I wish to commend the modern Placer Herald for its ongoing service to the people of Rocklin and neighboring communities. For 150 years, it has maintained its heritage of reporting local news to a segment of California's Gold Country. The newspaper serves a valuable purpose by both reflecting and shaping the community it serves. As we celebrate the Placer Herald's sesquicentennial, let me add my wishes that the newspaper will flourish for another century and a half!

ENVIRONMENTAL ACTIVISTS MUST STOP BLOCKING SENSIBLE WILDFIRE PREVENTION EFFORTS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member commends to his colleagues the following editorial from the August 3, 2002, Norfolk Daily News. The editorial emphasizes the need for proper forest management in order to prevent disastrous wildfires. Unfortunately, as the editorial indicates, all too often sensible management plans designed to reduce wildfire threats have been delayed or defeated by environmental activists.

[From the Norfolk (NE) Daily News, Aug. 3, 2002]

ACTIVISTS HAVE TO SHARE BLAME

The extreme environmental groups accused of contributing to the wildfires in the West this year are scrambling like mad to say it wasn't their fault. But as a recent report shows, they in fact have a lot to answer for:

The report comes from the U.S. Forest Service, and as press accounts note, it shows that administrative appeals delayed almost half of 326 projects last year that were aimed at lowering the wildfire threat through the hacking away of underbrush and small trees. Those making the appeals, of course, were more often than not environmental groups.

In response, the environmental groups maintain that what they're actually doing is trying to save the forests from the awful, dreadful timber industry, as if anytime the timber industry profits, life on this planet has somehow worsened. It's true that removing the biggest and oldest trees does not serve fire-prevention purposes, but that's not what the projects aimed to do. And meanwhile, it's also true that the preferred solution of environmental activists—controlled burns—is often no solution at all.

The problem with controlled burns, in addition to being extraordinarily expensive, is that the unwise suppression of natural fires over many decades has led to a buildup of what wildfires like to feed on, namely all that underbrush and all those small trees.

The consequence is that the burns cannot be controlled, as was amply illustrated two years ago when one such attempt destroyed 200 homes in Los Alamos, N.M. That burn was also mismanaged, but there are fewer and fewer stretches of forest where even the best management can be assured of keeping such burns from getting out of hand.

Thinning the forests mechanically is not only safe and effective and good for the future grandeur of the forests, but not nearly so expensive, because the timber industry helps foot the bill.

Delays in the process have to stop if we are not to see many repeat performances for this year's destruction.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN B. BEAUDOIN

HON. JOHN E. SWEENEY

OF NEW YORK

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to your attention an outstanding individual, John B. Beaudoin. Mr. Beaudoin has been chosen as the 2002 recipient of the Frank W. Kennedy Memorial Award. During the 1960s, Frank Kennedy served with distinction as the president of the Board of Directors of the Lansingburgh Boys & Girls Club. This award, named in his honor, is given to a member of the community that embodies the characteristics of Frank Kennedy—integrity, generosity, and loyalty to the community.

The 2002 recipient of this award, Mr. Beaudoin, is a graduate of Syracuse University with a masters in social work and, for the last 34 years, has been working for the Rensselaer County Commissioner of Social Services. With his unparalleled concern for youth and the elderly, John Beaudoin has used his role in the Department of Social Services to improve conditions within his community. He has developed various services such as homeless shelters, day care initiatives, and dealt with child protective issues, to name just a few of his accomplishments.

John Beaudoin has distinguished himself within the Department of Social Services, as well as the many affiliated organizations he has worked with. John has developed numerous programs to serve every facet of the community and is certainly deserving of this award.

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to join with the Lansingburgh Boys & Girls Club in honoring John Beaudoin. I am sure that John's admirable efforts on behalf of the local community will continue well into the future.

CONTINUING CRISIS IN FOSTER CARE

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, there is a crisis affecting the 500,000 children in foster care in this country. Day after day, there are reported cases of sexual abuse, neglect, and even death of foster children, all while under the care of the state child welfare agencies. Social workers remove children from their homes because of abuse and/or neglect. Yet neither safety nor stability is ensured by child protective services interventions.

In the following article, The Washington Post reports that a 7-year-old boy, a ward of the District's Child and Family Services Agency, was warehoused in a group home for older foster children, where 12-year-old boys later admitted to sodomizing him. Additionally, officials confirmed that other boys were sexually abused at that facility and at a separate group home for mentally retarded foster children.

But severe problems in the foster care system exist in many states and jurisdictions beyond Washington D.C. Articles and reports that I will provide in subsequent extensions document how children in foster homes, children's shelters, and group homes are sometimes subject to even greater abuse as a result of those placements.

A strong federal law passed in 1980 establishes tough accountability standards to protect children in foster care. It is evident that there has not been sufficient oversight at the state or federal level, and that billions of dollars are being spent, often in violation of federal law, to perpetuate a system that fails to provide children and their families with necessary services and safeguards.

The circumstances described in these reports underscore the need for lawmakers, practitioners, and advocates to work together without delay to reform the child welfare system and to review the enforcement and implementation of our foster care laws without further delay.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 1, 2002]

D.C. SPEEDS GROUP HOME CHANGE; MOVE FOLLOWS NEW REPORT OF ASSAULTS ON BOYS

The director of the District's child welfare agency yesterday ordered her staff to speed up the removal of children under 12 from foster group homes, as officials learned of another unreported case of alleged sexual abuse involving youths at one of the privately run facilities.

The agency acknowledged yesterday that it did not remove an 11-year-old mentally retarded boy from one of the homes until nearly three months after he reported being sexually abused by a 15-year-old resident.

A city social worker learned of the April 9 incident shortly after it occurred but did not report it until July 2, city officials said. Police then interviewed the 11-year-old and his 12-year-old roommate, who also reported being sexually assaulted, and removed them from the home. The alleged perpetrator is still at the facility.

The case is the latest in a string of such incidents that were not promptly reported to authorities. Last week, city officials said that a 7-year-old boy was sodomized by two 12-year-olds at another group home in April and that the home's staff did not report the abuse until two days later. This week, officials said that home also failed to tell government monitors about a 1999 abuse incident.

The D.C. Child and Family Services Agency announced yesterday that it has strengthened its procedures on the reporting of abuse and that it will refer for prosecution any caregiver or employee who fails to make such a report.

More than 400 District foster children are in congregate care, as group homes and other institutions are called, and the agency's policy is to limit the facilities' use to older children and those with special medical needs.

Yesterday, Olivia A. Golden, the agency's director, ordered an inventory to determine how many group home residents are younger than 12. She ordered her staff to review those cases and prioritize the children for placement with foster families or relatives or for reunification with birth parents. A key hurdle to that effort, however, is a shortage of foster families, especially families who are trained to offer therapeutic services for children with intensive needs.

Golden's order comes one year after the agency emerged from six years of federal court control, the legacy of a 1989 lawsuit filed over poor conditions in the child welfare system. The agency is trying to improve its regulation of private foster care institutions, which have never been licensed because the city failed for 15 years to implement a 1986 licensure law.

"We knew we were coming into a situation where congregate care was substantially overused, and we knew that group home providers did not have enough resources and staff," said Golden, who took over the agency in June 2001.

Golden said she was "surprised and saddened" by the severity of unreported abuse. "The fact that we're still having tragedies is what we have to change," she said.

Marcia Robinson Lowry, the New York-based lead counsel in the class-action suit against the District, said yesterday that she has asked the agency's court-appointed monitor to investigate the recent incidents.

"We had been focusing on children 6 and under, but it is clear that the problem is well beyond that and that children under 12 should not be in group home facilities," Lowry said.

In the latest abuse case, a police report obtained by The Washington Post indicates that during an April 9 bed check at the group home, in the 800 block of Floral Place NW, staff members observed the 15-year-old running out of the two younger boys' bedroom with his pajama pants open.

The 11-year-old told the staff that the older boy had touched him on the buttocks, according to the police report.

The report states that when a detective went to investigate on July 2, the boy said he had been forced to perform oral sex on the 15-year-old. The boy's roommate corroborated the account and said his penis was grabbed by the teenager on the same night.

The 11-year-old "stated that this has occurred several times and each time he has reported it to the staff of the group home," the police report said.

Moderate mental retardation has been diagnosed in all three boys. The 11-year-old is living temporarily with his family while awaiting an alternative placement, and the 12-year-old has been placed with a foster family.

The group home is run by a nonprofit contractor, Community Multi Services Inc. It operates five homes that serve up to 18 mentally retarded foster children, as well as seven care facilities and 15 apartments for adults with developmental disabilities. It is paid nearly $3,500 a month for each foster child.

Constance A. Reese, the contractor's program director, said her staff interviewed the three boys and had them seen by a doctor but determined that "nothing took place with these children." She said the staff notified the three boys' social workers and sent an incident report to a government monitor.

Mindy L. Good, a spokeswoman for the child welfare agency, said that the 15-year-old boy's social worker learned of the incident April 10 but "completely failed to report this until July." The social worker, Emmanuel K. Baah, called the agency's abuse and neglect hotline in July after his supervisor ordered him to do so, Good said. The hotline staff then contacted the police.

Good said Baah violated agency policy on the reporting of abuse by not immediately calling the hotline or informing his supervisor. She said that the actions of the group home, the monitor and the social workers for the two younger boys also are being reviewed.

Baah, who has worked for the city since 1992, said he received a dismissal letter from the agency yesterday. He said the group home told him about the incident April 18, right before he went on a six week vacation. He said he did not call the hotline because group home employees were reviewing the alleged abuse and "because they were not sure whether it was substantiated or not."

For years, city law has required health care providers, law enforcement officers, educators and social service and day-care workers to immediately report suspected child abuse or neglect to the police or the child welfare agency.

Group home regulations that took effect in September require any staff member who knows of possible abuse or neglect to call the hotline immediately and submit a written report within 24 hours to the child's social worker and the child welfare agency.

But in February, the agency sent a letter to foster care institutions indicating that staff should make oral reports to social workers during business hours and to the hotline during evenings and weekends. Yesterday, the agency said that the 24-hour hotline, 202-671-SAFE, should always be used.

In addition, the agency said it will refer violations of the reporting requirements for prosecution and push for an increase in the penalties for violators. Currently, failure to report abuse or neglect is punishable by a fine of up to $100 or imprisonment for up to 30 days.

Staff researchers Bobbye Pratt and Karl Evanzz contributed to this report.

HONORING SPECTRUM IN MARIN COUNTY, CALIFORNIA

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Spectrum, Center for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender (LGBT) Concerns, on the occasion of its 20th anniversary. Spectrum began its work in 1982, under the leadership of Rev. Janie Spahr, and with the direction of Executive Director Paula Pilecki, Spectrum has continued to pursue its mission to "strengthen, mobilize and serve lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and questioning people, and promote acceptance, understanding and full inclusion in Marin County."

Spectrum is the only organization in Marin County that focuses exclusively on addressing the needs of LGBT people. In twenty years, over 1,000 volunteers have helped tens of thousands of people come together to speak out against fear and discrimination. Spectrum works with a national network of social justice advocates to make the world a more inclusive and safe place for all people. Spectrum recognizes that in a diverse community, it is important that people learn to respect each other and their differences.

Spectrum plays an active role in the community, providing outreach programs that educate the community on LGBT people and provide systems of support for LGBT people. Spectrum's Speakers Bureau makes presentations to elementary, middle and high schools, colleges and community groups. Volunteer speakers share their personal stories to dispel myths and stereotypes about LGBT people. Spectrum's program, Rainbow's End, provides support for LGBT and questioning youth, 14-19 years old. Community Connections focuses on LGBT seniors providing peer support, facilitating social groups and educational forums.

Mr. Speaker, Spectrum has played a pivotal role in the LGBT community. The support they provide to LGBT people and the education they provide to the public has had an everlasting effect on Marin County.

COMMENDING THE PUBLICATION OF "TO LIFE: STORIES OF COURAGE AND SURVIVAL TOLD BY HAMPTON ROADS HOLOCAUST SURVIVORS LIBERATORS AND RESCUERS"

HON. J. RANDY FORBES

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call attention to the publication of "To Life: Stories of Courage and Survival as told by Hampton Roads Holocaust Survivors, Liberators, and Rescuers."

I also wish to bring to the attention of the House of Representatives the following statement issued by Rabbi Israel Zoberman, spiritual leader of Congregation Beth Chaverim in Virginia Beach, upon publication by the United Jewish Federation of Tidewater of the book "To Life: Stories Of Courage and Survival told by Hampton Roads Holocaust Survivors, Liberators and Rescuers." Rabbi Zoberman, son of Polish Holocaust survivors, and his daughter Rachel are among the contributing authors.

STATEMENT OF RABBI ZOBERMAN

Out of the depths of Jewish anguish and an aching human soul, with much trepidation to disclose accounts so personal and intimate yet with a compelling need to unburden heavy-laden hearts, reaching out to connect across a separating abyss, this—courageously, convincingly and caringly—shared tales of woes and victories is an enduring gift of Tikvah, reassuring hope for generations.

Out of the Shoah's poisonous fires still threatening to consume civilization, hope is painstakingly garnered and guarded from the midst of despair, a reminder of humanity's capacity to stand up to indefinite evil—physically, psychologically and spiritually—to ensure that infinite goodness will be the lot of all God's children.

Hope that dreams dashed by blind hatred and boundless cruelty perverting the divine image within us cannot ultimately be destroyed by demonic design deposited in the recesses of human depravity. While affirming the Holocaust's uniqueness we recall with horror the September 11th, 2001 terrorist strikes and the genocidal wars in Cambodia, Rwanda and Bosnia, further diminishing us. Hope that life's sacred and sweet essence of creative potential, more imperative, fulfilling relations and maturing growth will prevail over the stifling emptiness of a culture of death. Hope that the holiness in the victims' lives, symbolized by the flickering Sabbath lights, is within reach in spite of history's harsh winds. Hope that glorious Israel reborn, the surviving remnant facing continued trials and tribulations, will ever be a fitting testimony to its martyred people's inspiring bequest of prophetic values and undying faith. Hope filled with lasting gratitude that the United States of America, home and haven to the persecuted and oppressed, a weary humanity's best and last beacon of light, will retain its great pluralistic vision. It valiantly defeated Nazism and it will win as well its war on global terrorism.

Our heroic survivors, rescuers and liberators have entered portals not one else has, a land only they traversed, leaving behind lost dear ones safe from hurt and humiliation under the Shechina's broken wings. They dared remember, recall and retell for memory empowers the living and is the dead's lasting memorial. Rebuilding and healing their lives in Hampton Roads, the survivors along with their children and grandchildren provide us with indelible past and present lessons of perseverance, purpose and promise. The treasured candles of their cherished lives will brightly shine, eternal watch and witness, kindling a path for shalom's blessing to yes highlight a global community at harmonious peace.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this important publication to all Members of the House of Representatives. The stories of Holocaust survivors must be documented and told again and again. In doing so, we will ensure that such inhumane horror will remain present forever in our collective conscience, so that we, above all else, will never let this dark chapter in our history ever repeat itself.

RECOGNIZING ROSELLE, MICHAEL HINGSON'S GUIDE DOG, FOR HER BRAVERY AT WORLD TRADE CENTER ON SEPTEMBER 11

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Roselle, a yellow Labrador dog, whose bravery on September 11 as she led her blind owner Michael Hingson from the World Trade Center is an inspiration.

Michael and Roselle have become well-known as representatives of the power of the human/animal bond to build a trust that can carry them through even the greatest tragedy.

Michael was working on the 78th floor of the World Trade Center when the building was struck. After making sure everyone in the office was evacuated safely, Roselle and Michael began the long descent down the stairwell. Despite the heat and smoke, they calmly made their way from the building and started running for the subway as Tower 2 began to collapse. In the subway, Roselle guided Michael and another woman down the stairs and led Michael to the home of a friend in mid-Manhattan.

Michael has traveled with a dog from Guide Dogs for the Blind for 37 years. Roselle's ability to lead, and Michael's to command, under such difficult circumstances embodies the success of the lifelong partnerships developed through this program.

Mr. Speaker, Roselle's story demonstrates that there were many kinds of bravery on September 11, 2001. It is appropriate to honor the bond that enabled her to save the life of Michael Hingson.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

CONGRATULATING THE TOWN OF SMITHFIELD, VIRGINIA ON THEIR 250TH ANNIVERSARYHON. J. RANDY FORBES

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Town of Smithfield, Virginia on the marking of their 250th anniversary this year.

Smithfield has a population of 6,584 and is approximately 10.1 square miles in size. Located on the banks of the Pagan River in Isle of Wight County, Smithfield, Virginia was incorporated in 1752 from land donated and surveyed by Arthur Smith IV. Smithfield offers residents a small-town atmosphere, a great school system, affordable housing, and a beautiful historic downtown.

While numerous Tidewater localities suffered during the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, and the Civil War, Smithfield was spared the devastation. Since the Town's inception, Smithfield has worked hard to maintain its architectural heritage and small town charm.

The rise of Smithfield is most often credited to its world famous ham industry. Known as the "Ham Capital of the World," no visit to Smithfield can be considered complete without enjoying a quality ham.

To mark the Town's anniversary, on September 28th, the residents of Smithfield will be making the largest ham biscuit in the world. The ham biscuit bill will be eight feet in diameter and large enough to feed 1,752 people. I hope the Guinness Book of World Records will recognize the biscuit as the world's largest ham biscuit.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the citizens of Smithfield, Virginia, as they celebrate the Town's 250th anniversary and wish them continued success and prosperity in the years to come. While rich in history and in the beauty of its surroundings, the greatest part of Smithfield is the people who live there. It is truly an honor and privilege to represent the people of the Town of Smithfield in the United States House of Representatives.

A PROCLAMATION RECOGNIZING MARK DUGANHON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, Whereas, Mark Dugan is a hero who used his knowledge of Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation to help save the life of a one-year-old child; and

Whereas, Mark Dugan acted quickly and efficiently without hesitation or thought of himself; and

Whereas, Mark Dugan is an asset to the New Philadelphia community in his preparedness and willingness to help others; and

Whereas, Mark Dugan has displayed remarkable responsibility by becoming trained in life-saving first aid and furthermore by his real-life application of that knowledge;

September 9, 2002

Therefore, I join with the residents of the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in honoring and congratulating Mark Dugan for his selflessness and heroism.

POINT REYES NATIONAL SEASHORE 40TH ANNIVERSARYHON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Point Reyes National Seashore on the occasion of its 40th anniversary. On September 13, 1962, President John F. Kennedy signed into law P.L. 87-657 "to save and preserve, for the purpose of public recreation, benefit, and inspiration, a portion of the diminishing seashore of the United States that remains undeveloped."

Conceived as a park in the 1930s, the hard work of dedicated people made Point Reyes National Seashore a reality many years later. Today the Seashore, located an hour's drive from the urban San Francisco Bay Area, is enjoyed by over 2.5 million visitors annually. It comprises over 71,000 acres including estuaries, beaches, coastal grasslands, salt marshes, and coniferous forests and contains 45 percent of North American avian species and 18 percent of California's plant species. The Park is the best site for whale watching on the West Coast with as many as 200 migrating whales sighted per day. In 1988 Point Reyes National Seashore was internationally recognized by the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) for its examples of the world's major ecosystem types and named the Central California Coast Biosphere Reserve.

Lying just across the San Andrea Fault from the rest of North America, the Point Reyes peninsula is also a geological land in motion which has moved over 300 miles in the last 100 million years. Visitors to the Park's Earthquake Trail can see the results of this activity from near the epicenter of the 1906 San Francisco earthquake.

The cultural history of Point Reyes dates back 5,000 years to a time when the Coast Miwok Indians inhabited the peninsula. Over 120 Miwok archeological sites exist within the park. In 1579 Sir Francis Drake was probably the first European in the area, landing on the shores of the Bay which bears his name. Lighthouses and lifesaving stations, several still available to visitors, were established in the 19th century in response to the many shipwrecks in the treacherous waters off the coast. In the early 19th century Mexican land grantees established ranchos, and today ranching operations continue in the Park's pastoral zones.

Today, under the direction of Superintendent Don Neubacher, the Park successfully balances the needs of visitors and ranchers with the preservation of ecosystems and historical sites.

Mr. Speaker, Point Reyes National Seashore ranks among the top twenty most-visited National Park service areas in the country and exemplifies the Park Service's mission to "care for special places saved by the American people so that all may experience our heritage."

Throughout her term as Executive Director, Andrea increased membership by seventy-five percent which provided the Chamber with new, renovated offices and space. In July, Andrea was elevated to become the proctor of the office of development and alumni relations for the University of Southern Colorado.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to recognize the compassion of Andrea Aragon of Pueblo, Colorado and her ability to inspire the community of Pueblo to strive for their dreams. Her actions are an integral asset to those around her, and the entire State of Colorado. Congratulations on your achievement Andrea, and I wish the best of luck to you and your future endeavors.

COMMENDING THE NATIONS THAT PARTICIPATED IN THE WORLD SUMMIT ON SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the one hundred and ninety-one nations that participated in last week's United Nations World Summit on Sustainable Development. I hope that the cooperative efforts of these nations will begin to solve the mounting problems that have been brought to bear by decades of rampant consumption, resource depletion, and overpopulation.

I applaud a major victory of the conference: China's decision to join the Kyoto Protocol and reduce its greenhouse gas emissions. I welcome Russia's intention to do the same very soon in the near future. But, I am left with profound disappointment at the United States continued failure to offer our leadership and cooperation in this effort.

The United States, absence at the World Summit on Sustainable Development was not only a setback to America's leadership in the world, it was indicative of the Bush Administration's lack of commitment to solving a problem for which we are a major cause.

Fossil fuel consumption and Carbon Dioxide (CO<sub>2</sub>) emissions—the major contributors to greenhouse gas and global warming—are on the rise, most notably in the United States and Asia. The United States, Canada, and Mexico are the primary source of CO<sub>2</sub>, emissions in the world. In fact, CO<sub>2</sub>, emissions in North America have grown steadily over the last decade, nearly 16 percent between 1990 and 2000. Meanwhile, these emissions have declined in the former Soviet Union, Europe and Japan.

The World Summit was a unique opportunity for nations to cooperatively address what scientists have long stated are the serious consequences of global climate change. Major glaciers and arctic sea ice are retreating, causing sea levels to rise. Rainfall has increased in the Northern Hemisphere leading to unexpected flooding and related disasters. Insurance payments for flood and storm damage rose by $28 billion in just a decade. Meanwhile, droughts and subsequent poverty and famine have been devastating large parts of Asia and Africa.

The President's failure to attend the summit—like his withdrawal of the United States support for the Kyoto treaty—puts the world's environment and economic well being in jeopardy, even as nations forge on without us. The President's indifference only isolates us from our allies and alienates the developing world.

Indeed, the root causes of global climate change are inextricably tied to the economic and social conditions in which much of the world lives. We cannot ignore the lack of economic opportunity and poverty that help breed extremism and hatred toward the United States. The World Summit was a profound opportunity for us to lend a compassionate hand to improving lives of people throughout the world.

The United States, as the only remaining superpower, is expected to show leadership on all issues affecting the global community. The President's decision to abandon a leadership role on global climate change and sustainable economic development, I fear, will severely harm our standing in the world—not to mention the environment—for years to come.

HONORING KEVIN EISENBERG

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to honor Kevin Eisenberg, a student at Corona Del Mar High School in Newport Beach, California. Kevin is not you average, everyday student; he is motivated, dedicated, and committed to helping his fellow Americans who are currently serving and fighting for our great nation.

Following the tragic events of September 11, 2001, Kevin wanted to show his support for the troops who are risking their lives for us, as well as remember his late grandfather, Mr. Sam Cooper, who was a serviceman in the Navy. Subsequently, he decided to raise money for the Navy Marine Corps Relief Society, an organization that does not solicit donations.

Kevin used money previously earned to purchase American flags and bake apple pies, which he then sold from a stand on Newport Boulevard in Costa Mesa. All of the profits, including the initial investment, have been presented to the Navy Marine Corps Relief Society. In addition to financially supporting this great agency, he circulated information about the organization, helping everyone realize the vital role it plays to American service personnel.

During the six weekends Kevin spent outside at the stand, he raised $1500.00. What was important to him was not the amount of money actually raised, but more simply, increasing awareness. He wanted his fellow Americans to realize the importance of contributing and serving, with the hope that a chain reaction would ensue.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House please join me in honoring and commending Mr. Kevin Eisenberg for his selflessness, service, and devotion to our great nation, and to those who make the ultimate sacrifice so we may remain free.

PHILO T. FARNSWORTH

HON. JIM MATHESON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. MATHESON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the achievements of Philo T. Farnsworth, the inventor of television.

Though his name is largely unknown in much of the world, Philo was born in Beaver City, Utah and later moved to Idaho. At the age of just 14 he conceived of the idea of manipulating electrons while plowing a field on his father's farm.

Seven years later he demonstrated his invention for a small circle of friends and family in San Francisco—and television was born. September 7, 2002 marks the 75th anniversary of Philo's remarkable invention.

Philo struggled to establish a patent for his invention, taking on electronics giant RCA. He battled the corporate giant for the patent rights and his dedication and persistence paid off.

Philo later went on to develop radar systems and the electron microscope in addition to conducting research on nuclear fusion. It was only after his death in 1971 that Philo's achievements in television were acknowledged.

In 1992, the state of Utah presented the United States Capitol with a gift, the statue of Philo Farnsworth that now graces the Hall of Columns, downstairs from this Chamber.

He was hard working and imaginative, as so many Utahns are, and I would like to honor his efforts today. His enthusiastic interest in science sparked a series of technological advancements that truly shaped the 20th century.

HONORING A LIFETIME OF WORK AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS BY ROBERT E. ROUNDTREE

HON. ROY BLUNT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a lifetime of work and accomplishments by Robert E. Roundtree. A Florida native, Bob Roundtree has spent the last 18 years in Springfield, Missouri, where he has been the General Manager of Springfield City Utilities.

Bob Roundtree has risen to the top of his profession in the management of public utility companies. His utility career began more than half a century ago. He started in 1948 as the "oiler" for the power plants in his hometown of Gainesville, Florida. Roundtree says an "oiler" is a glorified name for janitor. During the next 30 years, Roundtree moved through the ranks of the utility company, retiring in 1978 from the position of general manager.

Roundtree moved on to manage utility companies in Brownsville, Texas and Dalton, Georgia before arriving in Springfield in 1984. He transformed the corporate culture of Springfield City Utilities, which provides electricity, natural gas, water and bus services to a community of more than 150,000 people. Roundtree put the utility on sound financial ground, held utility rates stable, improved the reliability of the electric system, instituted safety programs to improve gas line safety, and promoted creation of a water pipeline that ensures adequate water resources for the community for the next 30 years. He also placed the utility company at the forefront of economic development by directing the creation of a major industrial park that is the source of hundreds of new jobs.

His leadership won him the "Springfieldian of the Year Award" in 1995. He has also been recognized by the Hawthorn Chapter of the Professional Secretaries International with their "Executive of the Year Award" in 1991. The American Public Power Association named him their recipient of the "Alex Radin Distinguished Service Award for Individual Achievement." Roundtree is a past president of the Springfield Chamber of Commerce and is a past president of the American Public Power Association. He has also given his time and energy to Junior Achievement, the Safety Council of the Ozarks and serves on the boards of several organizations. His favorite non-profit organization is "Project SHARE," a program through City Utilities to pay utility bills for those in need.

Bob Roundtree's big smile and deep voice are reassuring and project his confidence and vision. Bob says he is ready to retire to enjoy more time with his wife Alice Ruth, his three children, and four grandchildren.

The community he adopted 18 years ago is a better place because of his vision, work and diligence. The people of Springfield, Missouri and the customers of City Utilities offer Bob their best wishes for a bountiful retirement.

HONORING THE RETIREMENT OF MANAGEMENT ANALYST LYNNE
MATTOS FROM THE UNION CITY POLICE DEPARTMENT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, on September 26, 2002, the Union City Police Department will celebrate the retirement of one of its finest officers, Management Analyst II Lynne Mattos.

In her 22-year career, Lynne has served the Union City Police Department in many capacities, working as a Crime Prevention Specialist, Community Relations Manager, and Management Analyst II.

Lynne Shelton was instrumental in developing Union City's Neighborhood and Business Watch Programs, the Police Department's False Alarm Program, and Crime Prevention's National Night Out. Lynne was involved in organizing almost all of the special events sponsored through city/police department collaborations, including the Gladiola Festivals in the late 1980s and early 1990s, the prestigious awarding of "All-America City" in 1999, and "WinterFest," an annual event to raise funding for many of the city's community-based service groups.

The recipient of countless accolades and letters of appreciation from citizens, businesses, Boy Scout troops, Lions Clubs, homeowners associations, and the school district, Lynne Mattos has made a lasting impression on the entire community. Lynne is also active on the city's Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, and has been a member of the city's Planning Commission since February 1990.

I am honored to join the colleagues of Lynne Mattos in commending her for her many years of dedicated service. Her commitment to excellence has left its irreplaceable mark on the entire Union City community.

SPEECH BY DR. LESLIE
LENKOWSKY

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, on August 27, 2002, Dr. Leslie Lenkowsky, the CEO of the Corporation for National Community Service, and a constituent of mine, addressed the National Press Club on the subject of "Protecting the Homeland: What Volunteers Can Do." His words are particularly meaningful in light of the fact that he was appointed by President Bush and confirmed by the Senate in October of 2001, at a time when many thousands of Americans were volunteering in the recovery from the September 11th attacks. I commend the speech to my colleagues.

PROTECTING THE HOMELAND: WHAT VOLUNTEERS CAN DO

On September 11, as smoke poured from the ruins of the World Trade Center, along with New Yorkers, hundreds, if not thousands, of New Jerseyites headed toward Ground Zero to help. Many went right to work, assisting the hard-pressed "first responders": police, firefighters, emergency medical personnel, among others. But many also found themselves without clear guidance about what was needed or where they could best serve. Of New Jersey's 21 counties, only three had networks called "VOADS"—Voluntary Organizations Active in Disasters—which are the principal channel through which public agencies responsible for dealing with emergencies can call on the resources of the nation's nonprofit groups. As a result, many people who wanted to be helpful had difficulty finding ways of doing so.

What happened in New Jersey occurred elsewhere in the United States as well. Americans stepped forward in record numbers to give blood, make donations, even travel long distances to help the searchers and console the survivors. No one who knows our country's history should have been surprised; we have long been unique among the nations in our willingness to give and volunteer, especially in the face of local and national emergencies. But this outpouring of generosity stretched the abilities of our charities. Blood banks wound up with more supplies than they could keep; for all the exceptionally great work they did, the Red Cross and other groups encountered big challenges in distributing the contributions they received; so many people showed up to search the rubble of the World Trade Center, William Langewiesche's extraordinary series in The Atlantic Monthly reports, that the site became even more dangerous than it already was.

Moreover, this particular national emergency is not one which is likely to end soon. As the cache of videos uncovered recently by CNN so clearly illustrates, these perpetrators of evil are determined to strike again, and to strike in ways that heretofore had been considered unthinkable. To prevent what we can prevent, and to prepare ourselves for what we cannot, will take a concerted effort that involves not just our intelligence and security agencies, and our trained "first responders," whose efforts were critical in helping New York deal with the terrorist attacks, but also an unprecedented level of commitment by everyday people—by volunteers—to support those first responders and ensure that homes and families, schools and places of business, houses of worship and other public spaces are prepared to face any crisis.

No one should doubt that Americans are prepared to make this commitment. But what we must strengthen is our capacity to make this commitment effectively. We often think of volunteering as something we do spontaneously, as when we are moved by an appeal to help or the images of a needy group of people on our televisions. As we saw on September 11, there is a lot of truth to this, but as we also saw on that day, volunteering requires more to be useful in dealing with the threats we now face. It requires not just the will (of which Americans have always had plenty), but also careful and creative thought about the ways.

That is part of what President Bush is trying to do with the USA Freedom Corps. Last November, in a speech in Atlanta, the President responded to those asking what they could do to help by calling on Americans to "get directly involved in this war effort, by making our homes and neighborhoods and schools and workplaces safer." A few weeks later, in his State of the Union address, he created the USA Freedom Corps, a major Presidential initiative aimed at fostering a new culture of "citizenship, service, and responsibility" and helping the nation's voluntary groups build the kind of capacity they need to better assist not only in the war effort, but also in the many other vital tasks they perform in our communities.

As part of that sweeping initiative, the President called for the creation of a new set of Citizen Corps programs to deal specifically with the issue of homeland security. Today, FEMA and the Departments of Justice and Health and Human Services are working together to create and expand these programs.

At the Corporation for National and Community Service, we have long utilized Senior Corps volunteers and AmeriCorps members in public health, public safety, and disaster relief and preparedness. These programs were not designed specifically to deal with terror attacks, of course, but our members were well trained and fully able to take on the task. And like other Americans, they were glad to have the opportunity. Many, for example, have long worked with the American Red Cross and FEMA, responding to disasters and ensuring public safety. Currently, twenty American Red Cross Chapters sponsor National Readiness and Response Corps teams staffed by AmeriCorps members. These teams have assisted more than 430,000 victims of natural disasters since 1994.

Members of our National Civilian Community Corps, an AmeriCorps program, responded to the September 11 attacks, helping to process requests for aid, distributing relief checks to victims' families, and assisting them with paperwork and other kinds of support, both in New York and Washington. While the rescue workers combed through the site, our Corps members were helping out with the little things that truly made a difference in people's lives. They worked at Pier 94 in New York, at a Red Cross phone bank in Northern Virginia, and elsewhere. As one AmeriCorps member put it in an e-mail: "The hours are long, the cases are stressful, the food is fattening, but all in all we wouldn't want to be anywhere else right now."

AmeriCorps and Senior Corps participants are also working around the nation to free up police and other "first responders" by taking on basic tasks that divert them from focusing on public safety. Volunteers with special skills, such as our veterans, provide backup assistance to fire and medical personnel, while ordinary citizens can and do provide basic administrative assistance to police stations, hospitals, and fire stations so that those with highly technical skills can focus their time and energies on the tasks they are trained to perform.

In Daytona Beach, for example, nearly two hundred members of our Senior Corps participate in the local Citizens on Patrol program, helping police with traffic management and neighborhood watch. They wear uniforms, look for suspicious activity, remove disabled vehicles, watch vacant homes, and search for missing persons. They have fingerprinted thousands of children in an effort to keep them safe in the community. Last year alone, they served more than 51,000 hours and logged more than 360,000 miles in their patrol cars, allowing trained law enforcement officials in the county to focus on crime prevention and real emergencies.

And there's more to come. Just a few weeks ago, we became one of the first federal agencies to direct grant money to community groups working in homeland security. The $10.3 million in grants we gave to 43 private groups and public agencies in 26 states and the District of Columbia will support more than 37,000 homeland security volunteers across the nation. The grantees included: the venerable American Radio Relay League, based in Connecticut, which will create a national communications network of amateur radio enthusiasts prepared to respond in disasters when those new-fangled cell phones and pda's become inoperative; Mercy Medical Airlift, a charitable organization based in Virginia that usually flies critically ill patients to receive treatment around the country, but will also now prepare its network of pilots to fly at a moment's notice, transporting emergency blood shipments to hospitals, key relief agency officials to disaster sites, and needed materials to rescue and response crews; and the Housing Authority of the City of Milwaukee, which will train an intergenerational group of 2000 public housing residents in emergency preparedness, crime prevention, basic responder skills, and the use of two-way radios. In several communities, the American Red Cross will be working with local organizations to develop response plans and in New York City, the AmeriCorps Public Safety Program will place members in firehouses to relieve some of the administrative burdens on the "bravest of the brave," who sacrificed so much for all of us on September 11. Last, but not least, one of our grants will establish the New Jersey Secure Corps, whose main objective will be to ensure that every county in that state has a fully functioning VOAD.

These programs, I believe, represent some of the most appropriate and effective ways that citizens can help prepare for or respond to any future attack. They build on our strengths—the vast array of voluntary groups that are spread throughout our nation and the credibility they enjoy with so many Americans—to create an organized network that is ready, willing, and able to tackle emergencies whenever and wherever they arise. They do not ask ordinary citizens to take on the often difficult and dangerous tasks that the "first responders" and other specialists are qualified to do. But by coordinating their efforts with those trained professionals, these programs enable ordinary Americans—such as Senior Corps member Roseann Schneider, who is here today, but would otherwise be helping the Montgomery County police—to make extraordinary contributions to our nation's safety and security when the occasion requires them to do so.

Most importantly, by enlisting Americans in serving their country, these programs—and the broader efforts of the USA Freedom Corps—help to perpetuate our country's greatest source of strength, both in war and in peace: a citizenry that is actively engaged in public life.

When he announced the creation of USA Freedom Corps, the President also asked Americans to devote at least two years of their lives—or 4,000 hours—in service to their Congress also needs to pass the Citizen Service Act, the legislation pending in the House right now would bring much needed improvements and reforms to our programs—as well as more resources. It has been almost a decade since the laws that authorize our programs were last debated and authorized—and while we have done much to expand and improve our programs with lapsed authorization, we think that debate and discussion will take us much further—and will ultimately help enhance the availability of quality volunteer opportunities for individuals and improve the quality of service that volunteers provide in response to many of our greatest national needs, including homeland security. A clear Congressional endorsement of this work would be a fitting way to recognize the efforts volunteers made on September 11—and are still making—to guard against the evils of terrorism.

Here with us today is one of those people: AmeriCorps member Mark Lindquist, who is a team leader at the DC campus of our National Civilian Community Corps. Right after September 11, he helped run shuttles between the Pentagon and Red Cross headquarters in Arlington, set up Red Cross centers for rescue and relief workers, as well as for survivors and their families, and a phone bank which people could call for more information. And during the rest of his AmeriCorps year, he took the training he received in helping victims of catastrophes to La Plata, Maryland, as well as states that had been ravaged by floods and forest fires.

All of us at the Corporation for National and Community Service, including our chairman, former Mayor Stephen Goldsmith and distinguished board of directors, are privileged to work with people like Mark and on issues such as volunteerism, philanthropy, and national service for many years now. For the first time in a long time, the values that we seek to inculcate and perpetuate through programs such as AmeriCorps, Senior Corps, and Learn and Serve America—patriotism, democratic citizenship, a concern for the national purpose, the desire to give back—are on the front burner of our nation's politics.

But they won't stay there forever. Dr. Robert Putnam, author of the book Bowling Alone, recently noted that: "in the aftermath of [last] September's tragedy, a window of opportunity has opened for a sort of civic renewal that occurs only once or twice a century. But though the crisis revealed and replenished the wells of solidarity in American communities, so far those wells remain untapped."

We should not lose the momentum toward civic connectedness and service to others that came out of the terrible event whose anniversary we will mark in just two weeks. Our Nation still has a great need for volunteers, in homeland security and in many other areas. And public service itself is a responsibility that attends the privilege of life in a free society. Among all that we will be called upon to remember in the next two weeks, let us not forget that the ideals embodied by our country are not only worth defending. They are also worth serving.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JIM

SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow as I rise to pay tribute to the memory and passing of Colorado Division of Wildlife biologist, Jim Olterman of Dolores, Colorado. Jim Olterman had an exemplary career in his time at the agency and embodied the principles of honesty, hardwork, and courage that Coloradans and all Americans should strive to exemplify. As his family mourns his loss, we should pay tribute to a man who has contributed so much not only to the vitality of the region's wildlife, but also to the State of Colorado.

Mr. Olterman tragically lost his life Wednesday when his plane crashed while he was carrying out aerial fish-stocking duties high in the lakes of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains. As the most experienced pilot in the CDOW, Jim understood the danger that was involved in flying these high risk operations, but he chose the assignment because he believed in the division's mission to ensure the vitality of animal species in the wild.

Mr. Olterman served a very distinguished career in 27 years at the division. After attending Oregon State graduate school, Mr. Olterman entered into Division of Wildlife training classes and, in 1972, began to work for the Colorado Division of Wildlife's Ridgeway District. In 1979, Jim was promoted to the position of senior terrestrial biologist for the district, followed by a promotion in 1994 to senior terrestrial biologist for the entire Western Slope of Colorado.

Jim was involved in the reintroduction of many wildlife species in Western Colorado such as moose, lynx, and the black foot ferret. He was also the lead biologist of big game species in his district and played a crucial role in the expansion of big game herds throughout the region. Well-liked and widely respected throughout the agency, Jim Olterman was known as the "go to guy" who could always provide assistance and a thoughtful opinion on a broad range of subjects. It has been widely expressed throughout the CDOW that his pleasant company will be deeply missed and the proficiency and expertise that he brought to his work will be irreplaceable.

Mr. Speaker, it is with deep respect and great sadness that I recognize Mr. Jim Olterman before this body of Congress and this nation for the definitive contributions he made to his profession, to Colorado, and this nation. He devoted his life to the protection and management of Colorado's wildlife, and I commend him for the diligence and commitment he displayed in his professional endeavors. He will be missed by the many souls he touched in his life and I express my sincere condolences to his wife Robin and his family.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

REFLECTIONS ON AMERICA

HON. JOSEPH M. HOFFEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. HOFFEL. Mr. Speaker, recently, as the one-year anniversary of September 11 approached, I looked back over the statement I released the day after the attacks occurred. As I read the statement that was issued even as the smoke and dust still billowed over Lower Manhattan, the Pentagon and a field in rural Pennsylvania, I was struck by how easy it was to write some of the words and how difficult it was to write others.

It was tremendously difficult to put into words my feelings of disbelief and anger over the insane acts of 19 individuals and their supporters. It still is. It was heart rending to try to voice the sorrow and sympathy I felt for the victims and their families. And that, too, is still difficult.

It was not difficult, however to write the words of hope, pride and conviction I had for this country and its people on September 12. And, today, a year later, I am happy to report that the hope, pride and conviction were well-founded. On September 12, 2001 I wrote, in part:

"As I walked to work across the Capitol grounds this morning, a day after the attacks, I was struck as I often am by the incredible beauty of the U.S. Capitol building. The dome was shining a brilliant white against a clear blue sky on a beautiful late summer day. I realized that the glorious dome, such a symbol of the strength and stability of our country, might well have been the final target of the ill-fated fourth hijacked plane.

"The simple truth is that even if a terrorist act had destroyed the dome, or if a thousand terrorist acts had obliterated the entire capital, America would still be standing firm as it is today."

In the past year, we have cried and cursed. We have opened our hearts and our wallets. We have buried our dead and we continue to heal our wounded and sorrowful. We have cleared the debris and begun to rebuild. Our President has led, and Congress has indeed stood shoulder to shoulder with him in support. Our soldiers have fought bravely and we here at home have done what we do best—we went back to work.

We will never again look at the world in the same way. We are sadder. We are wiser. We are closer. And, as I said a year ago, we are still standing firm. We've been through a lot. There will be tough times ahead, but today I have even a stronger feeling of hope, pride and conviction in our country and its people. God Bless America.

TRIBUTE TO GARY QUICK ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT
AS A UNION LEADER

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to a man who was a union member for over forty three years and a union leader in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan for almost that long. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Gary Quick on the occasion of his retirement on June 30, 2002.

September 9, 2002

Gary Quick was born in downstate Michigan on October 28, 1940 and moved with his family to Rapid River in the Upper Peninsula as a child. Gary graduated from Rapid River High School in 1959.

Gary's union career began when he accepted a position as a sub assembler at the Harnischfeger Corporation plant in Escanaba, Michigan on May 4, 1959. With the new position came membership in United Auto Workers Local 632.

Gary came from a union family so he understood and valued the importance of union membership and union leadership. Gary was elected by members of Local 632 as Steward in 1963 serving until 1966.

Gary maintained the respect of the union rank and file and was elected Vice President of U.A.W. Local 632 in 1967. After two years as Vice President, Gary was elected President of Local 632 in 1969.

Mr. Speaker, Gary is not just a leader in his union, he is also a patriot who has a great love of his country. While serving his brothers and sisters as president of local 632, Gary also served his country as a United States Army Reservist.

Gary was honored to be sent to the U.A.W. Constitutional Convention as a delegate seven times between the years 1966 and 1983. He also served as a delegate to the Trades and Labor Council. In addition to his union activities, Gary served as a Commissioner on the Delta County Road Commission for six years.

The United Auto Workers Union recognized Gary's union leadership skills and service and appointed him to a union staff position as an International Representative in the United Auto Worker's Escanaba Sub-Region I-D office in April of 1989.

While serving as an International Representative, Gary successfully negotiated union contracts in a wide variety of employment settings including the health care, higher education, automotive, and aerospace industries.

Not one to shy away from public service, Gary also served on many community and industry boards and councils such as the Blue Cross Blue Shield Advisory Board, the Labor Management Board, and the Private Industry Council.

After attending his last U.A.W. Constitutional Convention this year, Gary announced his retirement effective June 30, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, when Gary was asked to recall the biggest influence in his union career, he responded that former United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther was the most influential figure in his career. The late Walter Reuther, who was known to call everyone he met brother, made many profound statements in his lifelong effort to better the lives of workers everywhere.

One such statement inscribed on Reuther's statue in the Walter and May Reuther Gardens at the Black Lake U.A.W. Educational Center in my district reads: "There is no greater calling than to serve your brother. There is no greater satisfaction than to have done it well."

Mr. Speaker, brother Gary Quick responded to his great calling and brother Quick has served his brothers and sisters well.

While Gary may be retiring from his active position with the union, I know that he will retain his love and support for his brothers and sisters in labor. Gary will now be able to focus his activities toward his wife Beverly and stepdaughter Tina, who, together with friends, relatives and union brothers and sisters celebrated Gary's retirement at a dinner on September 7, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my House colleagues to join me in saluting Gary Quick, a true personal friend and a friend of labor in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JAMES H. GOMEZ

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor one of CalPERS' highest-ranking officials, Mr. James H. Gomez, as he ends his tenure as the Deputy Executive Officer.

James Gomez was appointed to the position of Deputy Executive Officer of CalPERS in December of 1996, a position that is second in command and serves as the chief operating officer under the CEO. As chief operating officer, James Gomez was responsible for the day-to-day operations of the $145 billion retirement system. He led the implementation of CalPERS' strategic plan to ensure the system is a world-class administrator of retirement and health benefits for public employees.

While at CalPERS, James Gomez made his mark by improving customer service with the Customer Call Center which significantly improves the ability to provide solutions to members' problems. He also led the effort to obtain $7 billion in state funding to benefit state and public school employees. The imaging project he oversaw allowed 51 million records to be imaged for increased record efficiency. CalPERS is a more effective and efficient organization due to the hard work and dedication of James Gomez.

James Gomez has been a public servant for close to 30 years working for the State Department of Benefit Payments, State Department of Social Services, California Department of Corrections, the County of Santa Clara, and most recently CalPERS. His dedication to public service kept him with the California State Department of Social Services over several years where he was tasked with ensuring that all children and foster care services were difficult to enter into but simple to leave.

James Gomez is the recipient of many distinguished awards and recognitions, including the American Society of Public Administrators and the Outstanding Public Administrator Award. In recognition for his contributions, he has earned the One to One, Leadership Award, Share the Path Program, along with other such distinguishable awards.

I am honored to join the employees of CalPERS in commending James Gomez for his many years in public service. His dedication to the community has been great and his commitment to the employees of California will serve as a model for others to follow.

U.S. SHOULD ASSUME INTERNATIONAL LEADERSHIP ROLE ON THE ENVIRONMENT

HON. CIRO D. RODRIGUEZ

OF TEXAS

Monday, September 9, 2002

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I expected that the United States would have taken a leadership role in the recent international summit on sustainable development. Instead, I am disappointed to report that this Administration has taken a back seat in international discussions on global warming and increasing the use of renewable energy.

GLOBAL WARMING

The United States is the number one contributor of greenhouse gases worldwide. We have a responsibility to provide the necessary international leadership to address global warming. It is shameful that the Bush Administration has elected to ignore that responsibility. Not only did the Bush Administration decide that the United States should not take a leadership role on addressing the challenges presented by global warming, but worse, it also tried desperately to keep the climate change issue off of the World Summit on Sustainable Development Agenda earlier this month in Johannesburg.

We may not agree with every international recommendation, and we must chart our own course. But at the time we must engage the issue not only here at home but also with our global neighbors around the world. If we don't show leadership, then we abdicate leadership.

RENEWABLE ENERGY

Even though we in the U.S. account for only 4 percent of the world's population, we account for 20 percent of the world's energy use. We are the world's great producer and great consumer. We must take responsibility for the consequences of our prosperity. Simply seeking voluntary standards to protect the environment will not solve the problem. Without some sort of specific timetables or goals, we will never get there. Partnerships are successful only when there is binding accountability. The Enron and WorldCom scandals have shown us the hard way that corporate self-policing will not work. We don't need corporations to do to our environment what they have done to their employees' 401 Ks.

Our national energy policy must include a forward-thinking plan to increase the use of renewable energy—in our buildings, automobiles, and appliances, the large sources of carbon dioxide emissions. Tax credits, incentives to use smart energy plans, and efficiency programs such as those offered by the Brooks Energy Sustainability Lab are all steps in the right direction to create more energy-efficient buildings and appliances.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Monday, September 9, 2002 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, The Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, there are not enough days in a year to dedicate just one prayerful day for each life lost on that fateful day a year ago tomorrow. But each day, we remember the crumbling towers, the battered Pentagon, and the cavern in Shanksville field. Each life consumed and each family wounded is commended once again today to Your tender mercy and lasting love.

Just Reward for the virtuous, we still hold dear the snapshots in our mind of the heroes and heroines You revealed to us in the action film of this past year. In You each act of courage and selfless generosity will never be forgotten.

Guardian of saint and sinner alike, guide government leaders now, protect our military forces today, and help all Americans realize their fullest potential in the time You give us. Amen.

IN MEMORY OF WILLIAM A. SCHWARTZ

(Mr. ISAKSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ISAKSON. Madam Speaker, I rise today to mourn the passing of William A. Schwartz and to praise his tireless dedication on behalf of his fellow man.

William Schwartz, the CEO of the National Prostate Cancer Coalition, died last week; and he died of prostate cancer. Mr. Schwartz is the former president and CEO of Cox Enterprises and was president of Cannell Communications and First Media Television. He was an outstanding citizen of Atlanta, Georgia, and worked tirelessly on behalf of many organizations, including the Jewish Federation of Greater Atlanta, the Atlanta Ballet, and Temple Sinai, where he was an active member.

In 1994, Mr. Schwartz was diagnosed with prostate cancer, and from that day forward he dedicated himself to promoting awareness and increasing research to fight prostate cancer. As the volunteer chairman of the National Prostate Cancer Coalition, he lobbied effectively for increased funding for cancer research, and his advocacy benefited men throughout America.

Though prostate cancer took the life of William Schwartz, his spirit and tireless efforts will save the lives of many men.

UNJUSTIFIED WAR AGAINST IRAQ

(Mr. KUCINICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, we owe it to the memories of those who lost their lives on 9-11 to remember, to reflect, and also to bring to justice those responsible. We also have a similar obligation not to use the events of 9-11 and the great losses which so many endured as a pretext for launching a war against Iraq.

Iraq was not responsible for 9-11. Iraq has not been linked to 9-11. Yet here we are on the anniversary of that grim day, and all the administration is attempting to do is reframe 9-11 by beating the drum for war against a nation not connected to 9-11.

America has had enough violence in the past year for our country to have to suffer even more violence to the truth which brings us into an unjustified war. Let us heal our Nation and heal it with truth and with justice. That is the American way.

CONGRESS SHOULD PASS AN ENERGY BILL

(Mr. HEFLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Mr. HEFLEY. Madam Speaker, we are approaching the end of this Congress without sending an energy bill to the President. The House passed H.R. 4, the Securing America's Future Energy Act of 2001; and unfortunately, we are not, after 1 year from that passage, celebrating the signing of H.R. 4 into law.

The President is still waiting to sign a comprehensive energy reform package that reduces our Nation's dependency on foreign oil. Why is the President still waiting, Madam Speaker? Not because of this House, who worked with the President to pass a comprehensive energy reform that increases America's national security. H.R. 4 was ignored by the party that controls the other body, who, instead, chose to take up and pass an energy package that did nothing to reduce our dependency on countries like Iraq and people like Saddam Hussein for our country's energy needs.

Madam Speaker, let us send the President an energy bill that he can sign with confidence, one that increases both our economic security and our national security. Let us pass one that looks very much like the one we passed a year ago August.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded not to characterize actions or inactions of the other body of the Congress.

STEEL HEALTH LEGACY COSTS

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam Speaker, the United States has become the world's steel dumping ground at the expense of U.S. jobs, U.S. families, and the U.S. economy.

Since 1997, 34 steel companies have filed for bankruptcy, 17 since January of 2001, since President Bush became President, including LTV in Cleveland and RTI in Lorain, Ohio. Unfair trade has victimized an entire generation of American steelworkers, who now depend on this industry, steelworkers and retirees, for their benefits.

It is time for our leaders in Washington, for a change, to stand up. The House Steel Revitalization Act, H.R. 808, has 229 cosponsors, more than a majority of this body. The Steel Revitalization Act will mean jobs, it will mean community revitalization, it will mean strengthening and improving the U.S. economy; yet Republican leadership has blocked this bill.

A majority of Members of Congress have cosponsored this Steel Revitalization Act, and the conservative Republican leadership will not let this bill come to a vote. I ask my Republican friends to push their leadership to do the right thing.

ALLOW RESPONSIBLE FOREST MANAGEMENT

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Speaker, in the first 6 months of this year, wildfires have burned nearly 3 million acres out west. That 6-month total is significantly more than the annual averages, and even greater than the number of acres burned at the same point during the record-setting fire year of 2000. And thousands of acres of fire continue to burn as we speak.

So far, the State of Nevada has endured over 678 separate fires, turning nearly 81,000 acres into charcoal. Wildfires not only devastate our precious national forests but they endanger private property and the lives of thousands of residents in the West. It is time we give the Forest Service and the Department of the Interior the tools they need to expeditiously implement fuels-reduction work on tens of millions of acres of public land at risk of severe wildfire.

I urge my colleagues to support the efforts of the House Committee on Resources to move the President's healthy forest initiative to reduce wildfire risk for the sake of our national resources, our property, and our lives.

DECREASE OF UNDERWEIGHT BABIES IN ORANGE COUNTY

(Ms. SANCHEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SANCHEZ. Madam Speaker, I rise today to commend the cities of Santa Ana and Anaheim for helping to bring down the rate of underweight babies in Orange County. Because of the high quality health care these cities have provided to women in my district, we have one of the lowest underweight birth rates in the Nation.

Santa Ana and Anaheim have proven that prenatal programs are the key to lowering the numbers of underweight babies and infant mortality. In fact, one such program, Maternal Outreach Management Systems, or MOMS, a nonprofit organization, has worked hard to improve infant health by working with women who are undereducated or may not have the proper information. MOMS comes together to help, in particular to help those with young children or about to give birth.

Out of the 46,000 born in Orange County this past year, only 5.5 percent of the babies were born underweight. Programs like MOMS have given more women opportunities to provide a better life for their unborn children and a better chance at being healthy. Again, I would like to commend our cities of Santa Ana and Anaheim in helping with this.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM LEGISLATION KILLS FREE SPEECH

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Madam Speaker, nothing is more important in our democracy than the right to free speech and peaceful assembly. No matter what they believe, we need to allow people to speak out. When we begin to hush people up because of what they believe, none of us is safe any longer.

Until recently, I thought all of us agreed on this. I guess I was wrong. I am sorry to say that the bankruptcy reform conference report contains a provision that singles out one group of people for unusually harsh punishment simply for what they believe. Under an amendment pushed through by one powerful Senator, peaceful, nonviolent pro-life protestors will face lifelong financial ruin if they have the temerity to stand outside an abortion clinic and protest the death of children inside.

Other groups can keep on speaking out and protesting, as they always have, environmental, labor, and civil rights. But if we pass this bill in its present form, pro-lifers will no longer have the same rights as other Americans have. This is not fair, and this body should take no part in this. It is wrong.

I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing the bankruptcy conference report in its present form. We should reintroduce this bill without this abortion amendment and do the job right.

URGING MEMBERS TO JOIN CON- GRESSIONAL MISSING AND EX- PLOITED CHILDREN'S CAUCUS

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Madam Speaker, today I rise to again urge my colleagues, if they are not already members, to join the Congressional Missing and Exploited Children's Caucus.

In 1997, a little girl named Laura Kate Smither was abducted while jogging near her home in my congressional district. She was later found murdered. We have seen many of those stories, unfortunately too many of them lately. The pain that I saw and the terror that I saw my community go through, as well as the way they came together to search for this little girl, inspired me to want to do something to prevent this kind of loss in the future.

I came to Congress with a lot of ideas and issues on my mind, but soon realized the importance of one that was not being adequately addressed; and so I founded the Congressional Missing and Exploited Children's Caucus to serve as a loud and unified voice for children all over the world.

We have seen lots of stories recently on CNN and in our newspapers, elsewhere, during the summer. It is not that there are more but that we are becoming aware. I urge my colleagues to join this congressional caucus and to help us continue to fight child abduction and exploitation.

REMEMBERING SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. Madam Speaker, to state the obvious, tomorrow is September 11 again. Like many Americans, I will be home taking time with family and neighbors for a solemn reflection, remembrance and prayer, and so it should be for all Americans. But my earnest hope, Madam Speaker, is that September 11 of this year not be an anxious time; that in addition to remembering the lost, we actually, Madam Speaker, have much to commemorate.

In the past 12 months, our people have responded with selfless actions of courage and generosity, our military has responded with valor, our President with moral clarity and purpose, and this Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, have responded with resources and reform.

America is better prepared and safer this September 11 than the last. Let us also be confident in this, that He who sets this pilgrim's dream on this wilderness shore still watches over us. And I say like Americans have said throughout generations, I lift up my eyes to the hills, and where does my help come from, my help comes from the Lord.

DEFEAT H.R. 2357, ALLOWING CHURCHES TO FUND POLITICAL CAMPAIGNS

(Mr. EDWARDS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Madam Speaker, the American people need to know that there is legislation pending in this House that would turn our churches into political campaign organizations. This bill would actually allow churches to endorse political candidates and even contribute church funds to political campaigns.

H.R. 2357 is an extraordinarily bad bill. It is a dangerous bill. This bill would demean the spiritual mission of our houses of worship by turning them into a vehicle for campaign contributions and partisanship. If someone wanted to maliciously tear our churches apart, I can think of few ways to do it better than to pit church members against church members each year as they debate which Federal, State, county and local candidates to endorse and how much to contribute to them.

This bill is opposed by numerous religious organizations, including the Baptist Joint Committee, the American Jewish Committee, the General Board of Church and Society, the United Methodist Church, the Congress of National Black Churches, the Interfaith Alliance Foundation and the Baptist General Convention of Texas, just to name a few.

If anyone thinks politicizing churches is a good idea, then they need to review the lessons of world history.

AMERICANS URGED TO REMEMBER SEPTEMBER 11

(Mr. SMITH of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Madam Speaker, this week it is important to remember those who lost their lives during the attack on America last year, as well as all of our first responders, our medics, our military personnel, and the people that volunteered and tried to help.

I think our Founding Fathers would be very proud of our new diligence in our quest to preserve liberty and freedom in this country. President Bush has designated September 11 of each year to be Patriot Day, and calls on all Americans to observe it appropriately.

I urge my Michigan citizens and all Americans to spend some time thinking about what we need to do to protect our liberty and freedom, and to pray for the families of those that died in the terrorist attack in Pennsylvania, Washington and New York. This Wednesday marks the 1-year anniversary. Let us remember what our forefathers did, and what happened to us 1 year ago and our renewed vigor to make sure that we do what is important to sacrifice ourselves in the preservation of liberty and freedom.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 3210, TERRORISM RISK PROTECTION ACT

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees on the bill (H.R. 3210) to ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOSSELLA moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill H.R. 3210 be instructed to agree to the provisions contained in section 11 of the Senate amendment, relating to satisfaction of judgments from frozen assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terrorism.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under rule XXII, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3210.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, as we all know, tomorrow marks the first anniversary of the greatest attack on the soil of the United States of America. In that attack, both at the Pentagon in Virginia, in Pennsylvania, and in downtown Manhattan, the Nation lost thousands of innocent human lives.

Since then I think our Nation has been on full alert and in the field combating the war on terrorism, seeking out those evil ones who committed those dastardly acts, so we can ensure that we can keep the peace for future generations. But at the same time, we need to get at the heart of these terrorist organizations in those states that sponsor terrorism.

Believe it or not, if an American citizen seeks a judgment in a court of law and is successful against some of these terrorist organizations or states that sponsor terrorism, and assets are frozen by the United States Government, some of those victims who are successful in a court of law may not and indeed are not recovering those assets.

It is a little ironic that American citizens can sue their neighbor for a mild act, obtain a judgment and recover, and yet we cannot sue a terrorist organization that killed people, and in this case thousands, and not recover unless the Federal Government on a petition or a case-by-case basis determines that those successful plaintiffs should recover. This motion to instruct will attempt to right that wrong.

Under current law, Americans who have been victimized by terrorist and state-subsidized terrorism and are eligible to enforce court judgments against the assets of a terrorist state have had to wait until Congress acts before they can receive their awarded funds. Some victims have gotten compensated, and many have not. As I mentioned today, thousands of Americans and their families are considering and have joined the class action lawsuit aimed at recovering and undermining the ability of these groups to perpetuate their acts of evil.

American victims of international terrorism will all have equal access to the courts and to block assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terror as a small but important token of justice. We impose immediate financial costs on terrorists and states that sponsor terrorism, freezing assets for 20 years or 25 years or 30 years or even 5 years, and then giving them back to the terrorist state does not impose such costs, and that seems to be the policy today, dangling this carrot before these evildoers as if they are going to stop their evil ways.

At present, terrorism is a cheap way to pursue war against Americans. Unless America finds ways to make it more costly, terrorists and those states that sponsor terrorism have no economic incentive to stop. By imposing a direct and immediate cost, this provision represents one effective financial tool, one of many, against terrorists and those who help them, and this will seek to help the victims.

Finally, terrorist-sponsored states will no longer be able to use their diplomatic and intelligence agencies to support terrorists with financial impunity. In other words, hiding behind this veil of diplomatic or intelligence immunity, something that is too often abused and flies in the face of justice.

Terrorism-sponsoring states use those wholly owned and controlled agencies and instrumentalities to raise, to launder, and to distribute funds to terrorist cells, sometimes even in the United States of America. Ironically, these agencies and instrumentalities can claim foreign sovereign immunity against victims in U.S. courts because of their relationship with the terrorist-sponsoring states.

By exposing these agencies and instrumentalities to liability, the U.S. further increases the cost of sponsoring terrorism, and goes after the sources of funding for these organizations and cells.

Madam Speaker, tragically and regrettably, I lost a lot of friends and a lot of neighbors; and America lost a lot of friends and a lot of neighbors and brothers and sisters, more than 200 people from Staten Island and almost another 100 from the Brooklyn portion of my district. Those families right now are suffering the shock of it, the shock of losing a father or a mother or a sister or brother or uncle or aunt, and tomorrow marks the anniversary.

The notion that while brave men and women are fighting the war overseas in seeking out these terrorists and those who help them and harbor them and finance them because they are thinking of doing it again, the notion that this government, our government, could prevent my neighbors and friends one day, if successful in a court of law in obtaining judgment, to be unable to recover assets of a terrorist organization or a state that sponsors terrorism to me is the most unjust thing in this Nation.

Madam Speaker, I urge all Members to support this motion to instruct, to be compatible with the other body and bring justice to these families, these victims of terrorism.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I applaud the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) for bringing this motion to instruct forward and pursuing a very good idea. I see that the gentleman has a number of speakers, so I am going to reserve my comments until some of his speakers can proceed.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON), a man who deserves much, if not all, of the credit for bringing this to the floor today.

Mr. CANNON. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) for moving this issue today and giving me an opportunity to speak.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3210, the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, which provides for continued availability of insurance against terrorism risks and addresses multiple insurance and liability issues arising from the September 11 attacks.

The Senate passed a similar version overwhelmingly supported by the House, and this motion will allow the House to show its support for the issue with a vote to instruct conferees. I would like to talk particularly about what I think is one of the most important issues in that bill which fell within the Committee on the Judiciary's jurisdiction.

Under current law, Americans who have been victimized by state-subsidized terrorism and are eligible to enforce court judgments against the assets of a terrorist state have had to wait for Congress to act before they could collect their awarded funds. Some victims have gotten compensated. However, most have not.

Under the Fossella-Cannon language in section 15(e) of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act passed by the House, American victims of international terrorism will have equal access to the courts and to blocked assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations, and state sponsors of terror as a small but important token of justice.

This language imposes immediate financial costs on the states that sponsor terrorism. Freezing assets for 20 years and then giving them back to the terrorist states does not impose such costs. At present, terrorism is a cheap way to pursue war against Americans. Unless the U.S. finds ways to make it more costly, terrorists and states which sponsor terrorism have less economic incentive to stop. By imposing a direct and immediate cost, this language represents one effective financial tool against terrorists and also helps their victims.

After the Senate pulled the language from their version of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and I introduced a stand-alone bill to ensure a solution to this problem. However, language identical to the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and me was added to the Senate bill on the floor by a vote of 81-3. With this provision now included in both the Senate and the House version of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, there is no reason why we should not be able to preserve the express will of both houses in conference by maintaining this language.

Madam Speaker, there are many people who would benefit from this, and with recent attacks on the World Trade Center, there are many from the district of the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) which this legislation would directly affect.

Others affected by it include people like Terry Anderson and other former hostages held by Hezbollah who successfully sued and won judgments against Iran but have not been able to collect from the seized assets. The provision in this bill today will allow access to the frozen assets of terrorists, terrorist organizations and terrorist-sponsored states, and American victims of international terrorism who obtain judgments against those terrorists.

I would like to once again thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY); the gentleman from Wisconsin (Chairman SENSENBRENNER); my colleague and friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA); and my colleague and friend, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), for their efforts on this issue.

I urge my colleagues to support the motion to instruct conferees. Allowing victims to go directly after the frozen assets of terrorists and their sponsors will help us to allow our Nation and economy to go forward.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, again I would like to thank the gentleman from Utah for his leadership.

Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI).

Mr. GRUCCI. Madam Speaker, I thank my colleagues, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), for their leadership on this. I would like to thank our chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), for his guidance and leadership on the Committee on Financial Services for bringing many pieces of legislation to reality that will help us to not only track the assets, to track the money of terrorists, but now, with this piece of legislation, hopefully we will be able to access that for the victims.

Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3210, in an attempt to locate the assets, to seize the assets, and to deliver them back to the victims of terrorists, terrorist nations, et cetera.

Tomorrow we will stand around and we will be in solemn prayer in some places, we will be at services at other places, and remember the tragic attacks on America of almost a year ago. Many of us have borne the pain of seeing families torn apart by this terrible, terrible tragedy. I myself have had over 70 families in my district torn apart. Two of them I knew personally.

It is a terrible ordeal for the families, not only to lose the ones they love, but then to face the uncertainty of what is going to happen to them economically. Their financial needs have all been torn apart. Their communities are reaching out to them, but they still do not have the strength of knowing what they have to go forward with.

Hopefully, if we can get this legislation moving forward, if we can move this piece of legislation forward, hopefully we can bring some peace to their minds, knowing that they will have access to not only the love and the compassion that has been contributed from Americans, but also they will be able to punish the terrorists even more by seizing their assets, seizing their money, which in turn will slow down their operations.

Madam Speaker, I could not be more in support of this legislation. Once again, I thank my colleagues for their leadership on this.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), chairman of the Committee on Financial Services, one who has been leading this effort, both before and after September 11, in tracking down the assets of terrorists and states that sponsor terrorism.

Mr. OXLEY. Madam Speaker, let me first recognize the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT) for their leadership on this very, very important issue.

The whole concept of taking terrorist assets that have been seized and compensating victims seems so elemental to our system of justice that it has clearly been one that has been incorporated in this legislation, both in the House and in the Senate; and I would say without the leadership of these two gentlemen, we would not be here today.

As we know, the House passed our version of the terrorism insurance legislation back last year. The Senate finally moved in June. We just appointed conferees right before the August recess. We are ready to go to work on this side.

I will say I have had some discussions with participants from the other body. They seem ready and prepared to move forward. There is no reason why we cannot get this legislation, this conference committee work, completed and on the President's desk as quickly as possible, I would hope certainly by the end of September. That is not an unrealistic possibility.

I just saw a study the other day that the amount of construction sites that are standing idle and the amount of money in those construction sites now is over $10.5 billion. That is an awful lot of jobs that we are losing as a result of this. Somebody once predicted without terrorism insurance we could have a loss of 1 percent of our Gross Domestic Product off the growth numbers. That is an awful lot of jobs, an awful lot of economic activity.

So, Madam Speaker, let us dedicate ourselves today to first passing this excellent motion to instruct conferees. I want to assure both gentlemen that my main task over the next few weeks will be to bring this conference report to the floor of the House and get it signed by the President.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), who again has been at the forefront and working closely with all of us to bring the terrorists to their heels.

Mr. BAKER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time and wish to express my appreciation to both the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) for their leadership on this important issue.

Madam Speaker, in this country when we find someone engaged in the sale of drugs to minors, we think it is such a terrible offense that we not only give them jail time when convicted, we seize all their assets. We take the car from which the material was hauled; we take anything we can find related to that activity.

How more appropriate when some state-sponsored activity takes the life of or tortures innocent individuals for no apparent reason, that we should go after not only those who commit the acts of terror, those who engage in it, but their assets as well?

The United States Government has seized millions of dollars of assets that could be made available to the victims of these heinous acts, but the Congress must act.

So I commend these individuals for taking the leadership in bringing forth this motion to instruct, which will, in some small way, bring relief to those who have been gravely harmed, and, more importantly, send a very strong message to those who engage in acts of terror: when you engage in these acts, there will be a very high price to pay. Money is not enough. We need more.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I want to express my thanks again to the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA), to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI), to the chairman of the Committee on Financial Services, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), and to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON), all of whom have viewed this issue as being important enough to come and support this motion to instruct conferees.

I am personally not a big proponent of motions to instruct conferees, because our experience has shown that when we instruct the conferees, they seldom pay much attention to what we are instructing them to do anyway. They kind of have minds of their own. But this seems to me to be one of those situations where there is a growing sense of unanimity that this is a good idea; and I want to thank my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA), for picking up the idea and running with it.

Let me kind of trace the history of how we got here so that my colleagues will understand it. There have been several kinds of odd references to me as one of the moving forces in this. My colleagues should know that this was an idea that I originated in a very crude amendment which I offered to the terrorism bill when it was being considered a year or so ago in the Committee on Financial Services.

I had two objectives in offering the crudely drawn, quickly drawn amendment to that bill. One of those was the obvious kind of frustration and feeling of helplessness that all of us had in the aftermath of the events of September 11 and the feeling that, as the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) said, this was a pretty elementary notion, that if the Federal Government was going to freeze assets of terrorists and terrorist groups, that it should not necessarily be the Federal Government that benefited from freezing those assets, but that those assets ultimately should be available to the individuals whose lives had been taken, the families of those individuals and the individuals who had been injured by acts of terrorism.

So the first reason that I had was just a sense of frustration and wanting to do something in response to the acts of September 11 and to other acts of terrorism.

The second rationale I had, really I have to reveal to my colleagues in honesty, was kind of to make a point, because when we were debating the terrorism reinsurance bill, one of the issues that came up in the committee was whether we would do some kind of tort reform in the context of the terrorism reinsurance bill.

I was frustrated by the notion that my colleagues would take a terrorism reinsurance bill and inject a highly political issue of tort reform in that bill, and I wanted to try to demonstrate to my colleagues how unreasonable I thought this whole concept of tort reform was. I thought the best way to do that was to point out to them that if they did tort reform, they would be capping as part of that tort reform the recoveries that individual citizens could obtain for acts of terrorism.

I could not imagine that my colleagues would want to put an arbitrary cap of $250,000 in punitive damages, or any kind of arbitrary cap, on the recovery by the family of a constituent of mine who had been killed in the violence on the U.S.S. Cole. My constituent, Lakeina Francis, who had lost her life, her family was there in North Carolina, and my colleagues were playing politics with this bill. I thought that one of the ways I could illustrate to them that what they were doing was unreasonable was to offer this amendment in the context of that terrorism reinsurance bill, and I did.

Of course, as I thought, it did put my colleagues who were supporting tort reform in a pretty tough position. They finally started to understand that these arbitrary caps that they were talking about in this bill did not make sense when somebody gets blown up, or when somebody gets injured by extreme negligence of another party. My colleagues thought this was a good idea, and they adopted this amendment in the terrorism reinsurance bill. They adopted my amendment to the bill.

Well, I conceded at the outset that this was a crude effort, an effort that started to build steam right there in the committee. After the committee markup and the passage of the House terrorism reinsurance bill, I am happy to say that the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON) picked up on this idea and introduced a free-standing bill that was much, much better than the crude language that I had offered in the committee; and when the bill was considered in the Senate, the Senators put the language in the bill which was much better than I had introduced in the Committee on Financial Services and much better even than the free-standing bill that the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON) introduced, which is why we are here with the motion to instruct conferees, to leave the provision in the bill.

That is how we got here. This is a great idea. Not because I started with the idea but just because of what the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) said, the chairman of the Committee on Financial Services, this is so elemental. Why would we freeze the assets of a terrorist group, a terrorist country, terrorist, and not make those assets available to satisfy a judgment that an individual who has been injured or the family of an individual who has been killed in a terrorist attack, why would we freeze the assets if we were not doing it for this honorable purpose?

So I just think this is something whose time has come. I do not think it is going to be controversial. The U.S. Treasury has blocked over $3 billion from organizations or countries designated as terrorists or state sponsors of terrorism. Blocking this money may cripple these organizations and these terrorist states, but it does little to assist the victims of their terrorist acts unless we put this provision in the bill. The bill allows Americans who have suffered as a result of terrorist acts to receive compensation from these blocked assets. Compensating victims will not end terrorism as we know it, but it does raise the price, and it sends a message to terrorist organizations and the states that sponsor them, we will not stand for the murder of innocent Americans. Those who target Americans will be punished and not only will you be punished criminally, you will be punished financially as a result of this language. Using terrorists' assets to compensate victims punishes terrorists and deters future acts of violence, hopefully; maybe, may not, but whether it does or does not, we want them to pay for what they have done. Terrorist states and organizations should not go unpunished for murdering innocent Americans.

Just this past summer, five Americans were murdered in the cafeteria at Hebrew University, and the organization that claims responsibility for that has funds blocked by the U.S. Treasury. Those people ought to have access to those funds and be able to get to them.

The gentleman from New York's bill is fair. It gives all American victims of terrorism an opportunity to receive compensation from terrorist assets, and I urge my colleagues to retain this important provision in the final version of the terrorism insurance bill. By doing so, we demonstrate our commitment to the victim of terrorist acts and show our resolve to punish those states and organizations that sponsor terrorism. This language holds terrorists accountable for their crimes against Americans. It is a great idea. I applaud the gentleman from New York and all of the people who picked it up and ran with it.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

At the outset, let me really thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT). We really would not be here but for his efforts, his ideas, his support, and his leadership. And the victims of terrorism owe thanks to the gentleman from North Carolina as well as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), the gentleman from New York (Mr. GRUCCI), and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON), who really brought us here today.

And underscore what we have all said, and I am not going to repeat it, but every day and especially tomorrow, September 11, 2002, we honor the heroes and the victims who perished last year, our fellow American citizens, those who just want an ordinary way of life, a peaceful life, who sought to raise a family in this great Nation, who sought to do a job and do it right, and those valiant heroes from EMS and the police department and the port authority and especially the firefighters, 78 of whom were from Staten Island alone, and names like Egan and Olsen and Curatola and Esposito and Siller and Leahy and Doyle, and tragically thousands of others. They are names, yes, but they are families. They have left behind children, they have left behind wives, husbands, parents, and grandparents, and what they were seeking is all what I think we are all about, the right to live in freedom with liberty and in peace, and that was robbed from them. That was robbed from them. It was robbed from their families. And, yes, we are a stronger and better country, and we are fortunate to have brave men and women to wear the uniform to go get those people, wherever they may be across the globe, with the commander in chief, President Bush, leading the way.

But at the same time, I think it is unbelievable that these families down the road, in the event that they will obtain a judgment, would have to come back to Congress or to their own government to petition against a terrorist organization or a state that sponsors terrorism to recover some of those assets.

We should not be here next year or 10 years from now debating this. We should end the subject right now, put it to a close, and bring justice to those victims who suffer today and will be suffering for a long time. But at least this Congress is speaking with one voice and saying that we are going to right that wrong and provide equity for all.

Mr. SHAYS. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the motion offered by the gentleman from New York and the gentlemen from North Carolina.

Now and then, a proposal comes before Congress that makes such good sense, it's a wonder no one thought of it sooner. We have just such a proposal before us today.

Under Section 11 of the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act, Americans who are victims of cowardly terrorist acts will get the justice they deserve—not just an IOU.

Allowing victims to enforce judgments against terrorists and state sponsors of terrorism will serve two vital purposes. First, it will compensate the victims of terrorism and their families. These brave men and women have suffered unimaginable losses, and they shouldn't have to worry about whether the State Department will release frozen terrorist assets in the event they prevail in a lawsuit and be awarded funds.

Second, this provision will cut financing for terrorism off at the knees. The assets of terrorist states shouldn't simply be frozen—they should be seized. That's what we're doing here today.

Madam Speaker, I would like to thank Chairman MIKE OXLEY for his commitment to this legislation, and urge all of my colleagues to vote for this common-sense motion to instruct.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 5011, MILITARY CONSTRUCTION APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

Mr. HOBSON. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5011) making appropriations for military construction, family housing, and base realignment and closure for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. OLVER

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OLVER moves that the managers on the part of the House on the conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill, H.R. 5011, be instructed to insist on the higher of House or Senate funding levels, with regard to funding for planning, design, construction, alterations and improvements of military facilities; including environmental remediation, barracks, hospitals, childcare facilities, and family housing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under rule XXII, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER).

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, this is a straightforward motion that all Members will be able to support. It instructs the House conferees to work toward the highest funding levels possible.

Madam Speaker, as the ranking member for this subcommittee, I have visited many military installations with the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON), installations which are both on shore and offshore.

We both agree that there is a tremendous backlog in providing decent housing, modern workplaces, and critical security for our service men and women and their families. The needs are well beyond the funding available in either the House or the Senate bill, but I strongly believe we need to get every cent available for military construction to the Department of Defense.

I urge Members to support this motion to instruct.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOBSON. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, we are willing to accept the gentleman's motion.

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOBSON. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER).

The motion to instruct was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. HOBSON, WALSH, DAN MILLER of Florida, and ADERHOLT, Mrs. GRANGER, Messrs. GOODE, SKEEN, VITTER, YOUNG of Florida, OLVER, EDWARDS, FARR of California, BOYD, DICKS, and OBEY.

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 5010, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

Mr. LEWIS of California. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5010) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS)?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. OLVER

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OLVER moves that the managers on the part of the House on the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill, H.R. 5010, be instructed to insist on the higher funding levels permitted within the scope of conference with regard to chemical and biological defense programs, projects, and activities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to rule XXII, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER).

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I offer this motion on behalf of the ranking subcommittee member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURTHA), who has been detained.

Madam Speaker, it has become obvious to all that chemical and biological warfare is a clear and present danger to our country.

□ 1100

The two gentlemen who lead the Subcommittee on Defense of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURTHA), have recognized this fact for many years and have steadfastly worked to increase the funding for the variety of promising technologies in development to protect us from these weapons of mass destruction. We want, through this motion, to continue this.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I am prepared to accept the gentleman's motion.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

RECOGNIZING HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE AND TIMELINESS OF UNITED STATES-IRELAND BUSINESS SUMMIT

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 513) recognizing the historical significance and timeliness of the United States-Ireland Business Summit, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 513

Whereas from September 4, 2002, to September 6, 2002, the United States-Ireland Business Summit was held at the Ronald Reagan Building International Trade Center in Washington D.C.;

Whereas global economic change and the war against international terrorism have challenged industries and governments throughout the world to look at new ways to resolve conflicts, eliminate barriers, and expand markets;

Whereas the Summit brought together senior level corporate, government, and academic leaders from across the United States, Ireland, and Northern Ireland for discussions on economic competitiveness and important issues that are confronting the sectors of information and communications technology, biotechnology, and financial services in the United States and European markets;

Whereas the discussions focused on new public and private sector priorities, market development and entry, regulatory issues, and opportunities for joint ventures and economic growth, generating alliances between businesses with operations in the United States, Ireland, and Northern Ireland;

Whereas increased economic growth and job creation in Northern Ireland can further help promote the peace and shared governance under the terms of the Good Friday Agreement of 1998;

Whereas President George W. Bush has offered a compelling new vision for peace in Northern Ireland that emphasizes private sector leadership and innovation to restore economic vitality and cooperation;

Whereas the United States-Ireland Business Summit was a bold step toward making the vision of President Bush a reality and creating new opportunities in the United States, Ireland, and Northern Ireland; and

Whereas approximately 44,000,000 citizens of the United States identify themselves as having Irish ancestry and the United States has a strong and enduring interest in maintaining close ties with the people of Ireland and in supporting efforts to ensure peace, justice, and prosperity in Northern Ireland: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress recognizes the historical significance and timeliness of the United States-Ireland Business Summit held in Washington, D.C. from September 4, 2002, to September 6, 2002.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from California (Ms. WATSON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, today we bring before the House H. Res. 513, recognizing the historical significance and timeliness of the United States-Ireland Business Summit which took place last week.

This groundbreaking economic forum, strongly supported by the Bush administration, brought together more than 400 key government officials and successful CEOs from the United States, Ireland and Northern Ireland to build upon the strong business relations existing between our nations, and to foster an even greater economic climate that will enable a just and lasting peace to take hold in Northern Ireland.

We know that for so much of its history Ireland's economic progress was tragically inhibited by British economic rule. In fact, it was pure economic conditions in Ireland that prompted millions of Irish to emigrate to the United States. The Irish who came to America helped build the infrastructure of our great Nation; they helped boost our young, industrial economy; and they played historic roles in the growth of our democracy.

Today there are at least 44 million Americans who trace their ancestry to Ireland. Irish Americans have leading roles in government, business and academia. A year ago this week, we again witnessed the strengths and unselfishness of many Irish American heroes who gave their lives as New York's firemen and policemen at the World Trade Center on September 11.

The U.S.-Irish Business Summit, convened last week here in Washington, marked a new chapter in our Nation's great friendship with the people of Ireland, both north and south. The 3-day forum promoted new venues for shared prosperity and new business partnerships especially in the areas of financial services, communications fields and biotech.

Next to human rights, economic progress in Ireland, especially in the north, is crucial to a just and sustainable peace. We know when prosperity abounds, strife and turmoil are often quelled. Increased economic investment in Northern Ireland is especially important now that we have worked to cement the peace and usher in the new human rights protections envisioned by the Good Friday Agreement. Despite strong support from the governments in the region, the U.S. Government, and most of the people in Northern Ireland itself, much more needs to be done to achieve a full implementation of the Good Friday Agreement.

The United States has known for some time that economic prosperity, so long as it is complemented by real protections in human rights, can be a key to peace. And we have put our money where our mouth is over these many years. Since 1986, the United States has contributed more than $320 million to the International Fund for Ireland, a joint British-Irish government program designed to help create jobs. The Fund has had a tremendous impact, especially in the north and the border communities where economic development and cross-community cooperation have been needed the most.

The private sector can join and build upon our government's investment in peace in Northern Ireland. I am hopeful that the U.S.-Ireland Business Summit will provide added momentum to the success of the International Fund for Ireland. Added private investment will mean that more people have jobs. It will ensure that more people, regardless of their political or religious affiliation, can have access to job creation and a greater quality of life.

Madam Speaker, I note that the manager's amendment to this resolution contains some minor technical and grammatical changes to reflect that the U.S.-Irish Business Summit occurred last week. I congratulate the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH), a prime sponsor of this, for his tremendous leadership in the area not just of the summit, but in Irish affairs in general.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WATSON of California. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 513. I first commend the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) for his leadership on this important resolution, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH) for introducing it.

Madam Speaker, for decades the people of Ireland have longed for peace and stability. Since the signing of the Good Friday Agreement of 1998, this dream is closer to reality than ever before. The Good Friday Agreement is a testament to the leadership abilities of George Mitchell and is one of the great achievements of President Clinton's foreign policy. However, the implementation of the Good Friday Agreement has not been without its setbacks, and it is critically important that all parties continue to push strongly for progress on political, security and economic fronts.

Madam Speaker, just a few miles away business leaders from the United States, Ireland and Northern Ireland met last week at the United States-Ireland Business Summit. I am pleased to report that these leaders helped lay the groundwork for the economic prosperity for Northern Ireland which is so critical to the peace process. This summit focused on generating new opportunities for business between the United States, Ireland and Northern Ireland, including promoting foreign investment, reducing regulatory barriers and increasing bilateral trade. Progress on these critically important issues can create new jobs for those unemployed on both sides of the Atlantic and make a tangible contribution to the success of the Good Friday Agreement.

I commend the leaders who participated in the summit, and urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), the chairman emeritus of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. GILMAN. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 513, recognizing the historical significance and timeliness of the 3-day U.S.-Ireland Business Summit which was held last week in Washington in which I was pleased to participate.

That business summit brought together business leaders from the Republic of Ireland, from Northern Ireland and the United States to discuss the importance and the advancement of our bilateral commercial ties across the Atlantic, and I thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATSON) for bringing this measure to the floor at this time.

Our special relationship and history that our Nation enjoys with Ireland is reflected in the increased trade between our two nations over the past decade. This has produced mutual benefits both for Ireland as well as the United States, and continues to underscore our common values, our traditions and our commitment to free trade. Moreover, expanding international commercial links has underscored and reinforced the benefits of peace in Northern Ireland. An environment free of violence and fear is vital to fostering a prosperous business community. However, the hard-won peace in Northern Ireland still remains fragile, which is why last week's summit was so critical for continuing the positive changes which have been made to date.

Regrettably, the interface violence we saw this last summer demonstrates that we are not yet over all of the troubles in the north. Accordingly, I want to commend President Bush for his strong support of this U.S.-Ireland summit, and particularly the summit chairman, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS) and the Irish-American Republicans for their leadership on this summit initiative. I urge my colleagues to continue our support of this worthy endeavor.

Ms. WATSON of California. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE).

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), who has really done such an outstanding job not only in his work in Ireland in general but in human rights throughout the world. Many people are much better off because of his interests, his compassion, and his tenacity in seeing that those who have the least voice in the world are heard. Let me thank the ambassador for bringing forth this resolution.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to have visited both Ireland and Northern Ireland on several occasions. Taking satisfaction that the peace process is moving forward, I would like to reiterate my support for the goals of the U.S.-Ireland summit, this summit designed to bring together senior-level corporate government and academic leaders for discussion on economic competitiveness, consider important issues in the areas of information and communications technology, biotechnology, and financial services in the United States and European markets.

The emphasis of the summit on new public and private sector opportunities, market development, joint ventures, and economic growth between businesses in the U.S., Ireland, and Northern Ireland is truly commendable. I solute its promotion of peace and shared governance under the terms of the Good Friday agreement of 1998. As well, I support the emphasis it places on private sector leadership and in its leadership.

It is important for the United States to maintain close ties with all people of Ireland in supporting mutual peace, justice, and prosperity. There has been, however, an apparent oversight in the resolution, I believe, that I would like to address at this time.

The resolution failed to mention the tireless effort of special envoy Senator George Mitchell, who negotiated the Good Friday agreement. Neither did it remark on the dedication and commitment of former President Clinton in bringing the peace process in Northern Ireland to a successful conclusion. So I would just like to highlight that and bring attention to my colleagues of the establishment of the William J. Clinton International Peace Center in Enniskillen, Ireland, and that Ms. Steller O'Leary and others who have been working so much for advocating peace are involved in this and we look forward to having Members of our Congress visit that. I trust that the present administration will continue this important effort so that the reconciliation process does not falter. So I ask that my colleagues join me in honoring Senator Mitchell and President Clinton for their crucial role that they played in bringing peace to Northern Ireland.

Ms. WATSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUINN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 513, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

INTELSAT IPO EXTENSION ACT

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 2810) to amend the Communications Satellite Act of 1962 to extend the deadline for the INTELSAT initial public offering.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 2810

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF IPO DEADLINE.

Section 621(5)(A)(i) of the Communications Satellite Act of 1962 (47 U.S.C. 763(5)(A)(i)) is amended—

(1) by striking "October 1, 2001," and inserting "December 31, 2003,"; and

(2) by striking "December 31, 2002;" and inserting "June 30, 2004;".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 2810 and urge swift passage of this noncontroversial legislation. Prior to adjourning in August, the Senate passed legislation, S. 2810, to extend the deadline by which INTELSAT is required to conduct its IPOs. I commend my colleagues in the other body and thank them for addressing this important issue.

Under the Open-Market Reorganization for the Betterment of International Telecommunications (ORBIT) act, INTELSAT is required to privatize, and as part of that effort, INTELSAT is to conduct an IPO by December 31 of this year. As detailed by the FCC, INTELSAT has made significant progress in its privatization efforts. Moreover, INTELSAT has made substantial preparations to conduct its statutorily mandated IPO.

However, volatility in the financial markets in general, and the telecommunications sector specifically, make this statutory deadline unrealistic. Indeed, one is hard-pressed to select a worse time for a satellite company IPO. Equally important, such an ill-timed IPO runs counter to one of the central policy objectives of ORBIT, dilution of foreign government ownership. If this IPO is forced to take place now, it is very likely that the foreign governments holding nonstrategic investments in INTELSAT will decide not to sell in this unattractive market. Rather, they will decide to hold on to their investments until a more attractive market price is available. The end result: no foreign government dilution in the near future.

S. 2810 would therefore give INTELSAT another year in which to conduct its IPO. It also provides the FCC authority to allow an additional extension of time if warranted by market conditions. Congress provided identical relief last year to Inmarsat. I urge all of my colleagues to support this important yet noncontroversial legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us is unopposed, and I support House passage of this bill today, as does the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and all of the members of the Committee on Commerce who sit on the Democratic side.

This legislation simply extends the date by which INTELSAT may have an IPO and offer advanced satellite services to U.S. customers. The IPO was put into the law to induce INTELSAT to diversify its ownership and vastly diminish the international governmental ownership and control of the organization, with all of the advantages and disadvantages such international governmental ownership brings. The new date for an IPO will now be December 31, 2003, rather than the end of this year.

I want to commend the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) for his work on this bill and urge Members to support the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUINN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2810.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING TEMPORARY WAIVER FROM CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS UNDER CLEAN AIR ACT

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3880) to provide a temporary waiver from certain transportation conformity requirements and metropolitan transportation planning requirements under the Clean Air Act and under other laws for certain areas in New York where the planning offices and resources have been destroyed by acts of terrorism, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 3880

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CLEAN AIR TRANSPORTATION CONFORMITY; TEMPORARY WAIVER FOR NEW YORK AREAS.

(a) TEMPORARY WAIVER.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, until September 30, 2005, the provisions of section 176(c) of the Clean Air Act, and the regulations promulgated thereunder, shall not apply to transportation projects, programs, and plans (as defined in 40 C.F.R. Part 93, Subpart A) for the counties of New York, Queens, Kings, Bronx, Richmond, Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester, Rockland, Putnam, or the towns of Blooming Grove, Chester, Highlands, Monroe, Tuxedo, Warwick, and Woodbury in Orange County, New York. The preceding sentence shall not apply to the regulations under section 176(c)(4)(B)(i) of such Act relating to Federal and State interagency consultation procedures.

(b) INTERIM PROGRESS REPORT.—Not later than January 1, 2004, the Governor of New York shall submit to the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Transportation a report regarding the status of the State's progress towards achieving compliance with the provisions of law and regulation subject to the temporary waiver provided by subsection (a). Such report shall explain in detail the steps that the State has taken towards achieving such compliance and identify the necessary steps that remain to be taken by September 30, 2005, in order for the transportation projects, programs, and plans for the counties referred to in subsection (a) to be in compliance with the provisions of section 176(c) of the Clean Air Act, and the regulations promulgated thereunder, by September 30, 2005. The report shall also include a regional emissions analysis generally consistent with the requirements of 40 CFR 93.122, together with the relevant air quality data.

SEC. 2. METROPOLITAN PLANNING REQUIREMENTS; TEMPORARY WAIVER FOR NEW YORK AREAS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, until September 30, 2005, the provisions of sections 134(h)(1)(D), 134(i)(3), 134(i)(5), and 134(l)(1) of title 23 of the United States Code and sections 5304(a)(1), 5305(c), and 5305(e)(1) of title 49 of the United States Code and the regulations promulgated thereunder, shall not apply to the New York Metropolitan Transportation Council or to the Metropolitan Planning Organization designated under section 134(b) of title 23 of the United States Code.

SEC. 3. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS.

(a) PROHIBITION ON CAPACITY EXPANSION.—During the period of the temporary transportation conformity waiver for transportation plans, programs, and projects under section 1, no regionally significant capacity expanding highway project shall be added to the Regional Transportation Plan for the counties referred to in section 1 and no such project may be advanced from the out years of the Plan into the TIP, except as provided in subsection (b).

(b) EXCEPTION.—Any regionally significant capacity expanding highway project south of Canal Street and West of Broadway in Manhattan may be added to the Plan referred to in subsection (a) if—

(1) the project is part of a redevelopment plan for lower Manhattan subject to NEPA and the New York State Environmental Quality Act, as applicable; and

(2) any projected increases in transportation related emissions resulting from the project are offset by corresponding reductions within the affected county, with best efforts made to secure reductions from within the immediate area affected by the project's emissions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON).

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today the House will consider important legislation that will help New York rebuild Lower Manhattan after the tragic events of September 11.

Before I briefly discuss the purpose and effect of H.R. 3880, I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and his fellow Committee on Energy and Commerce New York members, the gentleman from New York (Mr. TOWNS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL), for their great leadership in developing this legislation and moving it through the committee in a very strong bipartisan manner.

As a result of this team effort, H.R. 3880 enjoys not only the support of the City and State of New York, but also the support of the Department of Transportation, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the environmental group Environmental Defense.

This legislation is needed because New York's transportation planning office was located in the World Trade Center and was destroyed on September 11. Three staff members were killed; and for all practical purposes, the planning office's records and complex computer models simply disappeared.

While tragic, this is not the sole reason New York needs a temporary extension from the Clean Air Act transportation conformity requirements. As we all know, September 11 changed the shape of New York. Thousands and thousands of offices have been moved to new places and commuters now travel different routes. Complying with the transportation conformity regulations and other metropolitan planning requirements would require a full understanding of these changes in the development of a new, corresponding computer model.

EPA and DOT all agree that this task would be impossible for New York to complete by next month, which is New York's existing conformity deadline. Without H.R. 3880, when New York misses next month's conformity deadline, progress would cease on over $4.6 billion worth of transportation projects, all at a time when the rebuilding of Lower Manhattan and its transportation infrastructure is of paramount importance.

So as to avoid this untenable outcome, H.R. 3880 provides a temporary 3-year waiver necessary for New York to develop new computer models and meet the requirements of the next conformity planning cycle in October of 2005.

I note that during full committee markup of H.R. 3880, the bill was amended in a bipartisan manner to address specific concerns raised by environmental groups with regard to regionally significant highway projects which now are generally prohibited unless they obtain emissions offset credits. Accordingly, H.R. 3880 has been endorsed by Environmental Defense.

In addition to the Committee on Energy and Commerce's New York delegation, I wish to thank the chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy and Air Quality, the gentleman from Texas (Chairman BARTON); the subcommittee's ranking member, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER); and, of course, the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), for their bipartisan cooperation in providing this timely relief for the City of New York. I also wish to thank the gentleman from Alaska (Chairman YOUNG), chairman of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, for his cooperation with our request that this measure be considered by the full House promptly after our full committee markup.

In addition to the committee's report filed on H.R. 3880, the committee understands that New York State is working on expanding ferry service into New York City from Westchester and Rockland Counties and encourages this process to move forward as a means of providing alternative mass transit options which help to reduce traffic and improve the air quality of the region.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I urge the House to vote for H.R. 3880, a bipartisan measure that will allow New York to continue the important task of rebuilding after the tragic events of 1 year ago.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managing of this bill go to my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning in support of H.R. 3880, which will provide to the New York City metropolitan area a temporary and necessary waiver of Clean Air Act conformity requirements until September 30, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, I urge approval of this measure by the House. Section 176(c) of the Clean Air Act requires that transportation activities conform to State air quality plans before the Federal Government is authorized to fund those transportation activities.

The region-only mission analysis used to establish conformity and subsequent eligibility for Federal funding must be, under this statutory provision, less than 3 years old. New York's current regional emission analysis will reach its 3-year expiration date on October 1, 2002. Then, under the provisions of the Clean Air Act, the New York conformity determination will lapse, jeopardizing the area's Federal transportation funding for most projects. It is estimated that the region stands to lose up to $1 billion in Federal transportation funding, should a conformity lapse occur.

The headquarters of the New York Metropolitan Transportation Council, and that is the agency that serves as the New York area's transportation planning office, was destroyed in the attacks of September 11. Due to the unprecedented loss of personnel, resources, and records, it will be impossible for New York to establish a current regional emissions analysis in order to meet the October 1, 2002 deadline for obtaining a conformity determination.

In addition to the loss at the New York Metropolitan Transportation Council headquarters, the attacks of September 11 have significantly altered the distribution of jobs and transportation patterns within the New York metropolitan area. These changes add to the impossibility of the data collection necessary to develop an accurate regional emissions analysis during the near term.

Given these extraordinary events, it is appropriate that we take action to provide temporary relief to the New York City area. The legislation before us today would grant a temporary waiver from the Clean Air Act transportation conformity requirements and selected metropolitan planning requirements of TEA-21 through September 30, 2005.

The bill received unanimous approval in the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and it is supported by the Environmental Protection Agency and by the U.S. Department of Transportation.

I urge that the House lend its approval to this necessary legislation, which will assist in easing the burden faced by the New York City area as the region continues to recover from the attacks of last September.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON), in commending the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the other gentlemen from New York, Mr. ENGEL and Mr. TOWNS, for their sponsorship of this measure, which is most appropriate and deserves approval by this House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, let me thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER), because he has been really great in his assistance and in his efforts to bring this to the floor, and the people in the city and in the State of New York are grateful for his support.

I thank as well my colleagues, the gentlemen from New York, Mr. RANGEL and Mr. TOWNS. We have tried to do this really in a nonbipartisan way because it is so critical to the future of rebuilding New York City.

I also thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Chairman TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Texas (Chairman BARTON), as well as the chairman, for being cooperative and understanding the plight of New York.

Mr. Speaker, I have a full statement that I will submit for the RECORD, but just to highlight, I think, as has been said by the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Virginia, sadly, another consequence of September 11 was the fact that New York City almost was destroyed. The loss of life was tragic, but in addition, the infrastructure is destroyed.

Many Members in both the House and in the other body were in New York on Friday and saw what was once the World Trade Center, and saw underneath what was once the PATH station, the PATH train, or the 1 and 9 subway line, or so many of the buses that really interweave throughout downtown New York.

For all intents and purposes, things have changed in New York. New York was required to comply with the Clean Air Act as of October 1. Now, if the infrastructure has changed, the modeling to evaluate that infrastructure has changed, and the analysis, therefore, that was required has changed, so all bets are off.

In addition, and this is the saddest, obviously, some employees lost their lives in that attack.

So we have a combination of tragedies that brings us to this point. That, essentially, is to grant New York City and New York State temporary relief under the Clean Air Act. Without that, upwards of $4 billion to $5 billion, the estimates range, but the reality is that it is hard and it is real that those Federal dollars that fund needed Federal projects will stop, and it will stop the rebuilding efforts of New York City that have moved wonderfully in the last year. It will mean so many jobs will be put at risk, upwards of 200,000 jobs directly and indirectly related to the rebuilding of New York City.

This underscores, I think, what we all want to do; that is, to improve the quality of our air and the emissions surrounding New York City. But understand that this is a commonsense approach to a terrible accident that happened.

So I want to commend all those who recognized this necessary, really, legislation, and to thank all those in the staff that brought us here. I would hope, since time is of the essence, that the other body would join hands with us and give New York what it needs.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL), one of the sponsors of this measure.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Energy and Commerce has worked in a truly bipartisan fashion to bring this legislation to the full House today. The three of us on the committee that represent New York City, myself and the gentlemen from New York (Mr. TOWNS and Mr. FOSSELLA) have all worked very closely with the leadership of the Committee to put this before our colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, helping New York has been something that has been done in a bipartisan fashion since the tragic events of last September 11. This, of course, is part and parcel of that. New York City was hit not because it was some random place that was picked, but because New York is a symbol of what this country is, a symbol. That is why when New York was hit, everyone responded, because everyone understands that New York is a symbol of our great country.

As we know, and was mentioned by my colleagues, New York is facing a conformity lapse on October 1 of this year. H.R. 3880 will grant a temporary limited waiver for New York's Clean Air Act conformity requirements.

Mr. Speaker, the New York Metropolitan Transportation Council is the main agency that conducts the regional emissions analysis for New York, and as my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA), just mentioned, the NYMTC offices were on the 82nd floor of New York World Trade Center One, and were destroyed in the attacks of September 11. Three staff members are still missing and presumed dead, and all the vital data and institutional knowledge of the staff were lost on that fateful day.

As such, it is impossible for New York to meet its conformity requirements. I want to stress that without this waiver, New York will lapse out of conformity in less than a month, and many vital transportation projects will be halted, which threatens to cripple the region at a time when it is still struggling to recover.

The Clean Air Act sets out strict air quality standards to ensure that metropolitan areas remain at safe air quality levels. The Clean Air Act is vital to the health and welfare of residents across the country. That is why I have worked very hard to balance the need for the legislation with the best interests of my fellow New Yorkers and the environmental community, as well.

I have similarly been working to promote better and less polluting transportation throughout the New York metropolitan area, and have coordinated closely with Governor Pataki on this matter.

On July 22, 2002, I wrote to the Governor to urge his support for expanded ferry service from Rockland County to Manhattan and Westchester County to Manhattan, and I am pleased to announce that the Governor has responded favorably to my request and has assured me that he will make clean air transportation projects such as these a priority.

I want to also mention that in discussions with the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Louisiana (Chairman TAUZIN), we were supposed to have report language about the ferry service from Rockland and Westchester Counties in the bill, and through an oversight it was omitted. But I want to assure my colleagues that the chairman of the Committee and others on the committee in a bipartisan fashion have assured me that they will work with us to make this ferry service a reality.

There are provisions in the legislation that require New York to report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce, EPA, and DOT on the air quality during the waiver period. These reports will allow us to monitor New York's progress to get back into conformity by the year 2005.

I am pleased that this legislation has the support of the Environmental Defense Fund and the environmental defense community, and I will continue to work with them and Governor Pataki to ensure that air quality standards will be of the utmost priority during the waiver period.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly fitting that the House of Representatives is considering this legislation today. It will be a year tomorrow since the terrorist attacks, and this great body has shown its solidarity with New York. In fact, it is 52 weeks today, to this very day, that the tragedy happened. It is important that the Congress continue its commitment to see us through as we continue our recovery in New York.

I was pleased to be with my colleagues just last Friday when we had this special session in New York. I want to thank, in conclusion, the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), for all of their hard work on this issue, and I urge my colleagues to support this much-needed legislation.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would just thank, from the committee, Joe Stanko, Michael Geffroy, as well as those from Governor Pataki's office and the mayor's office and the city of New York; also, the gentlemen from New York (Mr. RANGEL and Mr. TOWNS), the chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), and of course, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER).

From my staff, I thank Julie Walker, who has really worked a lot and very hard on bringing this to the floor.

I would note, as well, if it has not been noted, that the 14 affiliated building and trade unions support this bill. I have a letter that I have been asked to submit for the RECORD from the Environmental Defense Fund.

The letter referred to is as follows:

ENVIRONMENTAL DEFENSE,

Washington, DC, September 10, 2002.

Hon. VITO FOSSELLA,

House of Representatives, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FOSSELLA: We are writing about H.R. 3880, The Clean Air Transportation Conformity Temporary Waiver for the New York Areas, as recently amended. That bill would provide certain counties of the New York City metropolitan region with an extension of deadlines under the transportation conformity provisions of the Clean Air Act while containing protections for continued efforts to improve air quality in New York City.

The State of New York requested this extension on the grounds that the events of September 11, 2001 directly and substantially affected the offices and staff of agencies involved in making conformity determinations. Offices of both the New York Metropolitan Transportation Council (NYMTC) and the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey were destroyed on September 11, and, tragically, both agencies suffered loss of life. According to the state, these agencies also suffered unprecedented loss of agency records and institutional capacity. New York has stated that it is seeking this extension in order to ensure that federal transit funds essential to the rebuilding of lower Manhattan are not placed at risk by these unfortunate circumstances.

In December 2001, the original version of H.R. 3880 was introduced in the House. Because of its unnecessarily broad scope and lack of air quality protections, Environmental Defense opposed that bill, as originally introduced. We requested that, if any flexibility in meeting federal clean air transportation planning requirements were to be granted, it be done in a narrowly crafted way that include protections for air quality and public health. We are pleased that the bill has now been narrowed, and that New York has committed to take new steps to protect air quality and health. The changes include:

No "free pass" for highway projects: Regionally significant capacity-expanding highway projects not already in the adopted Transportation Improvement Program are specifically excluded from the waiver and cannot be advanced during this period excepting projects related to reconstruction of Lower Manhattan (whose emissions must be offset locally).

Transportation Conformity only: It is clear, based on a recent change to the legislative language, that H.R. 3880 applies only to "transportation projects, programs and plans as defined in 40 CFR Part 93 Subpart A", and that the waiver therefore does not apply to port projects, airports, or other transportation projects that are subject to the requirements of general conformity under Clean Air Act regulations.

Local emission offsets to protect public health in Lower Manhattan: New highway projects for lower Manhattan (i.e., the depressing of West Street) must include air quality offsets within the affected county (with best efforts to secure even more localized offsets).

Detailed Interim Milestones: New York has committed to meet detailed interim milestones on the way to attaining conformity by 2005. These include commitments to improved best practices transportation and air pollution modeling and other updated models and data for the region.

Report to Congress, EPA and DOT: New York must report to Congress, EPA and DOT on progress being made toward achieving conformity by the new 2005 deadline, including new emission reduction strategies adopted to offset revised estimates of air pollution emissions from cars and trucks that result from newer assumptions, data, and emission models.

Significantly, New York has also committed to take additional steps to protect air quality during the course of the waiver. These include:

A commitment to make the reconstruction of lower Manhattan a model for clean-air construction practice statewide, by using clean fuels and retrofits to cut emissions from non-road machinery throughout lower Manhattan. Non-road engines, like the construction machinery at work on the reconstruction of the World Trade Center site and transportation infrastructure in lower Manhattan, emit more fine particulate matter than cars, trucks and powerplants combined and are important sources of NO<sub>x</sub>, a precursor to the formation of urban smog.

Commitments by key state agencies, including for example the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation, Department of Transportation and the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, to identify and adopt new transportation control measures, such as incentives for increased use of transit, to be implemented in the new term to cut emissions from the transportation sector.

We recognize that September 11 has presented New York and the country with a unique and unprecedented set of circumstances. We further understand that the State of New York, at its highest executive leadership levels, has agreed to the conditions outlined above and is prepared to implement them vigorously. With these conditions, and under these unique circumstances, we support the amended version of H.R. 3880.

Sincerely,

JOHN BOWMAN,

Legislative Counsel, Environmental Defense.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to see the quick action of the House Leadership to bring this important legislation to the floor. H.R. 3880 is a bill that will provide a temporary limited waiver to the Clean Air Act's transportation conformity requirements within the New York City regional planning area (which includes, New York City, Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester, Rockland and Putnam counties as well as seven towns in Orange County). This waiver is necessitated as a direct result of the tragic events of 9/11. The New York Metropolitan Transportation Council (NYMTC), the office responsible for compiling the transportation conformity plan—was located in the World Trade Center, three of its staff members, and much of the progress that had been made in preparation for filing up to that date was lost in the terrorist attacks. In addition, as a result of the 9/11 destruction 100,000 jobs have been displaced and commuter and traffic patterns have change significantly. For example, The World Trade Center PATH Train Station was lost and a number of businesses have relocated away from lower Manhattan. Without this waiver, New York's conformity will lapse on October 1, 2002. As a result, a number of non-exempt transportation and transit projects will come to a halt until a new conformity plan is filed.

New York should not be penalized any more for the disaster of 9/11. A halt to transportation and transit construction projects will be devastating to an economy that has already suffered significant losses. Moreover, this will likely have the unintended consequences of hindering New York's efforts to achieve improved air quality, as projects such as the 2nd Avenue Subway and the East Side Access will not be able to move on to a new phase of work because they are considered non-exempt.

It should go without saying that no one takes this request lightly. New York, similar to most metropolitan regions, struggles to conform to clean air requirements. The events of 9/11 have made clean air an even bigger issue for many New Yorkers. However, I believe there has been some confusion over this waiver request. This request has nothing to do with the post 9/11 EPA cleanup and everything to do with the need to rebuild lower Manhattan and continue important transportation and transit projects on their current schedules throughout the region. There have been erroneous claims that there is no need to provide a waiver because it takes eighteen months for the lapse to take effect. This is not an accurate claim. In fact, some projects will begin to stop in October depending upon their implementation phase. Projects will be able to complete their current phase but not be able to progress to the next phase. As you can see from the list before us, numerous projects would be impacted without this waiver.

Working in a bipartisan fashion with my New York committee colleagues, Mr. FOSSELLA and Mr. ENGEL, I believe we have reached an acceptable compromise with the Environmental Defense to address to any outstanding environmental issues. This legislation is an important step forward in rebuilding the infrastructure that was destroyed on 9/11, strengthening our economy, and allowing the New York Metropolitan Transportation Council the opportunity to develop a new conformity plan that reflects the new traffic patterns of the post September 11th city. I urge my colleagues to support this effort to keep New York moving and restore New York's economy to the driving force that it always has been, I would urge my Senator colleagues to move this bill with all delivered speed. We cannot afford for New York's transportation infrastructure to experience any delays because of Clean Air restrictions. I'm hopeful that final congressional action will occur before the October 1st deadline.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUINN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. UPTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3880, as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement today, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from

New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter on House Concurrent Resolution 320.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the House is considering today House Concurrent Resolution 320, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. GUTIERREZ) to raise awareness about a terrible disease, Scleroderma. House Concurrent Resolution 320 was reported favorably by the Committee on Energy and Commerce last week, and I encourage my colleagues to express their support for the resolution on the floor today.

Over 100,000 Americans are affected by Scleroderma, a chronic connective tissue disease that is debilitating and potentially fatal. Scleroderma is actually a symptom of a group of rare diseases that involve the abnormal growth of connective tissue.

Scleroderma is derived from the Greek word sclerosis, literally meaning hard skin. The symptoms include hardening and thickening of the skin, swelling and disfigurement of the hands, weight loss, joint pain, difficulty swallowing, as well as extreme fatigue.

With this wide range of symptoms, scleroderma is often difficult to diagnose. For some patients, these diseases cause hard, tight skin; for others, the problem is much greater, affecting blood vessels and internal organs like the heart, lungs, and kidneys.

Scleroderma affects people of all races and ethnic groups, men, women and children. For some Americans affected by scleroderma, recovery comes with time. For many others, there is no treatment that controls or stops the progression effectively. While scientists at the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases continue to learn more about scleroderma, unfortunately, they do not know exactly what causes scleroderma, and there is still no cure.

The resolution before us today recognizes the work of private organizations and health care providers to raise awareness about scleroderma and encourages Americans to learn more about scleroderma. The resolution encourages the National Institutes of Health to continue to play a leadership role in discovering new treatments and disseminating information learned from their research. Finally, the resolution encourages the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to consider how to improve disease surveillance of autoimmune diseases, including scleroderma.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to support the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we are considering an important resolution today sponsored by my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. GUTIERREZ). I am pleased to be a co-sponsor of this legislation, which is intended to raise the profile of scleroderma, a debilitating autoimmune disease that affects around a third of a million Americans every year.

Diagnosis can be difficult in the early stages. Many symptoms of scleroderma are common to or may overlap those of other diseases. The disease is highly individualized. While scleroderma can show mild symptoms in some, it can also deliver a more life-threatening prognosis in others.

Scleroderma can show symptoms on the surface as in a skin rash or disguise itself by affecting the organs, the muscles or blood vessels. Diagnosis can require consultation with rheumatologists and dermatologists, in addition to blood studies and specialized tests depending on which organs are actually affected.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce last week passed this resolution unanimously. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful that my bill, the Support Scleroderma Research bill (H. Con. Res. 320) has been scheduled to be considered in the suspension calendar today. The speed with which this bipartisan bill has traveled from the committee mark-up to Floor consideration is a testament to the importance of this bi-partisan and non-controversial measure.

Scleroderma is a chronic, often progressive autoimmune disease in which the body's immune system attacks its own tissues. The disease can manifest itself in two forms: localized scleroderma, affecting the skin and underlying tissue and systemic scleroderma, also known as systemic sclerosis, a potentially life-threatening disease that attacks internal organs including the lungs, heart, kidneys, esophagus and gastrointestinal tract.

The wide range of symptoms and localized and systemic variations of the disease make it especially hard to diagnose. In fact, the average diagnosis is made five years after the onset of symptoms. Once diagnosed, however, people with this incurable disease can only look forward to symptomatic relief.

More than 300,000 Americans suffer from scleroderma. More than 80 percent of them are women between the ages of 25 and 65 years old. Scleroderma is the 5th leading cause of death among all autoimmune diseases for women under 65 years of age. The estimated annual direct and indirect costs of scleroderma in the United States are $1,500,000,000. In spite of these statistic and figures, we still don't know what causes scleroderma and we have yet to find a cure for it.

My bill seeks to move a step closer to finding a cure by bringing awareness to scleroderma and expressing our solid support for Federal efforts to fight this disease. As marked up last Thursday by the full Energy and Commerce Committee, this bill, among other things, expresses the sense of Congress that the National Institutes of Health (NIH) should continue to take a leadership role in research efforts regarding the fight against scleroderma and should allow for broad dissemination of the information learned from such research. The also believe that the Centers for Disease Control can, should, and must play a role regarding methods to improve disease surveillance of scleroderma.

Ideally, I believe that NIH should continue to play a leadership role in the fight of scleroderma by working more closely with private organizations and researchers and by funding research projects regarding scleroderma conducted by private organizations and researchers. I also urge NIH to hold a scleroderma symposium to bring together distinguished scientists and clinicians from across the U.S. to determine the most important priorities in scleroderma research and to support the formation of small workgroups composed of experts from diverse but related scientific fields to study this disease.

I would like to thank Chairman TAUZIN and Ranking Member DINGELL for their strong support for this resolution and their fast scheduling of it. I would also like to thank my colleague on the other side of the aisle, Congressman CHRISTOPHER SMITH of New Jersey, who has been a consistent and strong supporter of all initiatives on behalf of finding a cure for scleroderma, including an increase in Federal funding for research on scleroderma as being conducted by the National Institutes of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal Skin Disease. I would also like to recognize the hard work of my Legislative Assistant, Annie Grace Toro, on behalf of this bill.

Finally, I would like to thank the Scleroderma Foundation and the Scleroderma Research Foundation for their dedication and hard work on behalf of all individuals suffering from scleroderma.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. QUINN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 320, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put the question on motions to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed earlier today.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

H. Res. 513, by the yeas and nays;

H.R. 3880, by the yeas and nays; and

H. Con. Res. 320, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first such vote in this series.

REMEMBERING THOSE KILLED ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in a solemn way I recognize that this week will be a week that America turns toward each other seeking to embrace and seeking to love, mourning those whom we lost on September 11, 2001, and celebrating the unsung heroes, and the families who have survived.

I stand before this House today to simply offer my deepest sympathy and that of my constituents of the 18th Congressional District of the State of Texas to all of those who experience this great loss as we come upon September 11, 2002. It is my desire to simply offer these words of sympathy because I love you and appreciate the sacrifice you made for this Nation. I conclude by simply saying, The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

QUESTIONS THAT WILL NOT BE ASKED ON IRAQ

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, soon we hope to have hearings on the pending war with Iraq. I am concerned that there are some questions that will not be asked and maybe not even allowed to be asked. Here are some questions I would like answered by those who are anxious to start this war: Is it not true that the reason we did not bomb the Soviet Union at the height of the Cold War was because we knew they could retaliate?

Is it not also true that we are willing to bomb Iraq now because we know it cannot retaliate, which just confirms that there is no real threat?

Is it not true that those who argue that even with inspections we cannot be sure that Hussein might be hiding weapons, at the same time implying that we can be more sure that weapons exist in the absence of inspections?

Is it not true that the U.N.'s International Atomic Agency was able to complete its yearly verification mission to Iraq just this year with Iraqi cooperation?

Is it not true that the intelligence community has been unable to develop a case tying Iraq to global terrorism at all, much less the attacks on the United States last year? Does anybody remember that 15 of the 19 hijackers came from Saudi Arabia and that none came from Iraq?

Was former CIA counterterrorism chief Vincent Cannistraro wrong when he recently said there was no confirmed evidence of Iraq's links to terrorism?

Is it not true that the CIA has concluded there is no evidence that a Prague meeting between 9-11 hijacker Atta and Iraqi intelligence took place?

Is it not true that northern Iraq, where the administration claimed that al Qaeda was hiding out, was in control of our allies, the Kurds?

Is it not true that the vast majority of the al Qaeda leaders who escaped appear to have safely made their way to Pakistan, another of our so-called allies?

Has anyone noticed that Afghanistan is rapidly sinking into total chaos, with bombings and assassinations becoming daily occurrences; and that is according to a recent U.N. report, the al Qaeda "is, by all accounts, 'alive and well' and poised to strike again, how, when and where it chooses"?

Why are we taking precious military resources away from tracking down those who did attack the United States, who may again attack the United States, and using them to invade countries that have not attacked the United States?

Would an attack on Iraq not just confirm the Arabs' worst suspicions about the United States, and is this not just what Osama bin Laden wanted to have happen?

How can Hussein be compared to Hitler when he has no navy or air force, and now has an army one-fifth the size it was 12 years ago, which even then proved itself totally inept in defending itself?

Is it not true that the constitutional power to declare war is exclusively given to Congress? Should presidents, contrary to the Constitution, allow Congress to concur only when pressured by public opinion? Are presidents permitted to rely on U.N. permission to go to war?

Are you aware of a Pentagon report studying charges that thousands of Kurds in one village were gassed by Iraqis, which found no conclusive evidence that Iraq was responsible, that Iran occupied the very city involved, and that evidence indicated, according to this Pentagon report, the type of gas used was more likely controlled by Iran, not Iraq?

Is it not true that between 100,000 to 300,000 soldiers have suffered from Persian Gulf War syndrome from the first Gulf War, and that thousands may have died?

Are we prepared for possibly thousands of American casualties in a war against a country that does not have the capacity to attack the United States?

Are we willing to bear the economic burden of a $100 billion war against Iraq, with oil prices expected to skyrocket and further rattle an already shaky American economy? How about an estimated 30 years occupation of Iraq that some have deemed necessary to build democracy there?

Iraq's alleged violations of U.N. resolutions are given as reason to initiate an attack, yet is it not true that hundreds of U.N. resolutions have been ignored by various countries without penalty?

Did former President Bush not cite the U.N. resolution of 1990 as the reason he could not march into Baghdad, while supporters of a new attack assert that is the very reason that we can march into Baghdad?

Is it not true that, contrary to current claims, the no-fly zones were set up by Britain and the United States without specific approval by the United Nations?

If we claim membership in the international community and conform to its rules only when it pleases us, does this not serve to undermine our position, directing animosity toward us by both friend and foe?

How can our declared goal of bringing democracy to Iraq be believable when we prop up dictators throughout the Middle East and support military dictators like Musharraf in Pakistan who overthrew a democratically elected President?

Are you familiar with the 1994 Senate Hearings that revealed the United States knowingly supplied chemical and biological materials to Iraq during the Iran-Iraq war and as late as 1992—including after the alleged Iraqi gas attack on a Kurdish village?

Did we not assist Saddam Hussein's rise to power by supporting and encouraging his invasion of Iran? Is it honest to criticize Saddam now for his invasion of Iran, which as the time we actively supported?

Is it not true that preventive war is synonymous with an act of aggression, and has never been considered a moral or legitimate U.S. policy?

Why do the oil company executives strongly support this war if oil is not the real reason we plan to take over Iraq?

Why is it that those who never wore a uniform and are confident that they won't have to personally fight this war are more anxious for this war than our generals?

What is the moral argument for attacking a nation that has not aggressed against us nor is able to, even if it so wished?

Where does the Constitution grant us permission to wage war for any reason other than self-defense?

Is it not true that a war against Iraq rejects the sentiments of the time-honored Treaty of Westphalia, nearly 400 years ago, that countries should never go into another for the purpose of regime change?

Is it not true that the more civilized a society is, the less likely disagreements will be settled by war?

Is it not true that since World War II Congress has not declared war and—not coincidentally—we have not since then had a clear-cut victory?

Is it not true that Pakistan, especially through its intelligence services, was an active supporter and key organizer of the Taliban?

Why do those who want war not bring a Declaration of War Resolution to the floor?

NO LINK BETWEEN SADDAM HUSSEIN AND AL QAEDA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, today's press reveals that the Bush administration has decided that they can find no linkage between Saddam Hussein and al Qaeda, despite some of the offhand remarks of Secretary Rumsfeld and Vice President CHENEY to the contrary. The intelligence agencies, turning all of their resources to this, cannot find existing links.

So that means that the President and his administration will have to make the case against Saddam Hussein to this Congress because the authorization passed by this Congress last fall was for the President to respond to those who were involved in the attacks and those who harbored or sponsored such attacks. That means a straight-up debate on the floor of the House of Representatives, hopefully a free and fair debate, over the wisdom of the first-ever preemptive war by the United States of America against Iraq.

I believe that the burden the administration has to prove that the United States should break from all precedents in more than 200 years of history, should break from all precedents set lawfully under the United Nations conventions since the end of World War II and actually launch a preemptive war, is an extraordinary burden. They have to prove a very real, credible threat by the Saddam Hussein regime.

Now Saddam Hussein is a despicable individual. He has murdered tens of thousands, and all effective opposition. He has murdered people ethnically, religiously. He has used weapons of mass destruction. He has an absolutely horrible record, and obviously we would not trust this gentleman one inch.

But the question in this case becomes what is different today than a year ago or 2 years ago in terms of Saddam Hussein. It seems, when asked honestly and privately, the generals and admirals at the Pentagon feel containment is working, that he did not pose a credible and immediate threat to the United States of America or its allies in that region.

So the question becomes then if he is credibly threatened with a preemptive war, would he become more of a threat? Then there is the issue of our allies. Would any allies support the United States in this endeavor? Then there are the questions from 10 years ago, the same questions that President Bush's father had to confront, and Colin Powell as chairman of the joint chiefs, which is what if they went to Baghdad and took out Hussein, what then? They were confronted with a long and problematic occupation of Iraq and further destabilization in the region. And even with all the allies, including Arab nations at the time, they felt it was not worth the risk of doing that.

Well, the same question needs to be asked today. In fact, I witnessed on "Face the Nation," where one Republican Senator said, "Well, we don't need any allies. We will just go and do this. We will take them out." And then he said, "We will rule Iraq."

I do not know who he has been talking to or what he is thinking, but the United States being involved intimately in that region and trying to rule a country, a very large country, in an extraordinarily volatile area, is a recipe for disaster. So they need not only a credible plan for what if and how and why; but they need to explain that, both to Congress, some of it can be confidentially, but, for the most part, these should be things that could be laid out.

Prime Minister Chretien said yesterday that the President had nothing new to say. It was just the same rhetorical sort of "we have got to remove him sooner or later," the same thing we have been hearing from Ms. Rice and other advisers to the President.

So I have sent a letter to the President, signed by 17 other Members of Congress, which lays out a series of about 20 questions that I believe are critical that this administration address before they would undertake to ask even for authorization for a preemptive war, the first ever in our history; and I am hopeful that the administration will in good faith answer those questions. Most of them are questions that could be answered in public, could be given to the American people, and could, if they answer them I believe convincingly, as they have not thus far, lead to some sort of authorization from the United States Congress.

But we cannot just sort of have this shadow boxing and discussion in private. This is an extraordinary issue, a constitutional issue, an issue that breaks with all precedent of this country; something that needs to be fully, freely, and fairly debated before the American people before we commit our sons and daughters to lengthy involvement in a war against Iraq and a subsequent occupation and rebuilding of that country. We are not doing such a great job of stabilizing and rebuilding Afghanistan. One has to question what we would do with a much larger nation in a much more volatile region of the world.

A YOUNG MARINE RESTORED MY FAITH

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, the "Orange Register" in California every week recognizes a writer who eloquently expresses a viewpoint or engenders a debate on a topic of public interest. It is known as the Golden Pen Award.

The title of this letter to the editor of the "Orange Register," written by Ann Baker, a real estate agent of Huntington Beach, California, is "A Young Marine Restores My Faith."

"It was our normal Thursday morning business meeting at our real estate office. No big deal. Before the meeting, we hung around the bagel table, as usual, with our coffee. He stood aside, looking a little shy and awkward and very young, a new face in the room full of extroverted salespeople. An average looking guy, maybe 5 foot 8 inches. A clean-cut, sweet-faced kid. I went over to chat with him. Maybe he was a new salesman?

"He said he was just back from Kabul, Afghanistan. A Marine. Our office (and a local school) had been supportive by sending letters to him and other troops, which he had posted at the American Embassy door in Kabul. He stood guard there for 4 months and was shot at daily.

"He had come to our office to thank us for the support, for all the letters during those scary times. I couldn't believe my ears," she said. "He wanted to thank us? We should be thanking him. But how? How can I ever show him my appreciation?

"At the end of the sales meeting he stepped quietly forward, no incredible hulk. As a matter of fact, he looked all the world 15 years old to me.

"This young Marine, this clean-faced boy, had no qualms stepping up to the plate and dodging bullets so that I may enjoy the freedom to live my peaceful life in the land of the free. No matter the risk. Suddenly the most stressful concerns of my life seemed as nothing. My complacency flew right out the window with his every word. Somewhere, somehow, he had taken the words honor, courage and commitment into his very soul and laid his life on the line daily for me and us. A man of principle. He wants to do it. Relishes it. And he came to thank us? For a few letters. I fought back the tears as he spoke so briefly and softly.

"He walked forward to our manager and placed a properly folded American flag in his hands. It had flown over the Embassy in Kabul. He said thanks again. You could hear a pin drop. As I looked around, I saw red faces everywhere fighting back the tears.

"In a heartbeat, my disillusionment with young people today quickly vanished. In ordinary homes, in ordinary towns, kids like him are growing up proud to be an American and willing to die for it. Wow. We will frame the flag and put it in the lobby. He only came to my office once, for just a few minutes, but I realize I rubbed shoulders with greatness in the flesh and in the twinkling of an eye my life is forever changed. His name is Michael Mendez, a corporal in the United States Marine Corps. We are a great Nation. We know because the makings of it walked into my office that day."

That is by Ann Baker of Huntington, California. I think that properly summarizes our Nation's respect for the men and women in uniform. We take for granted the sacrifices they and their families make to serve this country. We assume freedom comes without price at times; and September 11, which we rapidly approach, taught us a lesson, that America's freedom depends on the strong and vigilant men and women who fight our battles for our freedoms and fight for the integrity of this Nation.

Parents who allow their children to enter harm's way for the flag that flies behind me do so knowing for the freedom of a Nation men and women must offer themselves in sacrifice. Ann Baker's letter touched me as well because it signified from an average citizen that she recognized that day that that young man, Michael, who came to her office, changed her life; but it was also shaping the lives of future American leaders.

We pray for the safety of our troops here and abroad; but we also thank those special individuals who have character, who stand up for the flag and the Nation and fight the good fight for all Americans.

STATUS REPORT ON CURRENT SPENDING LEVELS OF ON-BUDGET SPENDING AND REVENUES FOR FY 2003 AND THE 5-YEAR PERIOD FY 2003 THROUGH FY 2007

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I am transmitting a status report on the current levels of on-budget spending and revenues for fiscal year 2003 and for the five-year period of fiscal years 2003 through 2007. This report is necessary to facilitate the application of sections 302 and 311 of the Congressional Budget Act and section 301 of House Concurrent Resolution 353, which is currently in effect as a concurrent resolution on the budget in the House. This status report is current through September 6, 2002.

The term "current level" refers to the amounts of spending and revenues estimated for each fiscal year based on laws enacted or awaiting the President's signature.

The first table in the report compares the current levels of total budget authority, outlays, and revenues with the aggregate levels set forth by H. Con. Res. 353. This comparison is needed to enforce section 311(a) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the budget resolution's aggregate levels. The table does not show budget authority and outlays for years after fiscal year 2003 because appropriations for those years have not yet been considered.

The second table compares the current levels of budget authority and outlays for discretionary action by each authorizing committee with the "section 302(a)" allocations made under H. Con. Res. 353 for fiscal year 2003 and fiscal years 2003 through 2007. "Discretionary action" refers to legislation enacted after the adoption of the budget resolution. A separate allocation for the Medicare program, as established under section 231(d) of the budget resolution, is shown for fiscal year 2003 and fiscal years 2003 through 2012. This comparison is needed to enforce section 302(f) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the section 302(a) discretionary action allocation of new budget authority for the committee that reported the measure. It is also needed to implement section 311(b), which exempts committees that comply with their allocations from the point of order under section 311(a).

The third table compares the current levels of discretionary appropriations for fiscal year 2003 with the "section 302(b)" suballocations of discretionary budget authority and outlays among Appropriations subcommittees. The comparison is also needed to enforce section 302(f) of the Budget Act because the point of order under that section equally applies to measures that would breach the applicable section 302(b) suballocation.

The fourth table gives the current level for 2004 of accounts identified for advance appropriations under section 301 of H. Con. Res. 353 printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 22, 2002. This list is needed to enforce section 301 of the budget resolution, which creates a point of order against appropriation bills that contain advance appropriations that are: (i) not identified in the statement of managers or (ii) would cause the aggregate amount of such appropriations to exceed the level specified in the resolution.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 2002.

Hon. JIM NUSSLE,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the fiscal year 2003 budget and is current through September 6, 2002. This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of H. Con. Res. 353, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2003. The budget resolution figures incorporate revisions submitted by the Committee on the Budget to the House to reflect funding for emergency requirements. These revisions are required by section 314 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

Since my last letter dated July 12, 2002, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed the following acts that changed budget authority, outlays, or revenues for 2003: the Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002 (Public Law 107-204), the 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Act for Further Recovery From and Response to Terrorist Acts on the United States (Public Law 107-206), and the Trade Act of 2002 (Public Law 107-210). The effects of these new laws are identified in the enclosed table.

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON
(For Dan L. Crippen, Director).

Notes.—P.L. = Public Law.

Section 314 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, requires that the House Budget Committee revise the budget resolution to reflect funding provided in bills reported by the House for emergency requirements. To date, the Budget Committee has increased the outlay allocation in the budget resolution by $8,793 million for this purpose. Of this amount, $400 million is not included in the current level because the funding has not yet been enacted.

IMMIGRATION CONCERNS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon in order to bring to the attention of the body a serious, in fact I think an extremely dangerous, problem that the United States faces in the area of immigration and immigration reform and specifically the problems we face on our borders with people coming across this country without our permission, people we do not know, people we do not know why they are coming, we do not know who they are, we do not know what they are going to do here; and they are coming through in huge numbers.

The face of illegal immigration in my district may be people wanting to do work in the entertainment industry, people wanting to do work in the landscaping area, people working in restaurants; but the face of illegal immigration on the borders is much uglier, much nastier.

The face of illegal immigration on our borders is one of murder, one of drug smuggling, one of vandalism for all the communities along the border, and one of infiltration of people coming into this country for purposes to do us great harm. Most recently, an incident occurred in Arizona near the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument that I want to begin our discussion with today.

The situation in that part of the country is actually incredible. I cannot think of a way to describe it except to say that we are under siege, that there is an invasion. Near the Tohono O'odham Indian Reservation in Arizona, we have about a 76-mile coterminous border with Mexico and this particular reservation.

The Tohono O'odham are the second largest tribe in the United States, second only to the Navajo; and they have been living peacefully in this area for centuries. But in the last several months, things have gotten very, very bad in this particular area as a result of the fact that there have been some efforts on the part of the INS, and also the Border Patrol, to strengthen our border security posts around Nogales and Tucson and San Diego. As a result, we have created sort of a funnel effect where 1,500 people a day are now coming across that 76-mile border, coming across illegally, through the Tohono O'odham Indian Reservation and up into Arizona, and, of course, spreading across the United States.

These are not just people looking for a job. They are not just folks coming because they are seeking the American dream. These people, many of them are coming because they are transporting drugs, working for Mexican drug cartels. Many of them are coming for purposes, as I say, that have nothing to do with the benign or even, some might suggest, positive intent of seeking work in the United States.

Just a few weeks ago, in this same area, we had a situation where two Mexicans had committed a series of murders in Mexico that were connected to drug activity. These people were evidently professional assassins. They killed four people in Mexico that were in a rival gang, in a rival drug cartel; and they were escaping into the United States where they were confronted by a member of the Border Patrol and a member of the Park Service, a park ranger.

When they stepped out of their cars, when our folks stepped out of their cars to go and confront these people, they were met by two individuals who opened fire with automatic weapons; and one man, Christopher Eggle, was killed.

A 28-year-old park ranger was killed. He was killed in the line of duty. He laid down his life in the defense of others, in the defense of this country, just exactly the same way men and women in Afghanistan, in the Gulf War, in wars throughout our history have done. Yet very little has been heard about his death here in this country, very little news has been made by this death, and I wonder why.

Well, I am here today, along with my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), who has in his district the parents of Mr. Eggle; and we are here today to make sure that people do hear about this event and that we do bring to the attention of the Nation and our colleagues the fact that people like Mr. Eggle are in fact putting their lives on the line on our borders; and they deserve every bit as much of our support and attention and concern as we approach 9-11 as all of the other folks who heroically defend America, whether they are the fire and police people in New York, or whether they are our troops that are perhaps being readied to go off to war in Iraq.

We need to bring Mr. Eggle and his comrades to the attention of our body.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) to also say a few words here in this regard.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding, and I think that over the last period of time my colleague has been heroic in his efforts to educate the Congress on the challenges that face our Nation as a result of the conditions on our border. The conditions as we view them, the face of illegal immigration is one thing. In West Michigan it is another when one actually takes a look at it from the border and it is a very different reality that Kris Eggle faced in August.

Let me give a little bit of background about Kris. Kris was a 28-year-old National Park Service ranger. He was assigned to the Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument at the time of his death. My colleague has given us a little bit of the details about that, but if we go back, Kris was one of the best of the best. He graduated as valedictorian of Cadillac High School in 1991. He was an accomplished cross-country runner at Cadillac High School. He went on to be a top cross-country runner at the University of Michigan, where he graduated with honors in 1995.

After the graduation he chose Government service as the field where he was going to commit his life to. He joined the National Park Service. He served at the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore, where he served as a ranger on both the North and South Manitou Island. He had been stationed in Arizona since 2000. That is a little bit of background about Kris Eggle.

A little bit of background on Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument. It is one of our finest national parks. It has over, I believe, 327,000 visitors per year. It is just an awesome area that my colleague has visited on a number of occasions that we are trying to preserve. The disappointing thing is that over the last number of years as our border patrol has tried to control illegal immigration and illegal border crossings at the urban centers, what that has resulted in is that we have not stopped the illegal border crossings as we have just moved them from one part of the border to the other, and in this case we moved them to Kris.

I met with some of his supervisors this morning who indicated that one of the reasons that these types of individuals were in the area, these types of hit men, is that individuals like Kris were maybe doing their job too well. Last year they seized close to 750,000 pounds of drugs in the park, and this is the reason that folks on the south side of the border were maybe behind in their drug payments and these types of things which got them in trouble. But folks like Kris were going about doing their job and going above and beyond doing their job. Kris's love was the environment, in making sure that Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument lived up to our expectations for what we want our national parks to be.

As the border crossings and the illegal border crossings moved over to Organ Pipe, what he found was that he not only had to deal with 327,000 legal visits to the park, he also had to deal with over 200,000 illegal aliens.

Let me read a little bit about what Michelle Malkin says about what happened here. She writes and she talks about why Kris did not get much attention, or his death, while other seemingly less important events get more focus in today's society. Whereas someone like Kris is a true hero, some others that maybe make the national media are not. Here is part of what she had written: "The park where Kris had been stationed for 2 years, Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument in southern Arizona, is considered the most dangerous national park system in the Nation, according to a national survey conducted by the Fraternal Order of Police. It is a magnet for illegal aliens and Mexican smugglers; some 200,000 illegal border-crossers and 700,000 pounds of drugs were intercepted at the park last year.

"Nonetheless, Eggle embraced his job. He was always cheerful, his coworkers said. A 'model citizen.' A 'quintessential American boy-turned-ranger.' He baked chocolate chip cookies for fellow rangers and entertained them with songs while on duty. Eggle's father, Robert, said, 'Kris was where he wanted to be, and he did what he wanted to do.' A native of Cadillac, Michigan, where he grew up on his family's 130-year-old farm, Eggle was an Eagle Scout, a high school valedictorian, a devout Baptist, and a champion cross-country runner for the University of Michigan. Former coworkers called the fleet-footed Eggle the 'Coyote' in honor of his running prowess.

"On August 9, Eggle's speed and dedication may have cost him his life. He and three U.S. border patrol officers responded after Mexican police reported that two armed fugitives had fled across the border into the U.S. A border patrol helicopter gave chase and directed Eggle and the other officers to where three suspects had ditched their vehicle. The American officers pursued the fugitives on foot as they ran into nearby bushes. One of the Mexican nationals was caught; in the attempt to apprehend the other two, Eggle was ambushed and shot by one of the suspects with an AK-47.

"The gunfire hit Eggle below his bulletproof vest. He died at the scene before an emergency helicopter arrived. At the memorial service in tiny Ajo, Arizona, this week, Eggle's casket was draped with an American flag and topped with the Stetson hat he wore on the job." He was buried in his hometown in Cadillac, Michigan, following services there.

Kris Eggle, after graduating, decided that he would serve the country that he loved. The folks that knew Kris said that he had one of the brightest futures possible at the National Park Service. The award that he is shown receiving here I believe was given to him in Arizona because where he earned the awards were during a training session, and rather than staying for the awards portion of the training session, he said "I want to get back to Organ Pipe. I want to get back to my job. I want to get back to my coworkers. I want to get back and do the job that I have been hired to do."

Kris, like all other fellow employees, took an oath to swear his allegiance to this country. Kris did his job. He did it magnificently.

The challenge that my colleague from Colorado and that Kris's parents have laid out to me is let us make sure that we give Kris's coworkers the resources, the protection, and whatever tools they need to minimize the risk that national park rangers take. They know the risks when they take the job. They are armed, they are given bullet-proof vests. But we need to make sure that we give them a job that minimizes that risk, that we really do have border security. I am sure my colleague may touch on that, but when we take a look at the issues that are associated with the border there, we recognize that we have given Kris and his coworkers a very, very tough and very, very difficult job. A small number of national park rangers supported and complemented with border patrol folks, but a small number of park rangers and 80 border patrol folks is a small number compared to 200,000 illegal aliens, many of whom are Mexican nationals who are coming to America, looking for a better life and really with no intent to do any harm or danger to our folks patrolling the border, but a small number of whom have used that border location and that border-crossing as a market of opportunity, coming across the border in SUVs, coming across the border heavily armed and with one intent, to get the drugs to market at whatever the cost. And if the costs are the lives of our national park rangers, our border patrol agents, or a gunfight with these individuals, those individuals are willing to take that risk and kill Americans for them to move their drugs into our cities, into our communities, into our schools, and to our kids.

Kris was at the front line trying to make sure that that did not happen. To him we owe a great debt of gratitude, to his service. We extend our deepest sympathy to his family, his coworkers, and all that knew Kris, and I think that this Congress then also owes the family, the national park rangers, and American communities and schools and our children all over America the commitment that we will do what needs to be done on the border to ensure that these types of incidents hopefully will be eliminated or will be minimized. We know we can do it. The reason that there are fewer illegal border-crossings in the urban areas is that we put a focus and an emphasis on that. We now need to provide the border patrol and the national park service with the same resources that are essential to close and protect this section of the border as well as other sections of the border because as I talked with the rangers this morning, they recognize that if they close the border and are successful in getting the funding to make the border secure along Organ Pipe, that does not solve the problem. It may solve it for them, but they recognize that that is not enough because the land directly adjacent to Organ Pipe I believe is controlled by the Fish and Wildlife Service. So they do not want to put their folks at the Fish and Wildlife Service at risk just because they have gotten the resources to secure the border here.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for giving me time, for sharing this, and for the commitment that he made. He made the commitment to be in Arizona before this incident ever happened. He has been back in Washington showing us pictures of the border, describing the conditions, telling us what has been going on there. I believe he was at Organ Pipe just briefly or shortly before these tragic events of August 9, and he also took the time, the effort, and the energy that he attended the services back in Arizona for Kris, and I very much appreciate the gentleman's doing that and being a representative of this Congress to the National Park Service, to Kris's family, in demonstrating our concern and our commitment to them, and I can personally convey to him their appreciation for his being there and participating and leading these efforts to make sure that the risks of something like this happening in the future will be very, very much reduced.

I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO), very much.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I thank my dear friend and colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

This is something that, when I say it is a pleasure in terms of being able to represent this body, it is certainly not a pleasurable experience, but being able to represent us at the funeral of Kris Eggle, I was glad to be able to do that, because I wanted his parents to see that someone does know, someone does care; that the Congress of the United States, at least many Members of it, are well aware of the sacrifice, the ultimate sacrifice that was given by their son, Kris, and by them giving their son in that regard.

The statements that were made that day, it was an enormously emotional funeral, as Members can imagine, of a young man well loved by all of his colleagues. There must have been a couple of hundred people there, 90 percent of whom were members of the Border Patrol, members of the Park Service, Forest Service employees and customs agents, all of them comrades-in-arms with Kris, and all of them talking about him in the most loving and glowing terms, those that knew him personally.

I remember his colleagues talking about how each day they would go out and he would be so enthusiastic about the job, about his responsibilities for the day. He would turn to his colleague and his co-worker and almost every day say something to the effect of, is there anything I can do for you today? That was one way of describing what Kris was like.

I also remember that his supervisor, the head of the Park Service in that area, got up and said, this death cannot be in vain. We have to recognize that there are things that this country needs to do in order to assure that someone else's son or daughter does not face the same fate.

We are at war on our borders. There is no other way of describing it. We ask men and women to go down there and put their lives on the line, just like we ask men and women to do it in the Armed Forces of the United States. But the difference with the war on our borders and perhaps the war that we are pressing, let us say, against terrorism is that I do not know if we have the will as a government to actually win that war.

I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to just build off of that comment.

Obviously, today is September 10. September 11 we will again remember, as we have for almost every day over the last year, the heroism of the firefighters and the emergency personnel in New York City; the same at the Pentagon; the folks on United Flight No. 93. They very much deserve that recognition, and I am pleased that we are able to do that. We recognize that we are now in a war on terrorism.

But as we have noticed, during the month of August, I had the opportunity to travel to central Asia and met with our troops in Uzbekistan, met with our troops in Afghanistan, saw our troops on the U.S.S. George Washington, saw them in Bahrain. There are a whole lot of people who have their lives on the front line each and every day in central Asia. Then we have individuals like Kris, who have their lives on the line each and every day along our borders.

America has so many people to be grateful for who are willing to make that sacrifice and that commitment to our country. They have very, very many different faces. It is the responsibility of this Congress that in each of those wars that we are engaged in, whether it is the war on homeland security to make sure that we are safe in our homes and in our communities, and those are emergency first responders; whether it is the face of the American troops that have taken the war to the terrorists, they have their lives on the line; or whether it is the individuals like Kris, who maybe come into a war unexpectedly, who are going in and wanting to protect our national environmental treasures and are finding out that all of a sudden they are in the drug war, we need to remember each of these.

It is a commitment and responsibility of Congress that in each of these situations where we ask our young men and women, and Kris was maybe one of the older ones. He was 28, and he would have been 29 on his parents' anniversary in the month of August. If we take a look at the young people on the U.S.S. George Washington, more than 5,000, and I call them kids, because the average age is 20 years old, and my oldest daughter is 20, we ask our young people, in many cases, to fight our wars.

We need to make sure that if we are going to declare these kinds of wars, that we need to be serious about equipping them and giving them all of the resources that are necessary to fight the war effectively. We cannot have them go in without the proper resources, and I think this is an area where we need to take a look that says that we have declared a war on drugs, we have had it for a long time, but are we really properly equipping our borders to stop the flow of drugs into this country when through this 30-mile stretch of border there are, what is it, eight to 10 national park rangers there?

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I would tell the gentleman, it is nine rangers.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Nine rangers, along with some Border Patrol, who have pretty much single-handedly stopped over close to three-quarters of a million pounds of drugs, 700,000 to 750,000 pounds of drugs, in a single year.

Mr. TANCREDO. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, it is a fascinating thing, because I do not know if a lot of our colleagues, and I certainly do not believe a lot of the citizens of the United States, know the exact situation that we face on these borders, in our parks and in our national monuments.

Not too long ago I went down to the Coronado National Forest, not too far from Organ Pipes. The Coronado is one of the oldest national forests in the land. In 1906 it was created, a beautiful, beautiful environment that is being completely despoiled by the same thing, by massive numbers of people coming across illegally.

These people find that the terrain is rugged. They can hide more easily; and now actually we can fly over that and we can see where tracks have been worn into the land by so many people, by hundreds of thousands of people, so it looks actually like a spider web going out all over that particular forest area. Those tracks will not go away for many, many, many years.

Then they make a track and they think that we monitor it, so they will move over a little bit and move over a little. They think we put sensors out, so it just spreads out like that.

Trash, and it is the same thing in all our national parks in this area, the trash is enormous. The problem is with plastic water bottles strewn everywhere, hundreds of thousands, and clothing just tossed aside. They come through and they start warming fires in the night and walk away in the morning leaving them go.

When we got back from the Coronado, we left on a Sunday morning, and by the time we had gotten back, when I got back home to Colorado, 35,000 acres had been consumed in Coronado by one of these fires.

I am told by these folks who have been fighting these incursions, I guess there is no other way to put it, for years, that we have always had a lot of people bringing drugs through in our southern and northern borders; and, by the way, it is not unique to the southern border, but before when they would confront them, by and large they would drop what they were carrying.

They carry these 60- or 70-pound loads on their backs in these homemade backpacks, which, by the way, once they get to a part of the national park where another road has been cut in by their accomplices, a road used by trucks coming in to pick up the drugs, when they reach that, they unload the drugs and discard all of this backpacking material. They pile it up in huge, massive piles of this stuff all over the place.

He said that before when they would confront them, they would simply drop it and run. But now they are not. Now they are fighting back. Now they are opening fire. They are preceded by a guy with an M-16 leading a bunch of people carrying the drugs, and he is followed by a guy with an M-16.

Our park rangers, park rangers, for heaven's sakes, this is not really what they have been trained to deal with. Their responsibilities do not go to fighting drug cartels, but that is the position we have placed them in.

To their credit, as my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), has said, they have interdicted hundreds of thousands of pounds of illegal drugs over the course of just the last year. But it is getting rougher. It is getting tougher. It is getting meaner. The cartel members are actually holding hostage some of the family members of the people who are transporting the stuff for them, so unless they make it all the way across and to their appointed site where they dump it off to a truck, their family member in Mexico is killed.

So that is why, that and other reasons, why we are now facing a different kind of threat down there.

Besides that, we were told, there is an ever-increasing number of what they refer to as OTMs, other than Mexicans, coming across the border. Now we see what they call an alarming number of people coming through from China and from the Middle East, coming through these areas. For what purpose?

What is our ability and desire to try to interdict it and try to stop it? If we do not intend to defend these borders, then we should not be putting people like Kris in harm's way.

If it is not our intent to actually secure the border, and if that means putting the military in there to help Kris and his compatriots until we can stabilize the INS, until we can actually reform that organization and get the Border Patrol, and believe me, the folks on the line are doing a great job. These guys and the ladies down there who are Border Patrol agents, they are park rangers, they are Forest Service personnel, I take my hat off to them. It was my pleasure, as I say, to go down there and talk to them and see and visit them as often as I could during the break, both borders. But they need help. They cannot do this alone. We have asked them to try to hold back a flood, and we have given them a sieve.

Unfortunately, this flood is getting more dangerous all the time. Not a month prior to this particular event, or no, I am sorry, it was May 27, again, not far from where this happened, not far from Organ Pipes in a place called Papago Farms, a Border Patrol agent on patrol confronted a Mexican military vehicle in the United States, a Mexican HMMWV with several members of the Mexican military on board.

When he confronted them, they got out. He decided that discretion was the better part of valor, since he was certainly outgunned and outmanned. When he was turning around to go get help, a shot rang out from the Mexicans. It went through his back window, hit the metal grate that separates him from the back part of his vehicle, and went out the right rear window.

That was on May 27. We have had up to this point in time 127 incursions of that nature since 1997, where Mexican military, Mexican federal police have come into the United States. Usually it is for the purpose of protecting a drug shipment. There is usually a large shipment coming through, so they will actually act as the protection for it, or they act as a diversionary tactic. They come in over here, and we naturally send people to find out what this is all about when we have Mexican military coming in; and a drug shipment comes through where we have pulled our people away.

This is what has been happening. Again, nobody has talked about it. An American, a person that is a member of our Border Patrol, is actually fired upon by another person who is a member of a foreign military service, and nothing is said or done around here, all because we are fearful of discussing this issue of immigration and immigration control; all because we are fearful of the politics of it.

I will tell the Members, and I know the gentleman feels this way, too, this issue, it is our responsibility, even if it is to our political peril, it is our responsibility as Members of Congress of the United States to live up to the oath of office that says we are going to protect this country, the people and the property of this country, from all those who intend to do us harm.

Part of that duty is to defend this border, or, as I say, to leave it. But we cannot continue in this halfway mode of creating a facade of protection, sending people down there like Kris, telling them to hold back that flood, but not really and truly doing what is necessary for fear that we would actually stop the flow of illegal immigrants into the country.

There are all kinds of ramifications of that, political and economic. We do not want to deal with that, and we do not want to adjust our policies because we are afraid of the politics. I am not, and I know the gentleman is not, and I know there are other Members of this body who are not afraid to address this issue. There are hundreds of thousands of people like Kris who serve every day on that line who look to us for that kind of leadership and support. They see us as their only hope to ever get the job done.

And we have a duty to them to do everything we can. We ask them to do everything they can. We asked Kris Eggle to do everything he could do to protect that national monument, that national park; and he did everything that he could do. It is up to us to do everything that we can do in this body to make sure that his death was not in vain.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of talk around the country lately about leadership. In corporate America we have seen where, for some, leadership had evolved from serving others, serving those who had given you the opportunity to lead, serving and recognizing that with leadership came a certain responsibility, and for that limited number of corporate executives it had moved from serving others. Leadership now means what can I get out of it for myself? Leadership began to mean more about, what's in it for me, than what is in it for others?

The gentleman is absolutely correct that for the folks that put their lives on the line each and every day, for them leadership is about service. Chris was doing this in service of his country. For our troops in central Asia, they are doing this in service to their country. For the firefighters and rescue workers in New York and at the Pentagon, they gave their lives because they recognize leadership and responsibility meant serving others and not serving myself. For the folks on United Flight 93, again, service meant, I am going to take the risk. I am in leadership. This is my opportunity to lead. And when leadership presented itself to those people on United 93, they went and they sacrificed their lives knowing that they would serve their country. That is exactly what Kris did.

The story of the incident is that he never forgot the responsibilities of his job. When they got to the place where the road ended and the tracks went off the road of the folks that they were pursuing, Kris recognized that to follow those tracks would do more harm to the environment so he parked the truck. He said, we do not take trucks out there. And because of his experience in running, he went after them on foot and then was ambushed and that is how he lost his life. But he never thought about what was in it for him. He said, this is the job that I have agreed to do. I am here to serve my country. I am here because I love the National Park Service, and he ended up sacrificing his life.

But the same thing that they have to do is that we have to recognize is that the individuals that we put on the front line as they have defined leadership to mean service, we need to view it the same way.

Leadership now means not what is in this for me politically, what are the political costs and consequences, but it is how do we serve our constituents, how do we serve this country and how do we serve those we put on the front line? The way we serve those on the front line is to provide them with clarity of what we want them to do. I think they have that. At least in that 30-mile section they have clarity. They see it as our job to secure that border. That is what we thought borders were for.

What maybe has not been so clear back to us here in Washington is taking the steps in leadership that will actually equip these individuals to do that job. Kris saw it. It was my duty to serve my country, protecting the borders and maintaining the integrity of the borders and stopping drugs from coming in here illegally and stopping others from coming in here illegally. That is my job. There is no lack of clarity there.

The only lack of clarity that they may have within the National Park Service is if they are asking us to do all of this, why does the rhetoric out of Washington not always match what they are asking us to do. They may be a little confused about that. And then in some cases, and maybe too often, it is why have they not given us the resources to properly do our job? There is no question that for any sovereign nation protecting the borders and providing integrity to the borders is a key component to your sovereign nation and keeping your nation safe. That is a well established fact. That is one of things that governments do. We just need to make sure that the folks that we ask to do that, we recognize and give them the resources to make sure that they can do that job and do it very, very effectively.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, one of the ways in which this whole issue can be described includes a connection to the war on terrorism. Because it is not only the southern border where we see this kind of activity, but, as I say, I just returned a little bit ago from the northern border, a place near the Canadian border called Bonners Ferry, Idaho. And all of the activities up there of the border patrol, of the U.S. Forest Service, and in this case, there were 100 Marines that had been assigned the task of trying to determine whether they could interact with the border patrol and the U.S. Forest Service for the purpose of trying to defend one little chunk of border. Just see what we can do if we combine our efforts. One hundred Marines, 3 drones. They were using old UAVs, those unmanned aerial vehicles, flying along the border. It is the same ones, the first generation type we used in the first Gulf War, and a couple of radar towers. And, of course, what we saw was a large amount of drug activity, a large amount of people coming across that area carrying drugs.

When I was up there I was told that there is a very large Muslim population in Calgary, Canada. Again, kind of surprising in a way. Almost 25,000 people, Muslims living there. They were connected, a large number of them are connected with the trade in the component parts of methamphetamines, shipping them into the United States through Canada. They took it down here, make the drugs, sell it, and the money goes back to the Muslims in Calgary to this group, the drug trade group, and they use the money to support terrorist activities all over the world.

When we keep talking about this, about there being a war on our borders, it is quite literally a war. Again, something I think that so few of our colleagues even perhaps understand. They look at it again as just what they see in their own districts. That is understandable. But when you get to the border, as we say, you see illegal immigration in the form of drug trafficking, drug running, illicit sex trade, human smuggling, economic crimes. These are all part of what is going on on the border.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that it is a pleasure to be here with my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), to honor as little as we can here. As I said at Kris's funeral, when someone has given the full measure of devotion, what word can we possibly use to try and salve the wounds that are created by that event? There are few, if any, that we can utter that will give solace to his parents, give comfort to his friends, and rest to his soul. God is in charge of that, and we place his family, his friends, and all of the people who work every single day in the same capacity as Kris to help defend America, we place them in God's hands and ask for His blessing on them all; and for us here in this body, for the task that lays ahead of us, to help support him and America.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend for joining me today.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I went to Central Asia and I know my colleague has spent a lot of time on the border, and sometimes our constituents ask us why we go. They think it is some kind of a junket. It is to go to see a couple of things. It is to go to see these Kris'es around the borders, around the world who are on the front lines each and every day, to put a face with the people on the front line.

Central Asia, I was over there and I took a video camera, and I ran into about 10 or 12 constituents who are in K-2, who were at the Moscow embassy, who were on the U.S. George Washington, who were in Bahrain, and what we did is we just asked them to send a message back home. And we asked them, who do you want me to call? And you end up calling parents, husbands, grandparents; and each of these Kris'es around the world have loved ones that care deeply about them. So we have got to, number one, just to meet our constituents and to demonstrate that we care and we are concerned about the environment that we have put them in.

The second reason we go, and my colleague has gone along the border, is to find out whether we have given them the resources to do the job. What my colleague has tragically found out in Arizona is maybe we have not given them the resources, and maybe we have not paid as much attention to this issue as we should have. And for us to put our front line folks in that type of a position, my colleague has identified it, Congress can no longer say we did not know. We now know. And it is now our responsibility to respond. And we will have the opportunity to do that through the appropriations process. I think this year maybe we can move more human resources down to Organ Pipe and also where we can help construct some type of barrier to allow the more sophisticated illegal crossings to stop.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope we will do that. I hope we will begin a process that will eventually lead to our being able to tell our constituents that we are living up to the commitments we have made to try to protect and defend this Nation.

No matter what we do, it is possible, of course, that someone may come across these borders to do us harm. We may not be able to get everyone who tries, that is true. But we can do so much more than we are presently doing.

We can use technology along with human resources so much more effectively than what we are presently doing. It just takes will power. In many ways I look at Chris and others and I think of them as the folks who went to serve in Vietnam. We asked them to go. We put them in harm's way. We told them the country needed them but there was no real will to win the war, and we left them sort of out on a limb. And we are still paying the price for that, for what we did to the men and women who served in the armed forces in Vietnam by sending them to a war that we really and truly were not committed to win.

That is how I view the situation on the border with Kris, the border patrol, the Park Service, Customs agents, Forest Service people. We put them there, but I do not know whether or not we have the will to really win this war. It tests our mettle here as well as theirs to determine how far are we willing to go, what are we willing to do here in this body to say that this is not going to happen again or to say that, in fact, we are serious about trying to defend the Nation.

We are about, well, perhaps, we are going to be sending men and women off again into harm's way into Iraq. We are told that this is a distinct possibility. The President may be coming to the Congress in a very short time asking for our support of that endeavor. Do we think for a moment that if we in fact move forward on that, and I tend to believe that we have to do that, but do we think for a moment that there will not be ramifications in the United States? Do we think for a moment that Saddam Hussein believes he can win a war in Iraq against our military might? No. He knows that is not possible. He knows that we are most vulnerable here. And he will try to bring the battle to us.

We are told every day that another attack in the United States is imminent. Well, how logical does it seem to you or any of our colleagues, I wonder, that we will spend an enormous amount of our treasury and our human resources in places thousands of miles away which, again, I am not going to argue right now as to whether or not it is appropriate. I tend to think it is. But we are doing nothing significant on our own border. Is this not the height of folly?

Is this not so irresponsible to us to not recognize that we are laying ourselves bare, laying ourselves open to greater attacks? And, yes, we are looking internally on how to deal with it. Maybe we will try to find them when they are here. Why not try to stop them before they get here? We may not absolutely be able to do it for every single person, for every single threat, but we can do far more than we are doing.

Just that, if we do that, if we commit to it. If we put the troops, if we use the military on our border to help support the Park Service, the border patrol and the forest service, we will have done, I think, a service to Kris Eggle and to the others who face danger every single day down there, and we will be doing our job. It is our responsibility here. It is not asking us to go the extra mile, for heaven's sake. It is asking us and the President of the United States to do exactly what we are supposed to do as well as the folks who are supposed to direct the resources of the Nation to its defense, and I fear that we are not doing it today.

I, of course, represent Columbine, the school in which such a tragedy occurred just a few years ago, and it was the most horrendous event I have ever gone through in public life, and I keep thinking about the fact that there were some good things that happened, and in every single horrible event something good does come out of it. We have to pray that this is the case, and it usually is.

Out of Kris's death, something good has got to happen here, and that is that we will, in fact, redouble our efforts, triple our efforts to protect his colleagues and our constituents from the forces of evil that are directed against us. I feel that that is what he would want us to do, and I do not mean just the al Qaeda agents, the cells that are operating. I mean the forces of evil that are importing drugs, sex slaves, all the rest that are coming across this border for the purposes of poisoning our children and our culture.

We also have a responsibility internally to do what we can to restructure the culture, to reinvigorate our own culture and to imbue it with what is good and right and just, but at the same time, we must do everything we can to make sure that these people cannot just come into the country at their will; just as my colleague said, what he was talking about the fact that this is our, as a Congress, it is our responsibility. We cannot ignore it. We cannot walk away from it, and it would be the best possible memorial we could give, I think, to Kris Eggle.

OUR NATION'S ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OTTER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I have come to the floor to speak this afternoon because of my concern about the nature of the conversation about our country that is taking place at this time.

This is a complicated country. I have prodded myself on serving in this body in no small part because this body and the other body have been so good at grappling with the full range of issues that confront our country. Yet, as I stand back and look at the kind of conversation we were having before we recessed, conversation about corporate abuse, about the economy and about world affairs, I see a very different picture from the picture I see now.

All of the oxygen in this place and in the media has been taken up with Iraq. Iraq is a matter of major concern. I have not heard or read a single analyst or member of this body that does not believe that Saddam is a man to be taken seriously and to have a serious strategy for dealing with. There may be differences about how to deal with him, but the danger he poses ultimately is not a matter of debate. What to do about him is, of course, a matter of serious debate.

The fact is that there is almost no chance wherever a person stands on Iraq and Saddam Hussein that we will enter Iraq before the election. That kind of wag-the-dog approach to foreign affairs is something I do not believe this President would engage in. Indeed, Mr. BIDEN of the other body has indicated that in his conversations with the administration he certainly does not believe that there would be some quick entry of our country into a preemptive strike. That is why we are having a conversation now that I predict will go on for some time, because the case has not even begun to be made.

Our President is going to the U.N. only tomorrow or this week. Yet, talk of Iraq has completely displaced what I think my colleagues at home have found is what the American people believe is a clear and present danger now. The clear and present danger now is the absence of a domestic agenda on the screen for them to see as we approach November.

As for Iraq, the President himself has said he has not even made up his mind what to do. The President says he thinks we will have to strike Saddam at some point, but then is quick to say but I have not made up my mind what to do.

My question is, has the President made up his mind and have we made up our mind what to do about what confronts the American people each and every day, and that is the economy that drives how they live their lives. We cannot allow debate about the possibility of a war abroad to foreclose debate about urgent issues right here at home.

Unless my colleagues have not been listening to their constituents, I know they are hearing what I am hearing. Is this a jobless recovery? Because we still see people losing jobs. Some people do not like the use of the words jobless recovery, but even the most conservative analyst will use the words slow recovery, and there is a reason for that.

We have got unemployment now at 5.7 percent. That is a huge jump up from this time a year ago, 9.6 percent for blacks. People are seeing shifts in the cost of health insurance from their employer straight to them so that they are having to bear more of the cost of health insurance than they had to bear this time last year, always a danger signal that there is something happening in the economy that I better be careful about.

Perhaps the greatest and most conclusive evidence that something is wrong with the economy is what is happening to States and localities throughout the United States faced with huge deficits. My own city has found that the effect of the slow recovery or this recovery in many places, people no longer pay the kinds of capital gains they were paying, for example, no longer have the kind of disposable income yielding taxes of various kinds to State and local government. The effect of that is that State and local budgets are plummeting all over the country, and States are scrambling simply to find enough money to make it through with the bare necessities that State and local governments must provide.

That is something that virtually every State and local government in the United States is experiencing now. We have it in this region which is one of the most prosperous in the country. We have it in Maryland. We have it in Virginia. We have it in the District of Columbia, and we have it in virtually every State of the Union.

We know why there is this effect on State and local budgets, the effect on our own deficit which is growing like Topsy. We know it from bankruptcy and airlines. We know it from the fact that companies employ a million people less than they employed a year ago. We know it from layoffs in major sectors. Layoffs continue in manufacturing. Layoffs continue in retail.

We know it because of the higher cost of terrorism insurance, something we must get completed before this House and Senate go home for the elections because every place now which is exposed to the public is beginning to experience increases in the insurance, increases that are quite extraordinary, not only here in the Nation's capital where some might have expected it, but anyplace there is a facility where large numbers of people meet or even in rural areas where there may be some sensitive facilities nearby.

I am particularly concerned that in the face of this situation, with virtually no conversation going on in the media or in this body about the economy, we see that the American people turn on the television and say when is somebody going to talk about me. Our claims for unemployment were 33 percent above what they were a year ago. Most States have not kept the recommended reserves in their unemployment trust funds, just when they are most needed, and pathetically, 19 States have increased the earnings requirement in order to qualify for unemployment insurance while only 1 State has reduced the earnings requirement. This at a time when in a recent article we learned that if a person makes less than $50,000 per year, their chance of being laid off is 43 percent greater than if they earned more than $50,000 a year. I do not know how the lower middle class and low income people make it in times like this, and I do not understand why we would not be talking about these issues, why they are off the radar screen, because they are on the minds of all of our constituents.

Last year, only 38 percent of the jobless even qualified for unemployment insurance. If a person is a part-time worker, if they are a lower paid worker, if they are a temporary worker, they have been written off for unemployment insurance very often because when the great statute was passed, those kinds of workers were far less numerous, and we have not done our job to revise our own statutes, to take into account the new employment trends, employment trends that have been with us now for a full generation.

One of the reasons, of course, for this jobless recovery is that after September 11, the economy seemed to ride along just fine, and we thought, well, is not this something, they hit us and it did not make much difference. We owe a lot to the American people for making sure that they continued to live their lives, including live their lives in the economy, because this economy was driven or has been driven along for some time by consumer spending and consumers continue to stand after September 11.

It is clear as the nose on our face, however, that consumers have now lost confidence in the economy, and the reason we know it is because they have stopped spending. Consumers account for two-thirds of all the economic activity in our economy in the first place, so let them stop spending and we begin to feel it very quickly, and that is what they have stopped doing.

And I say to my colleagues, have you not stopped spending as much as you were spending? I do not know anybody who is spending the way they were 5 years ago, because there are too many uncertainties in the economy. And there is too little discussion here or elsewhere about what to do about those uncertainties.

After 9-11, in order to keep people spending, we had all kinds of approaches among retailers, reductions, the no-interest financing on cars; but it seems pretty clear that consumers have had it up to here, and I can understand why. Household debt is now 75 percent of the gross domestic product. When you get that much debt, I do not care how much you want to spend, you are probably going to think very hard before continuing on the all-American spending spree that the country has been on for some years now.

Now, I am not at all criticizing Americans either for spending or for deciding that the time to spend should end. I believe that they have a right to expect guidance from us on what we are going to do about it, and I believe they are getting guidance neither from us nor the Bush administration. We have to look forward and not only look backward to the good old days when the economy was so flush it looked like it would never stop expanding. The economy has been jolted to understand that that kind of expansion cannot go on forever. And if it cannot go on forever, we have to explain to the American people what to expect.

One thing we can expect is that the terrible budget cuts that the States and localities are having to do this year will continue for the indefinite future. Because when we cut this year, we find the problem rolls over for 2, 3, maybe even 4 or 5 years. In my own district, the chief financial officer has said that he thinks that the city must have a 5-year plan that indicates that our budget will be balanced not only this year, by making the kind of terrible cuts that we here and all across the country are having to make, but that we will not simply roll over the problem to other years. And so we have to look at a series of cuts that are going to continue for some time, because the kind of exuberance one saw in the market was indeed reflected in State and local budgets, and, yes, in spending by the American people.

I do not come to the floor today to say to my colleagues, all right, what is the answer? Let us write the answer clearly so the American people can see it. What I do come to the floor to say is that we should be debating not only foreign affairs but domestic affairs. We should not only be debating what should happen in Iraq, in Afghanistan, where we still have a theater of war, in the Middle East. All of these are of top concern and priority, but there are equal priority concerns on the domestic front.

When we have been at our greatest has been when we have shown the world we know how to walk and chew gum at the same time. That is the challenge before us today, not to short-change the domestic agenda at a time when we have a slow recovery, when Americans do not know where their next health care premium is coming from, when the corporate abuse statute we will pass has yet to prove itself, when companies are still coming forward with restatements of earnings. All that is still on the screen and our constituents still need to hear from us a balanced debate: What are you going to do about Iraq and what are you going to do about home?

So I come to the floor as we ask that we initiate that debate; that the relevant committees help us to become involved in that debate; that we ourselves take on the role of restoring confidence in the consumer so that the consumer feels that it is safe again to spend because they have in Washington a Congress and a President who knows how to guide us during troubled times. They do not have that now.

When we have a balanced conversation and a balanced debate about the two great bookends, the domestic and the foreign, I think we will restore the confidence in the economy that we know now has vanished.

SENATE—Tuesday, September 10, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JON CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we begin this day with the words of the psalmist when he prayed,

I cried out, You answered me and made me bold with strength in my soul.—
(Psalm 138:3).

We, too, cry out, asking You to make us bold because of Your strength surging in our souls. We yield our souls to be ports of entry and dwelling places for Your Spirit in us. You form Your character in us and give us convictions we cannot deny. Your strength makes us resolute in living the truth. We feel boldness to speak Your truth and to follow Your guidance. Exorcize any fear, timidity, or equivocation.

Father, as the Nation looks to our Senators for moral integrity and inspiration, give them a special measure of Your power, so that, from the depth of their souls, they will have Your supernatural strength to lead with courage. We have a great need for You; and You are a great God to meet our needs. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JON CORZINE led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 10, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. CORZINE thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The assistant majority leader is recognized, the Senator from Nevada.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. We will begin a period of time until 10:30 to debate the Daschle amendment. We have people who wish to speak. The time is evenly divided between the two leaders. We will vote on this matter at approximately 10:30.

Today, because it is Tuesday, we will be in our weekly party conferences from 12:30 to 2:15. At 2:15 we will begin consideration of the homeland defense bill. This morning we will work on the Interior bill. Hopefully, we will have a couple of votes—not just this one vote—on this matter that will be voted on at 10:30.

Tomorrow there are a number of activities here and at the Pentagon regarding September 11. Tomorrow there will not be much legislative business. There will be an opportunity for people to give speeches. Around noon there will be a moment of silence. Following that, we will have some time set aside for people to give speeches, if they desire. We have so much to do and so little time to do it.

Thursday and Friday, we are working on this bifurcated schedule. Maybe if we get rid of these two amendments today we can see the end in sight for the Interior appropriations bill. Hopefully, we will be able to work with Senator THOMPSON, who has been easy to work with, and move this along. Some of the other Members, we know, are waiting. We hope we can accomplish a lot today. We could have a late night tonight.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 5093, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5093) making appropriations for the Department of Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Byrd amendment No. 4472, in the nature of a substitute.

Byrd amendment No. 4480 (to amendment No. 4472), to provide funds to repay accounts from which funds were borrowed for emergency wildfire suppression.

Daschle modified amendment No. 4481 (to amendment No. 4480), to provide emergency disaster assistance to agricultural producers.

AMENDMENT NO. 4481

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be 60 minutes remaining for debate on the Daschle amendment numbered 4481.

The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to follow Senator BURNS.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. I thank my friend from Minnesota. Senator BYRD will be a little bit late this morning. If the Senator would like to give his statement now, that is perfectly OK with me. I think there will be more speakers on our side. I am supporting the amendment. We will make those points at a later time.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank my colleague and I thank the Senator from Montana for all of his support, all of his leadership on this amendment that deals with disaster assistance for rural America.

Colleagues, the Presiding Officer comes from a State where agriculture is not the No. 1 industry. Thomas "Tip" O'Neill said all politics is local. I add, all politics is personal. For me, this is probably the biggest priority I have right now, to get help to people.

This amendment, which started with Senator BYRD providing assistance for firefighters working on fires in our country, and some Members said, let's do this all together.

I come from a State where we have had massive devastation, massive losses from flooding. Others come from States where there is drought. Others come from States where there are fires. And, of course, since I have been in the Senate it has been hurricanes, tornados, you name it. This provides much needed assistance to farmers, whether they be wheatgrowers, soybeans, or livestock producers.

In our State, the estimates of the amount of loss of dollars is $300 million plus. The people with the best of crop insurance have lost 30 percent that they do not have covered. The independent producers cannot make it.

This is what we have, a situation that is a perfect example of there but the grace of God go I, or we are our brother's keeper or sister's keeper. How true.

I have never, since I have been a Senator, voted against disaster assistance for any part of the country. I know that when people are hit by floods or drought or tornadoes or hurricanes or fire, it does not have a thing to do with whether they work hard or do not work hard, are good managers or not good managers. No one asks for this.

In the original farm bill, I think we had over $2 billion for disaster assistance for 2001. It was taken out in conference. It was opposed, I guess, by the administration and some of the leadership in the House. We tried to put it on the supplemental appropriations bill, without much luck.

I think the support has built for this legislation. We are going to have a really strong vote, and, frankly, I am not really interested in drawing the line, as in Democrats versus Republicans. I do not think this has much to do with that. I wish the administration would be more supportive, but I think the President will sign this bill. I know he will. I think if we get a strong vote on the Senate side, the House will support it. It is just impossible for any Senator or Representative—it doesn't really matter about party—you just cannot turn your back on people.

All these statistics, to me, translate in personal terms. The trips I have taken to northwestern Minnesota have been among the most emotional experiences I have had as a Senator. You can see the damage the floods have caused.

FEMA can help with temporary housing, and FEMA can help if there is damage of public infrastructure. FEMA helped us build a new school in Ada, MN. That was so important. But when it comes to farm country, really, if we do not provide the help, it is just not going to be there. FEMA cannot deal with these kinds of crop losses.

It is just the absolute sense of discouragement, of just being completely beaten down, of seeing your whole life's work disappear, of just believing there is no future. Then there has been the delay, and the delay, and I think a lot of farmers—and not just farmers, people in northwest Minnesota—have just lost all hope.

I make this appeal to all my colleagues to please support this legislation. The truth of the matter is, never in the 12 years I have been here have we hesitated to provide disaster assistance moneys to people. We never have hesitated—never—to take it out of general revenue. We know we are going to have to do it. As I say, if it is the farmers in northwest Minnesota now, it could be people on the coast in Florida who need help tomorrow. God knows, people in Colorado need it. Certainly in Colorado we have drought; South Dakota, North Dakota; Kansas is faced with these struggles—it is all over the country. And then it could be something else next year and the next year. We are talking about natural disasters. This is long overdue.

As a Senator from Minnesota, I view this as the most important vote we could have. I appeal to all my colleagues, regardless of the region of the country you are from, regardless of whether you are faced with any of these catastrophes. I again pledge, one more time—I see two more colleagues here in the Chamber, so I am not going to take more than another minute or two. Here is what I say to you, and it is an absolute promise I will keep. If you, as a Senator from New Jersey, or the Senator in the chair, any Senator ever comes to the floor and says, my God, this is what has happened, there is this devastation, there is no way people can build their economic lives without this disaster relief—I know it is not in the State of Minnesota—will you, as a Senator from Minnesota, support this? I will say yes, because we are a national community and we help people. That is what it is about: We help people. This is critically important.

I hope we will get a huge vote for this amendment. I make the plea to all my colleagues, regardless of the State they are from, to please support this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from Kansas.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding.

Mr. President, before you saddle up to ride on a new trail, it is a good thing to take a look at where you have been. You can avoid a lot of trouble—a lot of ditches, a lot of box canyons—that way. The problem is that in terms of yet another expensive disaster bill for farmers and ranchers—sorely needed—we are indeed in a box canyon. It appears we are going to have to pay quite a price to backtrack, to get to a responsible and reasonable farm program policy to be of assistance to our farmers.

We didn't have to go down this trail. I would like to read a quote by the distinguished Senate majority leader. He is doing the best he can, as he sees it, with the disaster bill. But the majority leader said in regard to the new farm bill when it was passed in May, according to CQ Monitor News:

What we are doing is putting certainty back in the bill. And I would argue, we're going to be doing it at less cost to the Federal Government during the course and life of this bill than we did under Freedom to Farm because you are not going to see these disastrous supplemental requests in the future. We'd still like to get one for 2001, but in the future you are not going to see them. It won't be necessary.

At the same time, we also had many say that the new farm bill was the greatest farm bill ever passed.

Here we are, only 4 months out from the passage of the farm bill, and farmers are lined up outside the Farm Service Agency offices in great numbers, with all of the complexities of the bill, and already these folks and a majority of the farm and commodity organizations are also lined up, pushing for a disaster assistance package, a bill the Congressional Budget Office now says will come close to $6 billion. It is a bill that faces an uphill, if not impossible, battle in the House and a possible Presidential veto.

How on Earth did we get here after passing the so-called greatest farm bill ever? Because in my view the new farm bill is flawed. Simply put, it provides no assistance to farmers when they need it the most. That so-called and much talked about countercyclical safety net we heard so much about—well, it was not a safety net. It is a hammock. It has holes, and it is lying on parched acres suffering from drought.

We are in, as has been said and has also been covered in the press, one of the worst droughts we have ever seen in many parts of the Plains. Pastures are gone. Cattle herds have been liquidated. Combines never left the shed in parts of Kansas. Parts of our great State look like the desert areas of the southwestern United States. I have bankers telling me they cannot cash flow a single producer who does business at their bank.

In large part, these cash flow problems are the result of a farm bill that provides no assistance to producers this crop-year when they do not have a crop. When the farm bill was debated months ago, I said I would vote against the bill because it would not have provided the so-called countercyclical assistance to wheat producers in 9 of the last 20 years. Why would you support a farm bill that did not really provide any assistance in about half of the time in the past 20 years, with most of those years being in poor production years caused by droughts, flooding, freeze, insects—the years when we need the assistance the most, 9 out of 20? I did not think that was a very good deal.

For that I received some criticism on this floor. I was told it was OK that the bill would not have paid out in 9 of those 20 years because that meant that prices were high and producers would not need the assistance.

Let the record show that yesterday in Dodge City, KS, the closing price was $4.67 a bushel on wheat. That is a tremendous price as compared to where it has been, so prices have come up. It is about $2.91 a bushel for corn, $4.28 a bushel on sorghum, $5.61 a bushel on soybeans—great prices. But, with these prices, my producers are barely hanging on. Why? They have no crops to sell. Consequently, the few who did sold early to meet these emergency obligations.

This August, I just finished a 105-county listening tour. I wish those “greatest farm bill ever” proponents would have been there. My farm meeting in Stockton, KS, America, started out with a farmer telling me:

Pat, thanks for voting against that farm bill. I don't think most of us can survive this first year under it. We were counting, under the old bill, on a supplemental payment called the AMTA payment, or at best the equivalent of that payment.

It was a common statement all throughout Kansas.

The difference is that under that payment, the checks would have been there now and it would have been 60 cents for wheat as opposed to a very small direct payment of 6 cents a bushel for wheat. And the other three components of the countercyclical payment don't work in times such as this.

It is true that prices are high. But it is because drought has reduced the supplies. In many instances, my producers had no crop to harvest. And that is true in Montana, it is true in Wyoming, it is true in Colorado, it is true in South Dakota, it is true in Nebraska, and it is true in Oklahoma. But due to these high prices, they are not going to receive any countercyclical payments. There is no loan deficiency payment, and they have no crop to put under loan.

One of the criticisms of the farm bill was that it was too complex. Farmers would get payments in maybe one in four mailboxes. If you looked in one mailbox, no payment. If you looked in a second mailbox, no payment. If you looked in a third mailbox, no payment. If you looked in a fourth mailbox, maybe 6 cents a bushel.

That is one of the major flaws of this farm bill. It is why I pushed an alternative farm bill approach. It is also why I proposed implementing this bill or any new bill in 2003—the next crop year to give us enough time to work on it—and doing a budgeted $5.5 billion supplemental AMTA payment plus livestock feed assistance for this year—cash payments, income protection, not a countercyclical payment less than what we are going to spend in regard to this disaster bill.

Instead, here we are doing a disaster bill again. Every even numbered year there is disaster assistance proposed and disaster assistance to implement. As long as this farm bill is our current policy, we are probably going to be back here doing one each and every year.

This ride into a farm bill box canyon is expensive. It is full of regulatory potholes, all sorts of snakes that come back and bite the producer and truly counterproductive—not counter-cyclical. Two years ago, we made significant reforms to the Crop Insurance Program. That was the tool under the Kerrey-Roberts bill, or the Roberts-Kerrey bill depending on which one you want to give the credit. If you like it, it is the Roberts-Kerrey bill. If you do not like it, it is the Kerrey-Roberts bill.

There are significant reforms. Coverage levels are up. Insured acres are up. Indemnities paid to producers are substantial. We spent $1 billion to address the problems caused by multiple years of losses. Many producers are telling me they are just beginning to realize the benefits of this change.

You can insure up to the 85 percent coverage level. However, because of the farm bill that was passed earlier this year, which took money out of crop insurance, we are now doing a disaster assistance bill that works to undermine the very reforms we passed in the year 2000. Again, it didn't have to happen this way.

We proposed a farm bill that would have provided assistance in years of both low prices and crop losses. The other side said: No thank you.

We proposed a supplemental AMTA package and livestock assistance that would have been paid for in the budget. The checks would be out this month. The other side said: No thank you.

It took USDA 8 months to provide disaster payments several years ago. They are hard hit today trying to work through all of the paperwork on the new farm bill. I am not sure that will happen in regard to immediate assistance. Here we are again, just like the farm bill. My minority party was shut out of any committee consideration of that bill. And due to the parliamentary situation in which this second-degree amendment was submitted, we have no opportunity to offer amendments to this package.

I had a proposal to allow producers to choose between 2001 and 2002 assistance. The other side didn't like that, though it was a better deal for taxpayers. It brought the price down. And, after all, farmers did receive the extra AMTA payment in 2001.

Was it perfect? No. But it was a halfway point between those wanting assistance and some in this body who want nothing at all. It worked to protect the Crop Insurance Program by requiring the purchase of crop insurance in order to receive disaster assistance.

Why buy crop insurance if you are going to get disaster assistance every year?

It tried to make proper use of taxpayer dollars by keeping this spending in check. And it was popular with my Kansas producers on my recent tour in the 105 counties of the great State of Kansas.

We will not have a chance to debate any alternative proposals today. This package will probably pass. I am going to reluctantly—heels dragging—support it. I have to support it. The situation is grim—absolutely grim. It has been hotter out in Kansas. It has been drier out in Kansas. But it has never been as hot and as dry at the same time—even back in dirty thirties—as is the case as of today.

But let's be honest with ourselves and the American public. These funds are coming straight from Social Security. It is the other side that has increased the bidding war right at the start of this appropriations process, and we are doing this plain and simple because we have a new farm bill that is flawed and that has created a cash flow vacuum in rural America.

There is no question that we need—that our farmers need—this disaster assistance. The situation in farm country hit by drought—the drought that caused increased market prices in other commodity regions, not the farm bill—is recordbreaking. It is severe. By passing—“force-feeding” is the better term—this expensive emergency disaster package, without any chance for amendment, what do we achieve? I will tell you what we achieve. We achieve an issue. I hope the end result is that we achieve a bill. Right now we have an issue. This bill will not pass the House. It will not be signed by the President. It is going to be a little tough for the farmer, it seems to me, to cashflow with politics and an issue at the bank.

I hope when we pass this bill—this very expensive bill that is headed for an uphill battle in the House and with the administration—that we can reach some accommodation in conference.

Reluctantly, I will vote for the bill. I don't like the way it has been brought up. I have gone over all of the reasons why I think we should have done it another way.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I would like to make another note about this process being hijacked for the last year and a half. When we started talking about drought and disaster relief and agriculture, the number was much smaller. In the meantime, we did pass a farm bill that I reluctantly supported. Of course, I was a party, with the Senator from Kansas, in offering a substitute amendment that I think would have been better for agriculture.

We have a circumstance at this time in this particular case where the money was taken out of agriculture and a drought where you have no crop for sale. We have a cashflow problem. In other words, we would like to see our agricultural producers go to the insurance program—we think it is much better than it was, say, 2 years ago—and to assume some responsibility in risk management. That is not the case now because of the drying up of funds over the last year and a half. The circumstances have changed. Thus, we have the amendment on the floor that is before us today.

I appreciate the work the Senator from Kansas has done in providing real help instead of getting into a position where we fall to the whims of politics. There are circumstances that arise that make this issue a very contentious issue. I thank him for his work.

Mr. ROBERTS. I thank the Senator. Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Montana, Senator BURNS, for granting me some time this morning to speak regarding this very important legislation to assist our farmers and ranchers across our country with the disaster which they have been experiencing—not only this year but in many cases for 2 or as many as 5 years.

I thank Senators BAUCUS and BURNS for their tireless work to get drought relief to the floor. I thank Senator DASCHLE for moving so quickly to get this amendment to a vote.

I think going home over the August recess certainly gave many Senators—and all of us from the States that have been hit by drought even more reason to move on this bill. I am glad we are having this vote today.

This drought is a disaster. It has been a disaster for agriculture and a disaster for rural communities which depend so much on agriculture. If this had been a hurricane or an earthquake, we would have already responded. If we had found a way to call a drought by name, such as “Drought Andrew,” or drought this or drought that, we probably would have been able to have it crystallized so people could see that it is the same kind of experience as you have with any other natural disaster. It just takes a longer time in building. It doesn’t have necessarily a beginning point or an ending point, but it expands over a broad period of time. We would have had an aid package within a few weeks, and assistance would already be on the way, and the communities that have felt the hurt and the pain would already be feeling the positive effects from this kind of support. Here we are responding to natural disasters, and I think it is important we do that. We can remedy that by passing this amendment today, not waiting any longer.

I also believe that my colleagues who are not from drought-stricken States may not have the entire picture about how bad this has been. I know I have been kept up to date on the devastation caused by the drought—getting reports, getting information, seeing pictures—but visiting the drought areas during the recess firsthand was certainly an eye-opening experience.

Going to farms that have had crops—some good, some bad—every year for 70 years and today, this year, to see there is no crop, for the first time ever, is an eye-opening experience. To walk across a cornfield and find only shriveled cobs that can barely be shucked and having no kernels is an eye-opening experience.

This is not the result of poor planning or some unfortunate weather; this is the result of a natural disaster that has crept upon the land, had no mercy; and it has turned upside down the hopes and the work that went into planting this spring.

Again, for much of my State, this is a no-yield year. I would like to give some specific examples that I heard back home. A family farmer near McCook, NE—my hometown—Dale Dueland, whom I have known from the days that he crawled across his family’s floor, said he would have a zero yield on his 900 acres of dryland corn. That crop is a loss this year, despite preparation that assumes little moisture—as he always assumes little moisture—and despite crop insurance.

Al Davis from Hyannis told me: “Each day places another nail in the coffin of many individual ranchers in Nebraska and on the Great Plains. Many ranchers have already thrown in the towel and are liquidating portions of their herds,” which will have an impact not only today and tomorrow but for the next several years until those herds are rebuilt, if they are rebuilt.

Annette Dubas, who owns a ranch and farm in western Nance County, NE, told me after the third year in a row of drought conditions, some farmers in her area had already been forced out, while others work two jobs just to be able to keep their farms going. These are not big-time corporate farms; these are family farmers who are being driven out of businesses that, in some cases, have been in their families for generations—in many cases 100 or more years.

The relief package before us today is of the utmost importance to farmers and ranchers across Nebraska and all rural America. It will make the difference between keeping their farms or being forced out of agriculture—to the very great detriment of all of us who depend on the “breadbasket of the world.”

We must pass this legislation and ensure that our rural communities are not allowed to wither under the worst conditions in over half a century.

This is not the result of a bad crop year or bad market price; it is about a no-crop year. It is about a no-pasture year, a no-grassland year on top of 2 or more for 5 years. It has been where we have been experiencing no crops, no pasture, and no future—unless we are able to step forward today and adopt this legislation.

Mr. President, I would like to close my statement this morning by quoting from what Dale Dueland said at the Senate Agriculture Committee hearing in Grand Island, NE, last month. And I quote him:

This drought is a disaster. It is as severe and as much a disaster as any flood, tornado, hurricane, or earthquake that you could imagine. It has been sneaky and sinister. It has tempted and teased us for two years with moderate dry spells, and this year just unleashed an unbelievable 90 days of extreme heat and dry to scorch the earth. This disaster deserves extreme measures to deal with the problems.

Mr. President, I could not have said it better than my friend Dale Dueland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague, Senator BURNS, for yielding time for me to come and speak on behalf of this amendment.

This is an amendment to provide emergency drought relief for ranchers and farmers. The amendment is based on Senator BAUCUS’ bipartisan bill, S. 2800, of which I am very pleased to be a cosponsor, along with 16 other Senators.

The ranching tradition in our State—in New Mexico—goes back 400 years to the time that the Spanish settled the State. The cattle and calf industry in our State is the single most important agricultural product that we have, which represents close to $1 billion a year in direct cash receipts to people in our State.

Most of the cattle industry is concentrated in rural areas of the State, such as Union County, Chaves County, and Curry County. These are family-owned businesses. The families in New Mexico who own these businesses, in many cases, have ranched this same land for many generations.

New Mexico, like much of the rest of the West, is now in the throes of the worst drought in at least 50 years. In some parts of the State, the drought has persisted for the last 3 years.

According to the Natural Resources Conservation Service, this has been one of New Mexico’s driest years in recent history. The lack of normal snow and rainfall has left ranchers in our State with little pasture for grazing livestock.

The Governor of New Mexico has declared a statewide drought emergency. He declared that in April. The Secretary of Agriculture has now declared every agricultural county in our State a disaster area.

Since March of this year, the USDA has rated range and pasture conditions in New Mexico at an average of 81 percent poor or very poor. These conditions have made it impossible for ranchers to maintain their herds. As a result of the continuing drought, water tanks and stock ponds in New Mexico's rangeland have dried up. Ranchers in my State are hauling water and are supplementing feed for their herds. As grazing conditions have continued to worsen, many ranchers have culled their herds because of the cost of water and feed being more than they could bear at this stage.

The drought will continue to impact producers in our State for years to come. Without emergency support such as contained in this amendment, the ongoing drought could very well put many of our ranching families out of business for good.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the staff of the USDA's Farm Service Agency in New Mexico for their fine work so far this year in helping New Mexico farmers and ranchers deal with the drought. They have used the limited tools available to them. Paul Gutierrez, Scotty Abbott, and Rosalie Ramirez have worked effectively to provide some limited economic help to producers throughout New Mexico. As a result, many producers in our State have been able to take advantage of low-cost loans, emergency haying and grazing on CRP land, or assistance through the USDA's Emergency Conservation Program.

However, even with this limited help from USDA, the farmers and ranchers of New Mexico are continuing to suffer the economic effects of the drought. In previous years, Congress has provided emergency support through the Crop Disaster Program, the Livestock Assistance Program, and the American Indian Livestock Feed Program. I believe the drought disaster in New Mexico is so severe that assistance again this year is justified.

I first voted to support drought relief in February during consideration of the farm bill. That amendment, which Senator BAUCUS offered, was adopted by a large vote of 69 to 30. Unfortunately, the House refused to include the emergency funding in the farm bill, and it was dropped in conference.

Since the Senate voted in February, the conditions in my State have continued to deteriorate because of the lack of moisture.

The emergency funding provided in this amendment will provide payments to ranchers for the losses they have suffered from the drought. The disaster funding is desperately needed. I hope all Senators will support the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from Frank A. DuBois, who is the New Mexico Secretary of Agriculture, in support of emergency drought funding as provided for in this amendment, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
Las Cruces, NM, June 6, 2002.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: As you know, our ranchers are facing a financial hardship due to the drought. I ask your support for funding the Livestock Assistance Program authorized in the recent farm bill.

Pasture conditions have declined severely over the past months. Currently, pasture and feed conditions are reported in very poor to poor condition. As a result, ranchers are providing supplemental feed and hauling water to their livestock. Ranchers in the state are also culling herds to reduce their feed costs.

Cattle and calves are New Mexico's largest agricultural industry. The overall economic impact from the ranching industry to the state is over $1 billion.

Please call me at (505) 646-5063 if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

FRANK A. DUBOIS.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes, 15 seconds remain.

Mr. BURNS. I yield 3 minutes to my friend from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, Wyoming is experiencing a level of drought that has been devastating to the ranching industry of my State. In an effort to address a need that grows more and more desperate every day, I am cosponsoring the emergency agricultural disaster assistance amendment. This amendment funds the Livestock Assistance Program for both 2001 and 2002 and responds to a call for help that echoes through the ranching communities of Wyoming and throughout the west.

The need for drought assistance is great, but the need for responsible legislating is just as great. As a cosponsor, I am fully supportive of the amendment before us; however, I must serve the needs of my State without breaking the budget. For this reason, I plan to introduce an amendment, with the support of Senator GRASSLEY, to offset the emergency funding for the Livestock Assistance Program by reinstating payment limitations in the farm bill. I plan to pay my own way for the assistance I have advocated for over a year.

My proposed amendment does its best to work within the strictures of a poor economy. I am not unmindful of the fact that the United States will have a deficit this year after 4 years of surplus. Alan Greenspan said to me a few weeks ago that one of the things this country needs the most now is fiscal responsibility. As a fiscal conservative myself, I plan to use an offset for desperately needed livestock assistance funding.

Time has changed things since we voted for disaster assistance in the farm bill. The national economic picture isn't so rosy with the thunder clouds of the forecasted deficit on the horizon. In fact, the economic forecast is as stark as the weather forecast ranchers are reading in my State. This is a time for choices. The agricultural community can't have it all, but we can do our best to act responsibly and serve their needs. That is what my amendment would do. And it doesn't just serve the ranching community.

My proposed amendment is not an attempt to decrease the assistance going to our agricultural communities or to thwart the emergency agricultural amendment before us now. I have spent the last month in Wyoming and the devastation there is imprinted in my brain. This is the third year Wyoming and the west have been battling the effects of the weather and suffering through a drought that has had a severe impact on families and communities throughout the west. As an example, when I was home in Gillette I noted that we had received just over half of our normal level of precipitation since January. Water is so precious right now Wyomingites treasure every drop that falls from the sky as a gift from the heavens. Unfortunately, those gifts have been few and far between and, at the printing of the last crop report, 80 percent of Wyoming's range and pasture feed was rated in poor or very poor condition. That 80 percent represents a huge increase over our 5-year average, which was 32 percent.

At the present time, only 13 percent of Wyoming has adequate topsoil moisture. That lack of soil moisture not only makes it impossible to grow crops, but it also has effects that ripple throughout our entire State.

In our Popo Agie Conservation district a fracture opened up this summer in the ground. Soil scientists called in to determine the cause of the fracture said that the 5-foot deep crack had opened up because there is not enough moisture in the soil for the land to maintain its current status and structure.

There is a good reason for that. The U.S. Drought Monitor indicates that significant parts of the west, including Wyoming, are experiencing an exceptional level of drought—level D4. That's the highest rating given for the status of a drought.

As I noted, the effects of drought at a D4 level ripple throughout our communities. For instance, the drought has forced Wyoming's Governor Geringer to ban the use of fireworks or campfires on State lands. Many of Wyoming's towns and counties have followed the Governor's lead and banned similar activities on their town and county lands. These stipulations have ruined some businesses and forced others that rely on summer sales to go without their one chance to make a profit this year. It's a sacrifice, but everyone understands the reason for the ban. After all, in a region that has been plagued with fires, a single spark in an area surrounded by dry wood is a formula for disaster. Although everyone understands the need to take drastic steps to address the drought, everyone is also suffering from the devastating impact of a lack of water.

It may be difficult for some of us to comprehend the lack of water out west because for so many of the fortunate citizens of the United States a sufficient supply of water is no further away than the nearest tap or faucet. There are even States suffering from the effects of floods. Wyoming, however, as is much of the west, is in desperate need of every drop of water we can find.

The best example of what the drought has meant to our tourism and recreational industry is the Bighorn Canyon National Recreation Area, which stretches 60 miles from the beginning of Bighorn Lake to Yellowtail Dam in Montana.

Usually boaters have a choice of three ramps to use to launch their boats onto the lake. The lake has been dropping an average of 2 to 5 inches a day, so all the ramps have been closed. Since the drought began the water level has dropped at least 45 feet.

The reservoirs in the rest of Wyoming are in even worse condition. If the drought continues, the dam at Boysen reservoir will no longer be able to produce electricity because the dangerously low volume of water means that there will be insufficient water pressure to spin the turbines and produce the electricity that the towns and people of Wyoming depend on for the necessities of life.

As you can see, the drought has had an impact on just about every aspect of life in the west especially those activities and resources we have always taken for granted. With the drought, there will be no campfires, no fireworks, no boating, in short, the recreational activities of the spring, summer and fall are no longer permitted—or possible.

True, this is a terrible problem, but for those who have to forego a year of these activities, it has been an inconvenience. For the agricultural community, however, the drought threatens their way of life and their ability to provide for their families. For the ranchers and farmers, the drought threatens to destroy the land and turn once valuable topsoil into dry dust that will blow away and never be restored to use again. For them, and so many others, the drought has been nothing short of a disaster.

It's easy for me to tell you how my constituents are suffering because of the drought which has destroyed so much of the resources upon which they depend, but unless you hear with your own ears how bad things have become, you still might not believe it.

Let me tell you a story about what your life would be like if you were part of a typical family in Wyoming that is barely holding on from the effects of 3 years of drought.

It's July on the ranch and you have 1,000 cow/calf pairs. Normally, on a day like today, you would have paper and pencil in hand to calculate how much you expect to make in the fall when you sell your calves. Unfortunately, this is not a normal day or a typical year. For on this day you are using your pencil and paper to calculate just how bad the news will be in the coming months. Your bottom line this year will not reflect your margin of profit, but your margin for survival.

Last year you sold 1,000 calves at an average of 600 pounds for $1.07 a pound. Your total income from your hard work came to almost $640,000. That is before any expenses.

This year, the conditions brought about by the current drought have forced you to sell your calves earlier and at a lighter weight.

That's the bad news.

The worse news is that you have watched the bottom fall out of the cattle market this year. That means you'll be selling your cattle at a lower weight and at a lower price. It's a double whammy that is sure to destroy you this year and leave you muttering the old baseball adage to yourself, Wait till next year.

So, you continue your calculations and note that you'll probably be selling 1,000 calves this year at an average of 500 pounds for only 80 cents a pound. That will bring you about $400,000—before you pay your expenses. Thanks to the drought, your total income has already dropped from $640,000 to $400,000. Unfortunately, your expenses and your bills have not taken a similar drop. In fact, they have increased—which you discover when you start working on next year's budget.

After a terrible sale, you realize you have to start feeding your cows soon. Cows come from cows—so you have to keep some. Normally, this doesn't pose a problem because a rancher usually puts hay up all summer to start feeding the cattle in January.

The drought ended that. You see, the drought stole the irrigation water you would normally use to grow your crops of hay and corn on the 1,000 acres of farmland.

Adding up what that will cost you comes out like this—the cost of buying hay, the loss of corn production, the cost of feeding your cattle for four additional months, the cost of leasing additional grazing land and paying full price for irrigation water even though you only are getting  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the water you pay for that adds up to about \$355,000, again added expenses due to the drought.

Remember, our total income came to $400,000. That means, after those expenses, you're left with about $45,000 to pay the normal operating expenses of the ranch, pay your mortgage, pay whatever help you have hired, make repairs on your ranch and the equipment you need—and, oh yes, feed and clothe your family.

Ranchers have added up those numbers in just about every way you can imagine and come up with the same answer—they can't afford to keep their cattle. That's why the sale rings in Wyoming are full and overflowing—which only serves to continue to drive prices downward.

As you can see, the double pressures of drought and the current depressed market have hit the ranchers in the West particularly hard.

Ranchers are usually an optimistic bunch, but this time nature offers them no reprieve and little reason to hope.

Farmers are having the same problem, but they have something our ranchers do not have—crop insurance.

Here on the Senate floor we crafted a farm bill that ensured there would be help for our Nation's farmers. We fully funded the programs farmers rely on and made sure they'd have a source of support when the market turned sour. Unfortunately, we didn't do the same for ranchers. The rancher doesn't have a safety net to keep him propped up nor does his crop, the cattle he raises, have a price safety net. This is an inequity that must be addressed.

As I listened to the heartfelt deliberations of the Senate on the farm bill, I heard a plea for the provision of $360,000 a year, which is the current payment limitation, in assistance to farmers. As the debate progressed I couldn't help but think of the ranchers who are struggling to make ends meet in Wyoming and throughout the west who are set to receive next to nothing to help them.

It seems clear to them, and to me, and to anyone who reviews our farm policy that farm bill payments were not intended to subsidize every acre of every farm—nor every bushel produced. They were meant to help those in need and to keep family farms in business. Shouldn't that same logic apply to family ranchers and ranches?

The American taxpayer should not be asked to keep large corporations or weekend hobby farmers in silk overalls and gold-plated pitchforks. Farm assistance was intended for and must continue to be directed at small and medium producers—family farmers who truly need help. Our rural communities depend on farms and the farms, in turn, depend on their communities.

Too many small farms are not receiving the assistance that is needed while large multi-million dollar corporations continue to receive Federal funds for every acre they take over. Payments to large corporations have nothing to do with good farm policy but good farm policy has everything to do with family farms.

Even farmers have recognized the desperate circumstances that face our ranchers and the inequity of their situations. Recently, we heard from an Illinois farmer who had a "heart for Wyoming." He wanted to donate hay to help Wyoming ranchers struggling to find feed for their herds. Don't get me wrong, we'll be glad to get it, but it will be a drop in a bucket compared to what we need—though it will be a much appreciated drop!

Just like the rancher with his pencil figuring out his budget, when you add it all up, there can be only one responsible conclusion and I have tried to present it in an amendment I plan on introducing later today.

Only by reinstating tougher payment limitations on farm bill payments and using the savings to offset emergency feed assistance to livestock producers for drought disaster can we hope to save them, while also making a stab at fiscal responsibility.

Current law has set payment limitations at $360,000, but that fails to count the gains farmers receive when they forfeit their crop to the CCC and keep the loan or when they use commodity certificates. These gains are not considered against the $360,000 payment limitation. Basically, payments are still unlimited.

If we have learned one thing this year, it should be to avoid tricky accounting. My amendment would put in place real payment limits by counting all gain. My amendment establishes that limit at $280,000 per year. This should be an easy choice as the Senate has already voted its support of farm bill payment limitations by 61-33 on February 7 of this year.

The reinstatement of payment limitations is directly in line with the proposal the administration made to the World Trade Organization to globally lower trade distorting subsidies. The proposal would limit trade distorting subsidies to five percent of agricultural production. Stricter payment limitations now would decrease the impact that this proposal would have on our farm bill programs. As world leaders we should set an example in word and deed for the rest of the world. We have spoken the word with the proposal. But as we all know, actions speak louder than words, so let us put our words into action today.

Under the terms of my legislation, a savings of at least $500 million from the strengthened payment limitations would be applied to the Livestock Assistance Program. The Livestock Assistance Program is available to livestock producers in counties that have been declared disaster areas by the President or the Secretary of Agriculture. It provides minimal financial relief to livestock producers that are experiencing livestock production loss due to drought and other disasters—but only if there is money in the fund. The emergency agricultural disaster assistance amendment before us now puts money in the fund and my proposed amendment would prevent that money from being another addition to our national debt.

Once the LAP is funded, producers apply for relief and a formula splits the available monies according to their needs. It assists all producers who qualify, but the extent of the assistance that is available is limited by the program funding and the number of applicants. The more applicants there are across the country, the smaller the individual payment.

Without the assistance and provisions in my proposed amendment, Congress is clearly picking the winners and losers of the current climate and economic conditions facing the West. This is not only unfair, it is unwise, too. We are continuing to slip outrageous benefits to corporate farms that don't need assistance while the West blows away in the wind. I'm only asking for what is fair and for what we should have done long ago.

I urge my colleagues to support the emergency agricultural disaster assistance amendment. If we pass this emergency amendment, the ranchers who are suffering will know that they have been heard. I also urge my colleagues to support my proposed amendment after this vote. If we go on to pass my amendment, we will have made the choice to act responsibly while providing desperately needed assistance. It will give ranchers and our economy a fighting chance to survive. We owe our ranchers and ourselves no less.

In conclusion, Mr. President, as I said, I am one of the cosponsors on this drought amendment. It is of critical importance to our State. We are in the third year of a critical drought. Each year has gotten worse. There has been less rain each year. Our ranchers are suffering terribly. I have tried on three different occasions to get some livestock assistance payments included in different bills. They have not made it through conference committee. At the same time we have taken care of farmers, we have provided them with payments of up to $360,000 each.

It is my intention, once this amendment is disposed of, to submit an amendment for the body to vote on that would provide for a slight reduction in those assistance payments where we are subsidizing every acre and every bushel produced on every farm so that something, anything can go to ranchers. We are talking about $360,000 to farmers, zero to ranchers. If my amendment for livestock assistance payments passes, they would get approximately $8,000. Does anybody see the disparity here? Ranchers need help, too. They are having to sell off their herds. When they sell off their herds, it drives the prices down. They were getting $1.07 a pound. How much are you paying for beef in the grocery store? It went down 80 cents a pound. It has been down to 60 cents a pound. Your prices went up. There is a monopoly in the beef, but that is another issue. We will cover that at another time.

We need to do something for the producers so we can keep putting food on the table. It is a huge part of the economy. It cascades into the rest of the economy. When farmers and ranchers can't buy things, then the merchants from whom they buy can't buy things. The economy implodes on itself.

Transportation is important in this country, but food production is more important. If we can't eat, we can't travel. We need to do something for the ranchers. There is a way we can do it. We absolutely need to do something on drought assistance. I hope my amendment will be accepted to offset some of the livestock assistance payments with the other payments so that we are not busting the budget. The best way for us to improve the economy is to watch the spending. That would be a cross-payment.

I ask for Members to watch for the amendment and to support the drought amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty seconds remains to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I ask the Chair if the time of those who support the amendment has been used?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three minutes remain on the other side.

Mr. BURNS. We used 23 of it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three minutes remain on the other side. Nine seconds remain on the side of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I yield to my friend from Colorado. I want to protect the opposition's time, understanding that we are starting to run out of time totally before the vote comes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Twenty-two minutes, 45 seconds remain to Senator WELLSTONE. The time is in the control of Senator WELLSTONE.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I would be pleased to give 5 minutes out of our time to the opponents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. Can I yield 2 minutes to my friend from Colorado and allow him to outline his statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota for being willing to yield some time to my side.

I want to follow up on some of the comments made by my colleagues from the intermountain area, particularly the Rocky Mountain region. Colorado is right in the center of this drought. With all the stories you have heard about the States around Colorado, we are much more affected than anybody else.

This is a very unique drought. It is a more severe drought than any of the people in Colorado can ever remember. In fact, if you look at the tree rings up in some of the foothill areas, a study has been done which suggests that maybe this drought has been the most severe drought we have had since the 1700s. So we have a lot of individuals in rural communities, farmers and ranchers, suffering as a result of this drought.

I have been working closely with the Secretary of Agriculture, Ann Veneman, to try to provide as much relief as we can with the program monies available. I thank the administration for being responsive, but we have to do more than that. That is why I am a cosponsor on this particular legislation. That is why I am pushing hard for its passage.

I grew up on a ranch in Walden, CO, spending my summers baling hay, and tending to cattle. But this year, hay is scarce and maintaining a cattle herd is a task of monumental proportions. I have seen the devastation caused by the drought as I have traveled across the state, and I have come to the very serious conclusion that farmers and ranchers, and the rural communities that depend on them, must receive emergency disaster assistance—before it is too late.

Those involved in agriculture have a strong tradition of lending their neighbor a hand when they are in need, and helping those who have suffered through a major loss. When a rancher's barn burns to the ground, you can count on farmers and ranchers throughout the county showing up to help rebuild. When a death or illness prevents the harvest of a crop, you can bet that a dozen combines will show up to bring the crop in, to salvage the season in the face of loss, and to lend a helping hand to those in need.

Yet this type of kindness is not isolated to the farm or ranch—we in the United States have always responded to natural disasters by providing the needed emergency assistance. And providing the needed assistance to those who produce our food, and sustain our democracy is no different. Following in the great fellowship that calls Americans together during the most challenging times, I urge my colleagues to immediately pass the emergency disaster amendment that is now before us.

The drought, which in some parts of my state has entered its fourth year, has transformed large expanses of prairie landscapes, and scarred mountain slopes and valleys to the point that all four corners of the state are parched beyond memory. In fact, the United States Department of Agriculture estimates that 93 percent of Colorado pasture is rated as either poor or very poor, and subsoil moisture supplies continue to be rated at extremely low at 86 percent very short.

Responding to the drought by developing new feed programs, working with Natural Resources Conservation Service field offices, funding the Emergency Conservation Program, and by responding quickly to the needs of farmers and ranchers of my state, Secretary of Agriculture Ann Veneman and President Bush, have provided farmers and ranchers with the tools to survive, and for that, I thank them both.

When I first urged the Secretary to release CRP ground for emergency grazing and haying in May, she responded by acting much more quickly than past practice dictated. In August, when I personally called the Secretary to urge the extension of the deadline, she responded the next day by extending the emergency haying and grazing deadline through November 30. Thank you, Madam Secretary, for your leadership in this difficult time.

While the administration has provided the tools to survive up to this point, the drought has now reached the point at which Congress must act swiftly to ensure survival beyond today.

I recognize that the arid climate of the west means dry weather, but I think that everyone would agree that this drought is anything but normal. In fact, I have been told dozens of times by farmers and ranchers—producers who have 70 plus years of experience—that this is the most severe drought they have ever witnessed. I recently had the opportunity to discuss the drought with scientists studying tree rings along Boulder Creek. They told me that only by tracing the rings back to the 1700's, could one find a period of comparable drought.

I have taken an active role in providing Coloradan's with access to programs that provide the necessary emergency resources. Over the past month, I have traveled across Colorado, meeting with 600 farmers and ranchers in Yuma, CO, coordinating meetings with dozens of producers in Las Animas, Alamosa, and Delta, and meeting with well over one hundred producers in Pueblo, to discuss the drought and drought relief. At the disaster forums, I brought together federal agencies that provide drought relief with the people who need their help the most. I listened as farmers and ranchers—some of whom had driven nearly 300 miles to attend—told of their need for assistance.

I listened as the Colorado Commissioner of Agriculture warned that state could lose as many as 50 percent of its farms because of the drought, and ranchers expressed their anguish at the fact that more than 1 million head of cattle—half the state's total—have already been liquidated. I listened as Larry Fillmore, a rancher north of Boone, CO, stood in a barren pasture that normally supports tall grass and cattle, and emotionally describe that the last moisture the pasture received was last October—in the form of a hail storm. Even the sage brush, with roots ten feet deep, had turned brown. I listened as ranchers told the story of mass cattle selloffs. In the proud community of La Junta, they are experiencing drought induced traffic jams, as a streaming line of trucks hauls cattle to the sale barn. Sale volume records are falling, and one sale—just one sale—can last nearly 24 hours straight, running from 9 am to 6:30 am the next morning.

According to an article in the Denver Post, over 700,000 acres of dryland winter wheat, worth an estimated $120 million, has been lost due to drought. Production was 38 million bushels this year, compared with a 10-year annual average of 83.4 million bushels. Sunflower production, worth almost $20 million last year, was down 71 percent this year, and 250,000 acres of dryland corn has completely withered away.

Perhaps the most telling story of all is that of Ed Hiza. Standing in the middle of his pasture, he said that 80 percent of the cattle in a 20 mile radius were gone, and that most of the remaining 20 percent would be shipped out within a month. Mr. Hiza made it clear about what the drought means for him, and many of his neighbors, "We've endured a lot of hardship in this county, and this drought is just the nail in our coffin." This story is recounted in the Pueblo Chieftan.

For those who do not believe that the drought is indeed that severe, I hope that they will pay attention to the following statistics, and keep in mind that Colorado is the source of water for many downstream States. According to the Colorado Department of Natural Resources, the South Platte River flows now hover at 13% of average, and Arkansas River streamflows are at record lows. In the San Luis Valley, many domestic wells have stopped flowing. Citizens are seeking assistance from Federal and State agencies for re-drilling wells. The San Luis Valley aquifer has been drawn down to the lowest level ever recorded. On the Rio Grande, the flow is 6% of normal. Without using the flows that are normally dedicated to a wildlife refuge, the Rio Grande would probably be dry at the stateline. Many streams are dry and many more may go dry. On the Gunnison River, streamflows are near record lows. Calls on the river are occurring that have not been placed since the construction of one million acre feet of storage—the Aspinall Unit reservoirs—upstream. In the Colorado River Basin, reservoir supplies are bleak. Active storage in Grandby Reservoir is less than 1/5 of capacity. Dillon will have 75,000 acre feet out of 252,000 acre feet. Williams Fork will be at its dead pool. Wolford Mountain Reservoir will have 19,000 acre feet and Reudi Reservoir will have 35,000 acre feet of its 120,000 acre feet capacity.

In the Yampa, White and North Platte basins, many reservoirs are empty save for their dead pool storage. Streamflows are well below normal. In the San Juan and Dolores Basins, all irrigation reservoirs are expected to be emptied. The San Juan is flowing at 3% of normal, and the Animas River is flowing at 14% of normal.

In short, the need for relief is real. Although there is no legislative cure for a lack of moisture, we can help ease the economic hemorrhaging caused by the drought. As we search for new alternatives that will provide drought relief to communities and businesses, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this amendment, and support those who have suffered from natural disaster.

I ask unanimous consent to print the following information in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE SHOULD OK FARM BILL

A prediction that Colorado will lose 20 to 50 percent of its farms and ranches over the next year underscores the importance of a bill in the U.S. Senate that will give cash and low-interest loans to help keep farms from shutting down their operations.

The bill, a $5 billion drought emergency package, is co-sponsored by Sen. Wayne Allard, a Loveland Republican. It is expected to pass the Senate on Monday. We urge swift passage of this measure that provides money for farms in dire need.

Not only would the emergency package provide low-interest loans for Colorado farmers and ranchers severely affected by drought conditions, it also provides cash grants for those who are too deep in debt to qualify for other government-subsidized loans.

Colorado's agricultural income stands to drop by one-half due to the drought. Production is already so far down this year that large dairy farms are losing thousands of dollars a month, hundreds of thousands of acres of produce have died and the prices paid to farmers for their products are decreasing.

Because the state has received federal drought designation, farmers also may qualify for federal loans. But many Colorado farms and ranches can't qualify for federal funding. Therefore, state loans and grants are of paramount importance during this extremely dry year.

What is frightening is that if the state's snowfall doesn't increase significantly this winter, the situation is going to be even worse next year.

The whole disturbing situation also makes a strong case for enhanced water storage systems during wet years.

While the government passes a measure to pump more cash into agriculture, we also must look at being more aggressive in planning for the state's future water needs.

SENATE BILL SEEKS CASH FOR FARMERS IN DROUGHT

OFFICIALS FEAR STATE WILL LOSE 20%-50% OF FARMS IN YEAR

(By Kit Miniclier)

Cash and loans would be available to farmers in Colorado and the rest of the country hit hard by drought under a $5 billion drought emergency package co-sponsored by U.S. Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo.

Low-interest loans aren't enough help for farmers whose worth shrank during the drought, agriculture officials say.

They predict Colorado will lose from 20 to 50 percent of its farms and ranches over the next year.

The measure, which Allard predicted would win Senate approval Monday, provides loans. It also offers cash grants for those who can't qualify for low-interest federal loans, he said.

"This is the worst drought in Colorado history," probably going back to the 1700s, said Allard, the only veterinarian in the Senate.

Agriculture, which consumes about 85 percent of Colorado's water, earns about $5 billion as the produce leaves the farm or ranch, "and you can add another $12 billion at retail," said Don Ament, a veteran farmer, state lawmaker and Colorado's commissioner of agriculture.

Dead and dying crops are expected to cut Colorado farm income by at least half this year, Ament warned Gov. Bill Owens this week.

Although a statewide federal drought designation earlier this year cleared the way for low-interest federal loans, many farmers and ranchers aren't eligible because they are already deeply in debt.

"A catastrophic impact on agriculture and rural businesses can be expected" this fall because of this loss of crops and income, according to a report compiled for Owens.

If Colorado doesn't get a substantial snowpack this winter, "the situation will be tenfold worse by this time next year," Ament added.

That's because there was water in the reservoirs this year, but many are dry now.

The state could increase its water storage by 150,000 acre-feet by simply repairing existing dams, according to Greg Walcher, executive director of the Colorado Department of Natural Resources.

There is a consensus—for this first time in two generations—to store water for bad years, Walcher added.

Colorado's drought-related losses reportedly include:

More than 1 million cattle—half the state's total, including breeder stock for hundreds of farms—sold prematurely.

Big dairy farms losing $15,000 to $20,000 a month because of low milk prices and rising feed prices.

700,000 acres of dryland winter wheat worth an estimated $120 million died. Production was 38 million bushels, compared with a 10-year annual average of 83.4 million bushels.

Sunflower production worth almost $20 million last year, was down 71 percent this year.

This year's 250,000 acres of dryland corn dried up before it could be harvested. Last year's crop was worth $34 million.

Sorghum for grain, which grossed about $17 million last year, is down by at least 25 percent this year.

"You know you've got real trouble when you drive by a reservoir and dirt storms are blowing out of the lake bottom," said

Ament, who had recently driven past Barr Lake State Park northeast of Denver.

RANCHER'S LAMENT: "FEED AND WORRY"

(By Margie Wood)

With decent rain, the sandy soil on Larry Fillmore's ranch north of Boone would support waist-high grass and a cattle herd—and a way of life that has kept his family on the land for four generations.

This year, a portion that's in the Conservation Reserve Program is covered by a gray tangle of grass that saw its last moisture in the form of hail last October. And that was better than a 40-acre plot across the road, where two horses and a congregation of prairie dogs have eaten pretty much everything in sight.

"I'm ashamed of this part," Fillmore told visitors on a drought tour sponsored by the Colorado Association of Conservation Districts on Friday. "I thought it would rain someday."

But it didn't rain until a little bit of moisture fell Thursday night. By that time, Fillmore had sent most of his cattle to Oklahoma. He still has some stock in mountain meadows and is worrying about what to do with them in October when they have to be moved.

"I was still feeding (rather than having grass for the cattle to graze on) the 15th of July," he said. "We did two things all spring and summer: feed and worry. And that took up all day and all night."

His neighbor, J.D. Wright, has a stocker cattle operation nearby, meaning he buys calves in the fall, feeds them in through the winter and grazes them in the summer before taking them to sell. This year, there was so little grass he sold them early and figures he lost about $10 a head.

Now, after witnessing 11 lightning fires that burned thousands of acres in the area, Wright looks at a CRP field and sees a lot of fuel.

He agreed with Randy Loutzenhiser of Flagler, President of the state association of conservation districts, that the CRP land should be used periodically, maybe every third or fourth year, to keep it healthy and reduce the fuel load.

The CRP program is run by the Natural Resources Conservation Services, and this year the U.S. Department of Agriculture did make some allowances for grazing and haying on CRP land because of the drought. But there was a penalty involved, and Fillmore opted not to pay the price to move cattle onto his CRP land.

As the tour moved farther north in the Olney-Boone Conservation District, district conservationist Dave Miller of the NRCS pointed out a green field that had 4 to 4½ inches of rain this year, with grass about 8 inches tall.

Another field had a fire followed by rain in the same lightning storm, so the grass recovered somewhat. Yet another had a lightning fire with no rain, and the soil already is beginning to blow, Miller noted. "We're hoping somehow it will get some grass on it. The only other thing to keep it from blowing would be deep chiseling—and I mean 30 inches deep."

In some areas, even sagebrush looked brown and dead. "Those plants may have roots 10 feet deep," Miller said. "Still, there's no water for them."

But the worst sight on the tour was a field that has been farmed in a beans-milo rotation. The ground was tilled in the spring, exposing the roots.

"He planted a crop but there was no rain, no crop," Miller said—and all the silt with its nutrients has blown away, leaving a stretch of pale sand unbroken by one green shoot.

A few miles away, rancher Ed Hiza said 80 percent of the cattle in a 20-mile radius are gone. He expects to ship the rest of his cattle out within a month, saying "I can't feed them for nine more months, and that's the earliest I can see growing anything to feed them."

"We've endured a lot of hardship in this county, and this drought is just the nail in our coffin," he said. "Economically we find a lot of excuses about world markets and that, but the situation is that I could be forced off this ranch in the next few years."

ALLARD: DROUGHT MORE SERIOUS IN SOUTHERN COLORADO

(By Margie Wood)

U.S. Sen. Wayne Allard talked about drought at a standing-room-only meeting at the Greater Pueblo Chamber of Commerce Friday afternoon, assembling representatives of various state and federal agencies that can help suffering farmers and communities.

"This is a very critical situation, and it's more serious in Southern Colorado than in the northern part of the state," he said. "I've read that tree rings going back to the 1700s show no worse drought year than this one."

Allard said he has introduced legislation to provide direct aid to farmers and ranchers who have lost crops or livestock, and he is working to reform the tax code to help ranchers who have to liquidate their herds.

He noted that Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman has extended CRP grazing/haying permits through Nov. 30, and said, "That won't solve all the problems, but it has helped some people stay in business."

Allard's aide Cory Gardner said the Senator is working on a federal drought assistance bill that has now reached $3 billion.

Others who appeared with Allard were Gigi Dennis, former state senator from Pueblo West who now heads the regional Rural Development agency under the USDA; Lewis Frank of the Farm Service Agency; State Conservationist Allen Green; and representatives of the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Small Business Administration.

State Agriculture Commissioner Don Ament noted, "We can't seem to get out of these crises. I hate to be so negative, but we're here to help you survive."

Their audience ranged from John Stencil of the Rocky Mountain Farmers Union to a sheep rancher from Montrose to several Las Animas County ranchers.

"We're about four years into this drought in Las Animas County," said Gary Hill. "It is kinda funny that it didn't really get to be a drought until our city cousins couldn't water their lawns."

Stencil also spoke of the "quiet tragedy" of drought, and said it will take the state agricultural producers years to dig out.

Allard's staff conducted a similar meeting in Alamosa on Thursday.

Farmer Ray Wright, who heads the Rio Grande Water Conservation District and is a member of the Colorado Water Conservation Board, said the area is in a water deficit and an overdraft on the water supply will continue.

Alamosa businessman Leroy Martinez said part of the problem is that the traditional farming area has been expanded to the point where it can't be supplied with water.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. I don't know how much time I have to yield.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, are there other colleagues who want to speak on the Republican side who have not had a chance?

Mr. BURNS. In other words, those who oppose this amendment have not seen fit to come to the floor. That is the dilemma in which we find ourselves.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, is there a question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At this time, the question is who yields time? Twenty minutes remain in the control of Senator WELLSTONE. Twenty minutes remain to the opposition.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that until someone shows up to oppose this, Senator BURNS be allowed to allocate time for those in support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. The reason I say Senator BURNS, Senator BYRD is not here, and he has the greatest confidence in Senator BURNS to handle this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to the senior Senator from Wyoming for his statement?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. BURNS. I yield 2 minutes to the senior Senator from Wyoming, Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I spoke some about this yesterday on the floor in terms of it being part of the Interior bill. Certainly I support this amendment. This is the only way we have to relieve the kinds of economic disasters that have occurred in the West and over the country, as a matter of fact.

One of the issues is going to be how this is administered and how it is divided. Certainly, often you read about so much an acre for the crops and so on. I want to make the point again, this is also for livestock. This is for cattle, sheep, for the people who have not had grazing either on their own lands or on the lands that are leased. As we look at this, agriculture includes livestock. We need to make sure that is the case and that the distribution be made fairly throughout.

I appreciate very much the opportunity for us to actually do something. Hopefully, the expenditures, even though not a formal offset, will be offset actually by the reduction in costs in the farm bill, and this makes it a little more practical in terms of the finances.

I am supportive of the bill and hope we can move forward with the amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will just take 1 minute for an observation, if I may.

I say to the Senator from Wyoming, this does include livestock producers, and it is extremely important. In our State, we are talking about livestock producers, but we are also talking about wheatgrowers, soybeans, all of the damage to the crops.

I thank colleagues on both sides of the aisle for coming out here, Republicans and Democrats, West and Midwest, and also Senators from the east coast who have not sustained this kind of damage but are willing to lend their support, knowing full well that if they need help they will get help from the rest of us.

This is sort of a definition of community and helping people, and I am so pleased to see the strong bipartisan support. I really believe if we get a huge vote, we have an excellent chance of getting help to people.

As a Senator from Minnesota, I am so pleased with the way this discussion is going and I thank my colleagues from both sides of the aisle for their support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I strongly support this relief package for family farmers needing immediate disaster relief in order to stay on their land.

Let me cite a few numbers to underscore the extent of the problem in Missouri. Just yesterday, the USDA rated 58 percent of Missouri's pastureland in poor or very poor condition; 53 percent of Missouri's corn is in poor or very poor condition; 49 percent of Missouri's soybeans are in poor or very poor condition. Though any additional rainfall would be welcomed, it will only be of limited assistance.

Much of the damage I cited is on land that was hit last year by an army worm infestation of record proportion. Many farmers are facing 2 years of devastation because of these unprecedented natural disasters. This legislation would provide real relief for crop and livestock losses over the past 2 years. Much of the damage to the crops and pastureland is irreversible. Just as we help the victims of floods, wildfires, and other natural disasters, so we must come to the aid of farmers victimized by Mother Nature.

Several weeks ago, I expressed my disappointment to the administration for declaring that drought relief must be offset by cuts to programs funded in the new farm bill. Such cuts would undermine the farm bill's safety net that we put into place only a few months ago. This safety net is key to farmers, bankers, and others who must make long-term planning decisions.

Tampering with the safety net would send a message to our farmers that the farm bill is not something on which they can rely. In essence, the administration is proposing to rob Peter to pay Paul. This stance is particularly troubling when recent USDA reports show farm income decreasing by 23 percent this year. That is a $10.5 billion decrease in net farm income. It is the wrong position. It is wrong for our farmers, and it is wrong for our communities that rely on an agricultural economy.

Missouri ranks second nationally for the number of farms within a State. Agriculture is a large part of Missouri's economic lifeline. Historically, what is good for our farmers is good for America, and I urge my colleagues to support our farmers by providing disaster relief that keeps the safety net intact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask my colleague if I may have 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 13½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BURNS. That would be fine.

I say to my friend from Montana, I am trying to protect those who oppose, but I have no problem with yielding 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Montana, Senator BURNS, for cosponsoring this amendment with me. I deeply appreciate his work.

I point out this is truly a bipartisan effort to get agricultural and disaster assistance payments to farmers and ranchers across our country. This is not a partisan matter. This is a non-partisan matter. Drought does not know whether a farmer is a Republican, a Democrat, an Independent, or whatever political affiliation he or she may have. Drought hits everybody relentlessly. It is clear that these last several years it has hurt a lot of farmers.

This amendment we are attempting to pass will help farmers across our country.

I also thank the numerous agricultural organizations that have demonstrated their support for the amendment by making an endless number of phone calls, writing letters, and tirelessly raising the need for agricultural assistance in the Halls of the Congress.

Drought brings the producers to their knees, not only poor producers but the best producers. The crisis in our agricultural community has absolutely nothing to do with poor planning. I want to make that very clear. In fact, the farm bill has nothing to do with agricultural disaster assistance. The farm bill we passed has to do with farmers generally. If and when disaster hits, and if it is persistent over several years, then there is no choice but to fold up one's tent, leave, or cut back dramatically in a way that hurts not only the farmer but the rest of the community.

According to the New York Times on May 3, 2002—not too many months ago—let me quote an article in that newspaper:

In eastern Montana, more than a thousand wheat farmers have called it quits rather than try to coax another crop out of the ground that has received less rain over the last 12 months than many deserts get in a year.

We today have the opportunity to help mitigate these drought conditions and keep our producers on the land. After consecutive years, drought harms not only producers but entire communities. I would like to share the words of Montana farmer Dan Debuff to illustrate the impacts of drought on his community of Shawmut:

Our local John Deere dealer had sold seven combines last year at this time. This year he hasn't sold one. School enrollments are down 30 percent from 5 years ago and are still declining.

Remember, this drought has been going on for 4 or 5 years.

Gross revenues for the local grain elevator and fertilizer plant have declined 33 percent from 2 years ago and they have eliminated two full-time jobs. The large elevator and fertilizer plant have cut 9 full-time jobs out of a total of 25.

The letter goes on to describe the adverse effects the drought has not only on farmers individually but also on communities.

I have a chart which shows the effect of the drought now in America. It covers almost the entire West. If one draws a line a little bit west of the 100th meridian, almost all of America west of that line is in drought. The chart shows by color the worst conditions. The red and orange are the worst, and that is almost all of the western United States. In fact, it is almost half of the geographic United States of America.

Without our help, without passing natural disaster assistance today, we will change the future of rural America forever. A large percentage of our hard-working producers will lose their land, lose their homes, their jobs, and their way of life. They will not be purchasing clothes, seed, fertilizer, or equipment in their local stores. They are going to have to move, take their kids out of school, go some place else, and try to make a go of it.

We now have the opportunity to do something about that. A vote for this amendment is a vote for America's family farmers and ranchers to provide us with a safe domestic food supply. A vote for this amendment is a vote for the future of rural America. A vote for this amendment is a vote for fulfilling our responsibility as a country to protect our citizens from natural disaster.

Rural America is resilient. Like them, I am not going to give up. We are going to keep trying until we get the disaster assistance we need. We give disaster assistance to people in the country for earthquakes, for floods, and for hurricanes. It only makes sense that we should give disaster assistance for our farmers.

I voted for disaster assistance for Americans for flood insurance, for hurricanes, and for earthquake disasters. I voted for those because it was the right thing to do, the American thing to do. It is also the American thing to do to help our farmers and ranchers.

I also ask the President to reconsider. I support the President many times and do not support him other times. This is one time I am asking the President to reconsider his opposition because our American farmers need all of America to help give them the assistance they need.

I very much thank the Chair and thank my colleague from Montana and thank the Parliamentarian. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I would like to express my support for an amendment that is being offered by the distinguished majority leader. I am a cosponsor of this amendment, originally proposed as a bill by Senator BAUCUS which I also cosponsored. It now provides much needed assistance to our Nation's farmers.

While farmers across the country have faced tremendous losses during the past 2 years, those in my home State of Michigan have been among those who have suffered the most. Dramatic shifts in weather conditions throughout the growing season have devastated crops across the State. Some farmers faced early warm temperatures followed by freezing conditions while others saw torrential rains early in the growing season followed by long droughts; still others have faced drought conditions at the beginning of the crop year and heavy rains at harvest time.

These conditions have devastated many of Michigan's prime crops. This year, cherry farmers in Michigan lost upwards of 90 percent of their crops, a level that threatens to devastate Michigan and the Nation's cherry industry give that Michigan produces over 70 percent of the tart cherries in the Nation. Additionally, 80 percent of Michigan's apple farmers have lost upwards of 40 percent of their crop.

Earlier this year, I had the opportunity to visit with cherry growers in Michigan and listen to them as they told me how this year's crop losses were the worst on record. In addition, approximately 25 percent of apple growers in Michigan and across the Nation are in danger of going out of business in the next 2 years, and in Michigan that means that our cherry, peach, and asparagus crops, which are often grown on the same orchards, will be greatly decreased.

This year, USDA Secretary Ann Veneman recognized the atypical weather conditions that affected Michigan by designating 50 of the State's counties as disaster areas. Making matters worse, all of these counties were similarly designated last year, when Secretary Veneman designated 82 of Michigan's 83 counties as official disaster areas. While Michigan's farmers are some of the most innovative in the Nation, 2 years of statewide crop failure have threatened the continued viability of agriculture in Michigan.

No one, least of all America's farmers, likes the fact that emergency agricultural supplementals have seemingly become routine. However, we must provide this assistance for without it many of our Nation's farmers will cease to be able to continue farming. I thank the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Montana for their efforts in drafting, supporting, and helping to pass this amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I strongly support this amendment to provide disaster assistance for our Nation's farmers and ranchers. Over the last several years, Congress has acted responsibly to provide help to those producers whose operations have been adversely affected by bad weather. I see no reason why this year should be different. This situation truly exemplifies an emergency in every sense of the word, and should not force us to deplete the long-term resources provided by this year's farm bill in order to meet these short-term needs.

Already, this has been a devastating crop year for producers across the country. In the most recent assessment issued by the National Weather Service, nearly every State west of the Missouri River faces significant crop losses as a result of severe to exceptional drought conditions. A second region of the Eastern United States which includes most States in a block from Georgia northward to Maine and westward to Ohio is facing a similar situation. For many States, particularly in the West, this is only the latest in a series of droughts.

We have only begun to assess the magnitude of this year's disaster for agricultural producers. From late July, press reports cite losses in the Plains States of $822 million in South Dakota, $687 million in Nebraska, and $267 million in Minnesota from both drought and flooding. With little appreciable rain during August in most drought-stricken regions, it is likely that losses have increased since those estimates were made. We have serious drought in southwest Iowa, and also experienced uncompensated 2001 losses in Iowa, mostly from prevented plantings.

Other regions have also been hit. In Michigan, harsh spring weather caused USDA to declare 50 counties agricultural disaster areas, particularly affecting the cherry and grape crops. Hordes of grasshoppers are eating their way through pastures and fields in the Rocky Mountain West, including Colorado and Idaho. Rampant disease threatens Georgia and North Carolina crops. In mid-August, Maryland's Governor sought a disaster designation for all but two counties in his State.

As a result of field surveys in late July, USDA is now predicting the smallest U.S. corn crop since 1995, at less than 9 billion bushels, and the smallest wheat crop since 1972, driven both by poor yields and reduced acreage. Although some farmers will benefit from the increased prices, those farmers with little or no crop to harvest will not. Western cattle producers, who have seen their pastures burn up in the unrelenting heat, face a choice of either buying hay on the market or selling their animals into a depressed market. There are currently no programs to assist these producers.

It is true that many row crop farmers have crop insurance policies, which will offer them some relief, but the gravity of this situation demands further Federal action. These producers are facing the loss of their crops in the wake of several years of low commodity prices, thus pushing them deeper into a financial hole.

With higher crop prices now projected by USDA for the 2002 crop year, it is clear that farm program spending will be lower than was originally predicted by the Congressional Budget Office. It was estimated recently by CBO that the difference could amount to $5.6 billion in LDP's and countercyclical payments that will not now be made compared to the August baseline. That difference would exceed $6 billion when compared to earlier estimates of the farm bill's cost.

Floods and drought have been particularly hard this year not only on producers' bottom lines, but also on our soil, water, and wildlife resources. Unfortunately, the money needed to take care of our resources under the Emergency Watershed Protection Program wasn't included in this package. I intend to pursue adding the money needed for drought and flood relief through this program in conference, and hope that we will be able to address these needs in the final conference report.

I fear that unwillingness to act on this amendment could push many farmers to the brink of failure, and hasten the erosion of rural communities and small towns. If we truly want to assure economic security to our nation, then we must start with its backbone, our farm families and the rural economy they support.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the text of the letter sent to the Senate leadership yesterday by Agriculture Secretary Veneman, reiterating the President's opposition to disaster relief legislation for which the cost is not offset by cuts in the 2002 farm bill. I am disappointed that the letter was sent. I hope that we will be able to bring the White House and the House of Representatives around to the realization that assistance is critically needed and that it cannot be funded by taking assistance out of the farm bill and away from other producers.

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 2002.

Hon. THOMAS DASCHLE,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

Hon. TRENT LOTT,
Minority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS DASCHLE AND LOTT: We appreciate your efforts to help farmers and ranchers who are suffering as a result of the 2002 drought. As you know, the Administration continues to take all action allowable under current law to assist struggling farmers and ranchers. This includes expediting emergency declarations and making emergency loans available to producers, the recent release of CCC-owned milk powder in order to provide a low cost feed supplement for cow and calf operations, and the opening of all CRP lands nationwide for haying and grazing. The President has consistently stated his support for additional drought relief provided it does not increase the deficit.

The Congress has already provided the tools for drought relief for crop farmers through the heavily subsidized Federal Crop Insurance Program. The crop insurance subsidy was increased dramatically in 2000 to avoid the need for disaster payments. The vast majority of the crop acreage in the drought regions is covered by crop insurance. Over seventy percent of the acreage in the U.S. is covered and over eighty percent in South Dakota. Our goal should be to maximize participation in this program. Additionally, we recognize that ranchers and livestock producers who have been severely impacted by this drought do not benefit from the same risk management tools available to other farmers.

The recently enacted Farm Bill provides $180 billion, an increase of $82 billion above the baseline. This $180 billion can accommodate funding for emergencies, economic assistance, rural development, and other purposes. One of the greatest benefits of the Farm Bill is that it ensures farmers have the resources they need. On May 24, Senator Daschle defended the farm bill spending levels, stating "we're getting rid of those ad hoc disaster payment approaches". The farm bill should break the bad fiscal habit of needing to pass emergency agriculture spending bills including drought, flood, or other supplemental payments that make it difficult for Congress to live within its budget.

We support providing immediate assistance to those who don't have access to risk management tools, encouraging greater participation in the crop insurance program and providing relief within the resources of the current farm bill. If legislation consistent with this approach were to be presented to the President, we would advise his support.

In the Senate, an amendment has been offered to the Interior Appropriations bill that would reestablish emergency payment programs for farmers and ranchers similar to those used for the 2000 crop year. We understand the cost of this amendment is likely to approach $6 billion.

The Administration strongly opposes this amendment and any agriculture spending in excess of the $180 billion in spending provided earlier this year. This proposal would add $6 billion on top of the already generous Farm Bill only a few months after the bill was enacted. This is unacceptable. The needs for the current drought must be met within the additional resources provided for in the Farm Bill.

We hope this information gives you the guidance you need in order to consider a prudent and fiscally responsible drought assistance package. I look forward to working closely with you through this process.

Sincerely,

ANN M. VENEMAN.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to state my reasons for voting for the amendment offered to provide $5.9 billion in emergency relief to farmers due to flooding, drought and other natural disasters because I am concerned that numerous farmers across the United States and Pennsylvania may lose their livelihoods.

The Pennsylvania agricultural community has been particularly hard hit by natural disasters in recent years. On September 3, 2002, Pennsylvania Governor Mark Schweiker requested a Natural Disaster Determination from the United States Department of Agriculture on behalf of 54 of Pennsylvania's 67 counties that are suffering due to this drought. These counties have been and continue to be under a drought warning or drought emergency. Due to these adverse weather conditions, Pennsylvania farmers have and will experience significant crop damage resulting in reduced harvests. The losses to these counties are projected at over $321 million in Pennsylvania. I am informed that situations similar to this are occurring across the United States. The funding in this amendment will provide $5.9 billion in relief for farmers for the 2001 and 2002 crop years.

During consideration of the 2002 farm bill, I opposed the overwhelming costs that came as a result of the House and Senate Conference, an increase of $10 billion over the levels passed by the Senate and the House. However, funds are now warranted to combat continued natural disasters that have become an acute problem for farmers in Pennsylvania and across the Nation.

The loss of crops that have come with these natural disasters have left grain farmers with a low yield. This low yield not only effects farmers producing grain but those who must use grain and account for the increased cost of production. The rising costs of grain to dairy farmers has created an intolerable situation where the costs of producing are increasing without the already low price of milk rising at a corresponding level. The addition of these increased costs to production is too much to be shouldered by the hardworking farmers of Pennsylvania and America.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to say a few words about the proposed drought relief package that I have cosponsored and to urge my colleagues to throw their full support behind this very important measure. Utah is in its fourth consecutive year of drought, and our farmers and ranchers have been hit particularly hard this season. If this body does not act now to alleviate some of the damage wreaked by this latest year of drought, many more farmers and ranchers will be forced to sell off their assets completely, as some have already done.

At this time, adequate feed and forage is simply not available for livestock producers in Utah. About 70 percent of Utah agriculture is in the livestock industry, and ranchers rely heavily on public grazing. However, in drought years many ranchers are kicked off public lands by the BLM and Forest Service in an effort to preserve the existing forage. Let me provide an example of how our ranchers have been affected by the drought and resulting expulsion from public grazing. Alarik Myrin is a rancher who I know from Duchesne County, Utah. Alarik has 600 head of cattle and each year relies on public lands to provide 500 of them with forage. Like many others in my state, he was forced off public lands and was not able to graze those 500 head even one day this year. This was a devastating blow in a drought year, because the meager harvest in the West has created a dramatic shortage of feed. While Alarik did receive a small alfalfa harvest on his private land, he was still forced to sell off 300 of his breeding cows along with their calves just to cut his losses. It is important to understand that, like most ranchers, Alarik Myrin makes his living from selling calves. Being forced to liquidate his producing cows without a profit was, in Mr. Myrin's words, like "selling the factory," and he is now left without the resources to purchase a new herd for the next season.

In a normal rainfall year, adequate runoff from Utah's snowpack would help to offset drought conditions. However, this year, the lack of snowpack has combined with almost no precipitation and Utah's largest cricket infestation ever documented to make for an extremely difficult year for agriculture.

Utah has some of the toughest ranchers I know but some have literally been brought to tears by the hardships they are facing this year. Some of these families have been farming and ranching since before Utah was a state, and they know how to succeed in difficult conditions. But a fourth year of drought of this severity is too much to overcome.

One more example of the extreme nature of this year's drought is brought to light at the Salina Cattle Auction in Utah. Normally, this auction sees 500 head sold in the entire month of July. This year, however, the auction saw an average of 2,700 head sold per week in July. Ranchers are liquidating their cows often at less than half the average price. For too many, the result is complete bankruptcy.

I have gone into some detail regarding the difficulties of Utah livestock producers, but crop losses for our farmers have been just as severe. For instance, much of Utah fruit crop this year has been completely ruined. The lack of precipitation and ground water has resulted in unseasonable frosts that have wiped out many of our orchards. Across the board, we are losing key elements of our agriculture sector in the West. Mr. President, if we want to be a nation that feeds itself, we must take action to allow our producers to survive this long drought and live to produce next season.

I urge my colleagues to recognize the importance of this drought relief package. I believe it will help to rebuild an agriculture industry that is in dire need of assistance. It will take several years to recover for many of our producers, but this package will help rebuild herds and allow many farmers and ranchers to continue to provide our nation with the invaluable resources we rely on. Again, I urge my colleagues to support farmers and ranchers across the country by voting in favor of this measure.

I thank the Chair.

CROP DISASTER RELIEF

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I would like to recognize Mr. DASCHLE for his efforts and concern for the farmers, growers, and ranchers of this nation. His leadership on providing financial assistance to these farmers who have been stricken by the wrath of Mother Nature is to be commended.

Mr. President, my colleague from New York, Senator SCHUMER, and I would like to engage Senator DASCHLE in a colloquy.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank my colleague for her kind remarks, and would be happy to engage in a colloquy with the Senators from New York State.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, spring freezes, frosts, and excessive rains have caused severe and permanent damage to specialty crops, such as apples, peaches, pears, grapes (including labrusca grapes), strawberries, stone fruits, onions and cherries in New York State. This damage will not only cause a major financial hardship for the farms, but as my friend from South Dakota has already mentioned, the impact will spread throughout the economy of rural communities that depend so heavily on the prosperity of their farms.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, these weather conditions have wreaked havoc on an industry vital to New York State. As their trees now stand, green leaves and no fruit, it is feared that a large percentage of these fruit farmers will be forced out of business. It is crucial that these farmers receive assistance along with the farmers and ranchers of the rest of the country who have suffered the devastating effects of drought.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, this season's farm losses only continue a string of bad luck during the past few years. Last year, New York grape farmers suffered losses of approximately $7 million due to poor fruit set. This year, the losses are expected to be even greater—over $10 million lost because of adverse weather conditions.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, this year has been the worst year in memory for many specialty crop farmers. In New York's Hudson Valley region, losses on specialty fruit crops total $65 million for 2002 alone. For the communities and the fruit growers in the region, crop disaster relief is much needed to sustain our farms through this difficult time.

Mr. DASCHLE. I appreciate the remarks of the Senators of New York, and assure them that we intend for specialty crop producers, including producers of the crops mentioned by my colleague from New York, to receive disaster assistance under this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the time has actually expired, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just under 6 minutes remain for the opponents.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask the leader of the Senate if I may speak for 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I am happy to yield time from the leader's allocation, if we are out of time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will maybe not even take that long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the effects of a natural disaster that lingers across most of the West—drought. There is not a segment of the New Mexico population that will not be touched in some way, some form, or fashion by drought this year.

People in other parts of the country have turned on their television sets over the past few weeks and have seen the blazes of catastrophic wildfires that are again devastating the western United States. This may be the only effect of the drought that many are aware of. Let me tell you, the devastation is even more profound.

Ranchers, including ranchers on the Navajo Nation, are being forced to sell off livestock because they can't find enough water for them and can't afford the significant feed costs.

Other agricultural businesses are being forced to shut their doors because the agriculture sector as a whole is hurting. But this is not just a problem for the agricultural community.

Most of the national forests in New Mexico were closed to the public. This resulted in a decrease in tourism.

Let me mention a couple of specific examples. First of all, there is a small railroad, the historic Cumbres and Toltec Railroad, that takes people through a very beautiful part of the State. The railroad contributes to the tourism and economic stability of a very poor part of the State. That railroad was forced to close because it was so close to the national forest system lands that the fear that the railroad might spark and start a wildfire is a threat too imminent to risk.

A second example is the river rafting operations that have been forced to cease operations because of the drought conditions and lack of river flows.

Municipal and private wells are running dry. In the City of Santa Fe, emergency wells for municipal water use are needed because Santa Fe's water storage is at 18 percent capacity, the spring runoff is only at 2 percent, and current wells are pumping 24 hours a day.

The City of Santa Fe is at a Stage 3 water shortage emergency, which allows outdoor watering once a week, but the City Council is considering going to Stage 4, which would eliminate all outdoor watering. To put this in perspective, the last substantial rain for the area was in late January.

Santa Fe is only one of the numerous municipalities that have imposed restrictions on water use. These restrictions are enforced by "water police" and that violators face steep fines ranging from $20 for a first offense to $200 for a fourth offense and stay at $200 for each repeat violation.

While most livestock sales generally take place on the reservation during September and October, this year emergency sales were being held almost every weekend during July and August. Hundreds of cattle, horses and sheep have already died as a result of the severe drought conditions.

The article goes on to describe the severity of the conditions. "Stock ponds have gone dry, fish have died in evaporating lakes, and grass has disappeared. Sand blows across reservation roads, and the stiff bodies of dead cattle litter the land."

The seriousness of the water situation in New Mexico becomes more acute every single day. I reiterate that every single New Mexican will feel the impact of this drought in one way or another, whether they are selling off the essence of their livelihood—livestock, or losing daily revenues in other small businesses, or whether they are actually having to refrain from watering their own lawns and washing their cars, the drought and its devastation is very real.

There is a need out west and I stand ready to do what I can. It will be a monumental and expensive challenge, but one we cannot avoid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I know we are about to vote. I will take whatever time I require from my leader time to make a couple of closing remarks with regard to this amendment.

I appreciate very much the great work done by so many of our colleagues over the course of the last several months on this issue. The Senator from Montana, Mr. BAUCUS, and the other Senator from Montana, Mr. BURNS, and my colleague from South Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON, and so many of our colleagues who have worked diligently to make the case to report to this body the gravity of the situation we now face, all deserve commendation.

As I traveled through South Dakota in August during my unscheduled driving, the comment I got most from people in every situation—people on Main Street, people in government, people on farms and ranches—was simply this: Help us with the drought. If you want to deal with the economy, help us solve this problem now.

The situation could not be any more grave than it is in the western part of my State. Statistically, this situation is the worst it has been in some counties since 1936. So, there is no other option than for us to answer the call made to us all as we traveled our States last month: Help us with the drought. Provide the assistance. Do what is right. Recognize that as we have dealt with crises and natural disasters in the past, we must now do the same. That is what this amendment does.

We would respond with generosity and we would respond with commitment if there was a hurricane. We would respond with generosity if there was a flood. We would respond with generosity if there was an earthquake. Let us respond with the same commitment and resolve in this drought as we would with any other natural disaster. That is what this amendment does.

We have actually saved a great deal of money because prices are higher than projected when the farm bill passed. We don't need an offset. We simply know these resources can be rededicated to rural America without the commitment of an offset per se.

This is an emergency. We must send a clear message that, without this help, we will lose many of those leaders in the agricultural community throughout our country that we rely on every day.

So I urge my colleagues to do the right thing and recognize the urgency of the need for this emergency disaster assistance, to support it on an overwhelmingly bipartisan basis this morning and send a clear message that help is on the way.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I understand there are only 58 seconds remaining on the side of the opposition. I still want to protect their right to speak for some time before the vote, and we are now passed the time limit now. If the Senators who want to speak can be allowed at least 5 minutes, then we will go immediately to the vote.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I object to an extension. We have Condoleezza Rice and George Tenet waiting for a classified briefing. Our time is up. People have had all morning to speak.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, there are two Senators who have sought recognition prior to the time we vote. I ask unanimous consent that Senator GRAMM of Texas and Senator CONRAD of North Dakota both be given 2 minutes prior to the vote and that the vote occur immediately thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, those who are in opposition to providing disaster assistance to our Nation's farmers and ranchers who have been hit by disaster have said it will cost money. Of course, that is true. It will cost money, over $5 billion, to provide disaster assistance. It is something we have always done. It is something we should do now.

More than that, the Congressional Budget Office informed me yesterday that there will be savings from the farm bill of $5.6 billion. Let me repeat that: The CBO informed me in a letter yesterday there will be $5.6 billion of savings from the farm bill. That is not a direct offset for this disaster assistance. I urge my colleagues to keep in mind when we are looking at overall spending that it will be about a wash.

There are savings from the farm bill because production is down. That means prices are higher than anticipated, meaning costs under the farm bill will be less by $5.6 billion. That approximately pays for the disaster package.

If anyone wonders whether it is really needed, I urge them to visit southwestern North Dakota, which has become like a moonscape. In running a food bank in northern South Dakota, a Presbyterian minister reported that the wives of ranchers are coming in asking for food and they are very concerned that their husbands not find out because they are proud. They do not want public assistance, but they desperately need it.

Now is the time. Please help. We always have in the past.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I listened carefully to the remarks, but the Senator did not say the Congressional Budget Office told you that a waiver is not necessary for this bill in that it will require a budget waiver or it will fall. Is that not correct?

Mr. CONRAD. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, we have listened as over and over again our Budget Committee chairman, the majority leader, and others have talked about deficits and the alarm we have for rising deficits. Yet today we are in the process of adding $6 billion to those deficits. We have already passed a farm bill that cost a record amount—over $80 billion over 10 years—but that is not enough. We are now being asked to add roughly another $6 billion to that deficit.

We have to come to a recognition that deficits do not come from heaven. Deficits do not occur because God makes some decision. Deficits occur because we make decisions.

We have a budget process. The chairman of the Budget Committee is not willing to defend it, but we have it. We have a budget point of order that requires 60 votes for the Congress to go on record as saying we are willing to throw fiscal restraint out the door, that we are willing to add $6 billion to a deficit which is swelling daily.

I hope, first, that we sustain the budget point of order I will raise. But I hope those who are going to vote to waive this budget point of order and who will give us long lectures on many subjects will not include growing deficits among those subjects.

I think ultimately we have to start making decisions. We have to make a choice: Do we want these deficits to go ever higher or are we willing to make a stand now? I am not saying there are not people who need help. I think we can focus a narrower bill which is paid for. I think a source of paying for it can be some of the over $80 billion in the farm bill.

Mr. President, I raise a point of order under section 306 of the Congressional Budget Act against the pending amendment, No. 4481, because it contains matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Senate Budget Committee. That matter is, basically, setting aside the budget process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I move to waive the relevant portion of the Budget Act, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. GREGG), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. BOB SMITH) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 79, nays 16, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 79, the nays are 16. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to and the point of order falls.

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote and move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator ENZI be recognized to offer a second-degree amendment to the Byrd amendment, that he have up to 3 minutes to discuss his amendment, and that following the use or yielding back of his time, the amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I would further notify Senators that following Senator ENZI, Senator CRAIG is expected to offer an amendment, which would be a second-degree amendment—I have spoken to the managers of the bill; I have spoken to Senators DODD and CRAIG—and that following the offering of the amendment by the Senator from Idaho, he would speak for a period of time but not until 12:30, and that there would be sufficient time for that amendment to be set aside temporarily and Senator DODD be recognized to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Daschle amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4481), as modified, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. Madam President, reserving the right to object—and I will not object—I need a clarification, though, how that could be disposed of. Then would the Senator from Connecticut lay his amendment aside after it being offered to the main bill or to the underlying bill?

Mr. REID. The purpose of this is to have the Craig amendment laid down. As most know, we are trying to work out an agreement on this very contentious issue dealing with fire suppression. And staff is trying to work out a unanimous consent request that we could agree to later today. But until that happens, Senator CRAIG's amendment would be the matter next before the Senate. But he has agreed to temporarily lay that aside to allow the Senator from Connecticut to offer an amendment. And that is not in the form of a unanimous consent request; it is just for the information of Senators.

Mr. BURNS. I withdraw my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

AMENDMENT NO. 4517 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4480

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I call up amendment No. 4517.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ENZI], for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. HAGEL, proposes an amendment numbered 4517 to amendment No. 4480.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide offsets through payment limitations)

At the end of the amendment, add the following:

SEC. 3. PAYMENT LIMITATIONS.

Section 1001 of the Food Security of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1308) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by striking “$40,000” each place it appears and inserting “$17,500”;

(2) in subsection (c), by striking “$65,000” each place it appears and inserting “$32,500”; and

(3) by striking subsection (d) and inserting the following:

“(d) LIMITATIONS ON MARKETING LOAN GAINS, LOAN DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS, AND COMMODITY CERTIFICATE TRANSACTIONS.—

“(1) LOAN COMMODITIES.—The total amount of the following gains and payments that a person may receive during any crop year may not exceed $90,000:

“(A)(i) Any gain realized by a producer from repaying a marketing assistance loan for 1 or more loan commodities under subtitle B of title I of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (7 U.S.C. 7931 et seq.) at a lower level than the original loan rate established for the loan commodity under that subtitle.

“(ii) In the case of settlement of a marketing assistance loan for 1 or more loan commodities under that subtitle by forfeiture, the amount by which the loan amount exceeds the repayment amount for the loan if the loan had been settled by repayment instead of forfeiture.

“(B) Any loan deficiency payments received for 1 or more loan commodities under that subtitle.

“(C) Any gain realized from the use of a commodity certificate issued by the Commodity Credit Corporation for 1 or more loan commodities, as determined by the Secretary, including the use of a certificate for the settlement of a marketing assistance loan made under that subtitle.

“(2) OTHER COMMODITIES.—The total amount of the following gains and payments that a person may receive during any crop year may not exceed $90,000:

“(A)(i) Any gain realized by a producer from repaying a marketing assistance loan for peanuts, wool, mohair, or honey under subtitle B or C of title I of the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 (7 U.S.C. 7931 et seq.) at a lower level than the original loan rate established for the commodity under those subtitles.

“(ii) In the case of settlement of a marketing assistance loan for peanuts, wool, mohair, or honey under those subtitles by forfeiture, the amount by which the loan amount exceeds the repayment amount for the loan if the loan had been settled by repayment instead of forfeiture.

“(B) Any loan deficiency payments received for peanuts, wool, mohair, and honey under those subtitles.

“(C) Any gain realized from the use of a commodity certificate issued by the Commodity Credit Corporation for peanuts, wool, mohair, and honey, as determined by the Secretary, including the use of a certificate for the settlement of a marketing assistance loan made under those subtitles.

“(f) SINGLE FARMING OPERATION.—Notwithstanding subsections (b) through (e), if an individual participates only in a single farming operation and receives, directly or indirectly, any payment or gain covered by this section through the operation, the total amount of payments or gains (as applicable) covered by this section that the individual may receive during any crop year may not exceed twice the dollar amount prescribed in this section.”.

AMENDMENT NO. 4517, WITHDRAWN

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, this is a sorely needed offset for sorely needed assistance. I wholeheartedly agree with the need for the emergency agricultural assistance we just passed. It is an emergency in Wyoming and most of the United States. Another pending emergency is the increase in our national deficit. We have a readily available and appropriate offset for at least part of the expenditure. I am suggesting we use it.

By needing emergency agricultural assistance today—we have tacitly admitted that by passing Senator DASCHLE's amendment—we showed that we needed to add to the farm bill. So it has already been opened.

This is an emergency, which is why I cosponsored the emergency amendment. However, this body already wanted payment limitations. We voted on February 7 of this year, by 61 to 33, to include payment limitations in the farm bill. This isn't an issue of chopping programs to provide agricultural emergency money when we don't do that for any other emergency. This is an issue of providing agriculture with emergency money and helping pay for it with something on which this body has already voted.

There has been some discussion this morning to the effect that the lack of crops will lead to additional money anyway. The President has said he supports drought relief that doesn't increase the national deficit. We voted for agricultural assistance today. We should make every effort to keep it alive, and keep it in the bill until it is sent to the President, by showing our good will and intention to do what we can today to keep this desperately needed assistance from increasing the deficit.

It is ridiculous to consider that this body will reject an amendment that provides an offset for an appropriations bill while entertaining a host of amendments that increase spending. The arcane rule seems almost slanted to increased spending.

However, I recognize the importance of rule XVI. I really think this need for drought assistance, for an offset so that we aren't increasing the national spending, is entirely critical. But I will withdraw my amendment based on the Parliamentarian's ruling that rule XVI prohibits offering amendments containing general legislation on appropriations bills. I remain committed to funding a bill in which we offer my amendment that will offset the drought spending.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 4518 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4480

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Madam President, I send a second-degree amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG], for himself and Mr. DOMENICI, proposes an amendment numbered 4518:

(Purpose: To reduce hazardous fuels on our national forests, and for other purposes)

At the appropriate place in the amendment, add the following—

SEC. . EMERGENCY HAZARDOUS FUELS REDUCTION PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (c) and notwithstanding the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall conduct immediately and to completion, projects consistent with the Implementation Plan for the 10-year Comprehensive Strategy for a Collaborative Approach for Reducing Wildland Fire Risks to Communities and the Environment, May 2002 developed pursuant to the Conference Report to the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2001 (House Report 106-646) to reduce hazardous fuels within any areas of federal land under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior that are outside of Congressionally designated Wilderness Areas and that the appropriate Secretary determines qualifies as a fire risk condition class three area. Any project carried out under this section shall be consistent with the applicable forest plan, resource management plan, or other applicable agency plans.

(b) PRIORITY.—In implementing projects under this section, the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall give highest priority to—

- (1) wildland urban interface areas;
- (2) municipal watersheds;
- (3) forested or rangeland areas affected by disease, insect activity, or wind throw, or
- (4) areas susceptible to a reburn.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—In implementing this section, the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall treat an aggregate area of not more than 10 million acres of federal land, maintain not less than 10 of the largest trees per acre in any treatment area authorized under this section. The Secretaries shall construct no new, permanent roads in RARE II Roadless Areas and shall rehabilitate any temporary access or skid trails.

(d) PROCESS.—The Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior shall jointly develop—

(1) notwithstanding the Federal Advisory Committee Act, a collaborative process with interested parties consistent with the Implementation Plan described in subsection (a) for the selection of projects carried out under this section consistent with subsection (b); and

(2) in cooperation with the Secretary of Commerce, expedited consultation procedures for threatened or endangered species.

(e) ADMINISTRATIVE PROCESS.—

(1) REVIEW.—Projects conducted under this section shall not be subject to—

(A) administrative review by the Department of the Interior Office of Hearings and Appeals; or

(B) the Forest Service appeals process and regulations.

(2) REGULATIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior, as appropriate, may promulgate such regulations as are necessary to implement this section.

(f) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—

(1) PROCESS REVIEW.—The processes developed under subsection (d) shall not be subject to judicial review.

(2) REVIEW OF PROJECTS.—Judicial review of a project implemented under this section shall—

(A) be filed in the Federal District Court for which the Federal lands are located within 7 days after legal notice of the decision to conduct a project under this section is made to the public in a manner as determined by the appropriate Secretary;

(B) be completed not later than 360 days from the date such request for review is filed with the appropriate court unless the District Court determines that a longer time is needed to satisfy the Constitution;

(C) not provide for the issuance of a temporary restraining order or a preliminary injunction; and

(D) be limited to a determination as to whether the selection of the project, based on a review of the record, was arbitrary and capricious.

(g) RELATION TO OTHER LAWS.—The authorities provided to the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior in this section are in addition to the authorities provided in any other provision of law, including section 706 of Public Law 107-206 with respect to Beaver Park Area and the Norbeck Wildlife Preserve within the Black Hills National Forest.

SEC. . QUINCY LIBRARY INITIATIVE.

(a) Congress reaffirms its original intent that the Herger-Feinstein Quincy Library Group Forest Recovery Act of 1998 be implemented. Congress finds that delays and obstacles to implementation of the Act have occurred as a result of the Sierra Nevada Forest Plan Amendment decision January 2001.

(b) Congress hereby extends the expiration of the Act by five years.

Mr. CRAIG. Madam President, I have just sent to the desk a second-degree amendment in my name and that of the Senator from New Mexico, Mr. DOMENICI, and a good number of other Western Senators who have grown extremely concerned about the fire situation in the Western States primarily, and especially the Great Basin States, where we have seen now wildfires raging since mid-June—some 66.5 million acres, 2,300 homes up in smoke, 28 lives lost, phenomenal wildlife habitat and watershed destroyed. Clearly, it is a time when we need positive action to resolve this issue.

Others have spoken to it. Our President, about 3 weeks ago, while in Oregon, spoke very clearly to the need for flexibility within forest policy in this country to deal with the fuel-loaded forests of our Nation, to thin them and to clean them, to restore their health, and to do so in an environmentally sound way.

The amendment we offer today—while we still work with my colleagues from Oregon and California and other States that have the same problem, but we are working with a variety of interest groups at this moment to see if we can resolve this in permanent policy—is an expedited process that does not lock the courthouse door, that recognizes the validity of expression and public participation to deal with this issue.

We have reached out to incorporate what the Western Governors proposed, along with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, some months ago, to be a collaborative process that brings all of the parties together on a State-by-State basis to recognize these lands and to designate them for the purpose of cleaning up.

We have limited this approach to no more than 10 million acres. There are over 33 million acres in the class 3 status, which means they are severely bug-ridden, dead, dying, fuel-loaded forests. Even with that number, we have chosen to be limited, to target the most severe, and to deal with it directly.

We also are dealing with the wildland-urban interface, where these homes now in the Western States are, of which we have lost over 2,300 as of today. We are also dealing with urban watersheds. Many of the watersheds that yield the valuable water to the growing urban populations of the West have been devastated by fire this year or are in conditions where they are extremely fire prone. We have also set up a variety of other prescriptions as to how these lands would be dealt with.

I will talk no more in detail about it. My colleague from New Mexico is here to speak about it. We are still working with our other colleagues in the West and around the country to see if we can build a bipartisan approach toward resolving this issue.

The President, the Deputy Secretary of Agriculture, and the Chief are directly involved with us at this moment to see if we can bind together at least a policy that begins to step us forward into resolving what, in my opinion, is now a critical, if not a crisis, status in our U.S. forested lands.

We have now lost an unprecedented number of acres. We are still burning in the States of California and in other States. That could well go on for another month before the wet season hits. We could lose over 7.5 million acres this year, comparable to what we lost last year.

That is the intent of this amendment—to bring parties of interest together to resolve this, to bring Western States together to see if we can find a course of action and the shaping of a public policy that begins to return our great forests to a state of environmental health, watershed quality, and wildlife habitat of the kind we would expect.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I thank Senator CRAIG. It is a privilege to work with him on this entire matter. He is the chief sponsor, and I am here to help him. I started working on it very late compared to Senator CRAIG. When I say "it," I mean this issue, the terrible status of the American forests.

Everyone in this Chamber, be they staffer or Senator, Democrat or Republican, has, over the last 3½ months, looked at their television in absolute awe, for they have seen hundreds of thousands of what seemed from a distance to be beautiful American forests that ought to be enjoyed by millions of people, owned by all Americans, burning up. Sometimes they move a little bit out of the forest and catch a house on fire. If they are burning in California, they burn a house, almost every time. We have fires in my State of New Mexico where they burn and no houses are affected, but the beautiful forest is burning to the ground.

You heard the numbers. It is absolutely incredible. What we are told is that there are, within this great forest, 33 million acres that, if you went and looked at it, they are not so beautiful, they are not so great.

If you drive through them for a few miles, you will probably ask the person you are riding with: Why are those trees still there? They may be stark, burned trees just standing straight up, black or dark brown from having been burned, but still standing up. If there is a big tree in the same forest—you may see a huge amount of acreage that has blown over. Nature knocked them over so they are not the beautiful forest that you think it is from a distance.

Or if you go to two or three forests, you will also find that there are in-fectured forests with various kinds of bugs, to use a common word—insects that have eaten a forest away and what happens? It just stands. These dry, wooden trees just stand. Underneath all of this, or alongside of it all, are small trees that have fallen down, leaves that have piled up. In a nutshell, the forest is unattended and left, obviously, for years, with nobody doing what we all did many years ago. Nobody is cleaning it up; nobody is thinning it.

So we have acreage in America where there are so many trees growing side by side that we were shown yesterday by one of our colleagues, who is helping with this bill, two pieces—a cut across a tree about this thick, about 14, 15 inches in diameter, and another one was this big, about 4½, 5 inches in diameter. But guess what. They can tell how old each one is. The little one is twice as old as the bigger one because of poor growing conditions, because they were all squashed up together, like you see American forests today. Instead of being separated, where the Sun can go down through and the forest can be happy—as we called a bill to clean up the forests last year, we named it the Happy Forest Act, hoping that we would start to clean up the forests.

But we have not. The American people have now heard on the local news media and the national news media that, for some reason, the process of trying to clean up some of these trees—I am speaking now of those categories to which my friend Senator LARRY CRAIG alluded—that almost anybody would say let's get those out of the forests.

The process of cleaning it up has been held up by a procedure that gets almost every desired cleanup into a court of law, into a NEPA statement, regardless of how little or ineffective it is against the forest. In fact, the process got so bad that, while most of us were totally unable to get a change so we could do fix it, the distinguished majority leader saw it coming. Senator DASCHLE saw it coming in his State. He must have gone there and saw what we see. He saw it in his forest in the Black Hills. In other words, he saw some acreage where his constituents must have been showing him and saying: Senator, why do we have to leave that here? It is just a target that will burn our whole forest down. Why are you not able? Because environmental groups, which are particularly concerned—rightfully so—with the forests of America, won't let you take it up?

So everyone should know that Senator CRAIG, Senator DOMENICI, and many other Western and Rocky Mountain Senators—hopefully, before we are finished we will be joined by many others—looked at the urgent supplemental that passed not long ago, and we noticed that the distinguished majority leader had put in language exempting fuels reduction projects on the Black Hills National Forest from NEPA appeals and litigation.

So from a distance, we said, thank you, Mr. Majority leader, you really did for us what ought to be done—except that you only did it for your State. No criticism. That is fine. We say if it is good enough for the majority leader in his State, then it ought to be good enough for us. We have many, many times more acreage of this kind in our respective States—Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, and I can go on. We have much, much more of that broken down, knocked over timber, burned but still standing, wind blown, bug-infested. We would like to have the same thing, or as close as we can, that Senator DASCHLE, quite correctly, gave to the citizens of his State. He did that a month and a half ago, or less, when we put amendments on an appropriations bill.

Again, I have no objection to his having done that. I praised him because the time had come when NEPA had to be changed. We were all operating under a blanket that said you can't do that, no matter what. When we read this, we said, if you cannot do it, it has just been done because the distinguished majority leader did it for the Black Hills in his State. And now I walked, during the last 25 days in my State, into about six or eight meetings with cowboys and people who used to work in lumber mills, with people who have farms up alongside the forests; they are at meetings and all they want to know, why can't we clean forests so they won't burn down. Anybody coming to see Senator DOMENICI puts up his hand and he wants to know why can't New Mexico do what South Dakota can do. All we can do is say Senator DASCHLE is a fair man. He did this for his constituents. We believe when he sees what should be done for ours, he will be helpful.

We do hope the amendment that we put down—the Craig-Domenici, et al—that many Senators will be on it. I have talked to Senators on the other side whose names have not yet been mentioned—even by Senator LARRY CRAIG, the prime sponsor. I am talking to all of them now, Democrats and Republicans. We can put a bill together that will work in California, where there are many houses and they are very valuable and, therefore, you need to clean up around each of them—all the way over to New Mexico where you have very open spaces and some houses. But you have to make sure the cleanup is not going to just be around buildings and houses. Some of it will have to be in other open spaces where the forest itself will be the victim, not necessarily a house in the fire's way.

So I urge that—as is the usual manner when we have a situation such as this—we not end up with one group calling the other group names—that one is pro-environment, or that one is pro-forest. I submit that we have a big problem. Senator DASCHLE tried to solve it for his constituents. We have observed that carefully. We would like to solve it for our constituents. We do not believe the distinguished majority leader is going to say: I got it but you cannot have it. It is fair and it must be done. Our forests will burn down before we ever get to clean them up.

Having said that, we worked very hard—not just Republicans, but a number of Democrats, and not just Republican staff, but a number of Democrat staff who know what they are talking about. We crafted this bill. We think from the standpoint of doing away with some of the litigation that environmentalists like to be in place so they think their interests are protected, we have left more court proceedings in our measure than the majority leader left in his. We have streamlined the process, no question about it. We have taken less of a proportion of the class III gambling acreage and put it in our bill.

Senator CRAIG said, out of 33 million acres that are so polluted as we described, they are going to burn down and carry all kinds of other trees with them. Ten out of 33 is what we provide for in our bill. We are willing to say, if they cannot do 10, because they don't have the equipment or the time, it can be altered. We are also in favor of adding the new money that the President pledged, and that can go to this. If there needs to be more, we can talk about it on the floor of the Senate.

I rose today not to speak of technicalities. We will do that. Our amendment is there and there are plenty of copies for the technicians to look at. In a nutshell, we have seen the forests of America and they are burning.

We think over time we must have a new forest plan. I have heard my good friend, Senator CRAIG, speak of a new forest plan, a new horizon for maintenance and upkeep that will keep these forests beautiful. We also speak of preserving these forests where they are subject to being burned down because of our failure to maintain them. We want to go in, within the next 18 months, and do as much maintenance as we can. In the process, we are not interested in lumber.

As soon as we decided we were going this way, 10 or 15 Senators got on television and we heard opposition: We do not want to do that, because they are all for big lumber.

What we are for is saving our forests. We do not have any new lumber contract language, that I am aware of, in this bill. I am not an expert, but I see the experts saying that is true. We have provisions that will permit the managers within the Forest Service and the BLM to proceed to maximum cleanup, and to do it now.

We do not have any new roadways, as I understand it. We do not have new roadways where there are none, because we are not interested in that; that is not our goal.

So once again, I say to our friends, Democrats and Republicans, these are days when we seem to try to come together as Senators. We are not getting a lot done because 9/11 is hovering over us. But I do think it would permit us, also under that attitude we have generated of being more friendly and more congenial, to consider what those who oppose it say; we will consider it to be a legitimate objection, if the other side will consider what we propose to do as legitimate and let us explain it carefully.

Let's see if we can get a bill so we can go home this year, whether we are running or whether we are just going home because it is our time to go home, and we can go to those meetings I described and say, Democrat and Republican, joined by our President, we put more money into cleaning up the forests that you live by, live in, work with, and recreate in; we put money to do some real fixing up; and we also have agreed we do not have to take so long to go from weighing that forest and saying it is one of those that ought to be cleaned up to getting it cleaned up.

Should it take 5 years? Of course not. Should it take so long that everybody gives up? Of course not. We have provisions as to how fast it must go in terms of the events that occur in the courtrooms and other places.

This is one chance to make some real changes. They will be temporary, but we will be able to look at them and say we can now continue to do them; the forests may come out clean in 10 or 15 years, not next week, not next month.

I am hopeful our amendment, which obviously can be changed, will be looked at from the standpoint that we are not here to blame; we are not here to criticize; we are here to commend the distinguished majority leader for seeing that NEPA, the approach of the National Environmental Protection Act to cleaning up the forests, has to be modified in terms of its imposition of delay.

We ought to be able to do that in writing, where it is easy for everybody to understand and will not destroy, will not cause our forests to be logged in some way that is not good for America. We hope the public can look openly at our work in the next 3 or 4 days. And we want it to be open. We have nothing to hide. We want to be able to say within the next 6 weeks, across the United States on the nightly news and the newscasts of the day, the bipartisan Senate has decided to fix up the forests before they burn down, clean them up before they are no more. That is essentially what our bill is all about.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Madam President, I am going to be very brief because I am imposing on the time of Senator DODD. As chairman of the Senate's Subcommittee on Forests and Public Lands, I regret to say this morning I have to oppose the amendment that has been laid down by my colleagues.

I have enormous respect for both Senator DOMENICI and Senator CRAIG. I want to take a couple of minutes to talk about my concerns. I want to be clear, having lived this issue constantly with my constituents through the summer months, I am totally committed to the concept of expedited treatment when we are dealing with areas that are fire prone, when we are dealing with areas that are at risk for fire, as so much of the West is. I am committed to expedited treatment.

I will say, and I regret to have to do so this morning, I believe this amendment is an overreach. The history in the West, because things are so polarized, is that the surest way to taint an effort to try to bring the parties together is to overreach. Particularly, this analogy to South Dakota, I would say to my good friends, simply does not wash. The South Dakota example involved 800 acres. We are talking about millions and millions of acres in this debate. If there is one thing that we westerners have learned, it is that one size does not fit all.

I hope we can continue to talk about ways to really ecologically improve the health of fire-prone forests, work together to tailor our approach to deal with areas that are at risk for fire. I have made it clear I support expedited treatment there.

Let us not lock the doors to the courthouse. I believe people have a constitutional right to access the courts, but they do not have a constitutional right to a 5-year delay. Let us make sure all the stakeholders have a place at the negotiating table.

Senator CRAIG and I have an experience that has worked with the county payments bill, a bill that the Forest Service called the most important bill in 30 years.

Finally, it seems to me we ought to be sensitive to the ecological importance of the big old-growth trees.

So I am saddened that I have to oppose this amendment. I plan to continue to keep talking to my colleagues.

I thank Senator DODD again for his graciousness in giving me this time, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will only take a minute.

I say to my good friend from Oregon, I thank him for his remarks. I am very hopeful that whenever we vote on this bill, the Senator will vote aye, because whatever it is the Senator thinks does not fit the bill in this amendment can be rectified.

I also say that my mentioning of the distinguished majority leader was with praise, with congratulations, and stating that he showed us how. I did not say we have to do it the same way, but he did change the effect of NEPA for his State once and for all on these forests. I am very proud he did. I want to do something close to that when we do it. I do not want to close the gates of the courthouse. In fact, we did less of that in this than with other bills. I think the Senator knows that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. I say to my friend, Senator CRAIG, who is in the Chamber, in conversations with the distinguished majority whip a moment ago the suggestion was that we might temporarily lay aside the Craig amendment so I could offer an amendment. I am not going to take a lot of time on this, I would say to the ranking member on this bill. I will lay down this amendment and explain briefly what I would like to do.

Since this involves the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Senator INOUE, the chairman of the committee, is looking at the amendment, but I want to at least discuss this by taking a few minutes.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho be temporarily laid aside for the purposes of offering an amendment I would propose, with the full understanding that, obviously, the amendment by Senator CRAIG would preempt any consideration of my amendment, at least under the present circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4522 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] proposes an amendment numbered 4522 to amendment No. 4472.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit the expenditure of funds to recognize Indian tribes and tribal nations until the date of implementation of certain administrative procedures)

On page 64, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following:

SEC. 1. FEDERAL RECOGNITION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, and subject to the availability of funds and subsections (b) and (c), the Bureau of Indian Affairs may not use more than $1,900,000 of the funds made available by this Act to carry out functions and activities associated with the Branch of Acknowledgment and Research.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—None of the funds made available under this Act shall be used to approve or deny a petition from any person or entity for recognition as a federally-recognized Indian tribe or tribal nation (referred to in this section as a “petition”) until such date as the Secretary of the Interior (referred to in this section as the “Secretary”) certifies to Congress that the administrative procedures described in subsection (c) have been implemented with respect to consideration of any petition submitted to the Secretary.

(c) PROCEDURES.—The administrative procedures described in subsection (b) are that—

(1) in addition to notices provided under any other provision of law, not later than 30 days after the date of receipt of a petition, the Secretary shall provide written notification of the petition to—

(A) the Governor and attorney general of—

- (i) the State in which the petitioner is located as of that date; or

- (i) each State in which the petitioner has been located historically, if that State is different from the State in which the petitioner is located as of that date;

- (B) the chief executive officers of each county and municipality located in the geographic area historically occupied by the petitioner; and

- (C) any Indian tribe and any other petitioner that, as determined by the Secretary—

- (i) has a relationship with the petitioner (including a historical relationship); or

- (ii) may otherwise be considered to have a potential interest in the acknowledgement determination;

(2) the Secretary—

(A) shall consider all relevant evidence submitted by a petitioner or any other interested party, including neighboring municipalities that possess information bearing on the merits of a petition;

(B) on request by an interested party, may conduct a formal hearing at which all interested parties may present evidence, call witnesses, cross-examine witnesses, or rebut evidence presented by other parties during the hearing; and

(C) shall include a transcript of a hearing described in subparagraph (B) in the administrative record of the hearing on which the Secretary may rely in considering a petition;

(3) the Secretary shall—

(A) ensure that the evidence presented in consideration of a petition is sufficient to demonstrate that the petitioner meets each of the 7 mandatory criteria for recognition contained in section 83.7 of title 25, Code of Federal Regulations (as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act); and

(B) consider a criterion to be met if the Secretary determines that it is more likely than not that evidence presented demonstrates the satisfaction of the criterion; and

(4) the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register, and provide to each person to which notice is provided under paragraph (1), a complete and detailed explanation of the final decision of the Secretary regarding a documented petition under this Act that includes express findings of fact and law with respect to each of the criteria described in paragraph (3).

Mr. DODD. Madam President, let me emphasize, I am offering this amendment now with the full understanding that my dear friend and colleague from Hawaii, the chairman of the committee, is reviewing this amendment to see whether it might be accepted. If it is, obviously we will deal with it in a different manner.

Since we have some time and we are about to leave the Interior bill to go back to homeland security, it may be another day or two before we get back to the Interior appropriations bill. So I thought I would take advantage of this pause in the consideration of the Craig amendment to lay out what this amendment is, why I am offering it, and why it is so terribly important that we adopt it, or something like it, if we can.

It is with some reluctance that I offer this amendment to address the process for recognizing Indian tribes in this country. I would have preferred to have the matter addressed at a different time and under different circumstance, but I raise it now because the matter has considerable urgency and importance in my State and other States.

Currently, there are 200 petitions pending at the Bureau of Indian Affairs by groups throughout our country seeking Federal recognition as Indian tribes. Nine of the petitions are in my State of Connecticut, a State 110 miles by 630 miles square. There are in addition to the two tribes that have been recognized in our State, with which I have a very close and warm relationship, the Pequot Tribe and the Mohegan Tribe, both of which have played a significant role in our State and with our citizens and have contributed to the well-being of our State. The two tribes have generated thousands of jobs in Connecticut and have provided much revenue for the State.

I offer this amendment which in no way deals at all with tribes that have been recognized. I strongly support them and have been deeply involved in both the Mohegan and Pequot issues, sometimes going back to my days when I served in the other body, when the Tribes were first considered for recognition. We went through an extensive process.

My concern has to do with the fact that the recognition process, by the admission of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, has broken down entirely. I will quote the former head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Kevin Gover, the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs:

I am troubled by the money backing certain petitions and I do think it is time that Congress should consider an alternative to the [existing] process. [Otherwise,] we're more likely to recognize someone that might not deserve it.

That was the Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs.

We are reviewing petitions that are almost hard to imagine. We just had a situation in our State where two tribes opposing each other sought recognition by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Bureau of Indian Affairs did not approve either application but rather came up with a third choice—no one asked for it—and recognized the third choice.

If that is not a system that is broken down, I don't know what is. All we are asking in this amendment is that communities, leaders, Governors, and the various States where the petitions are pending be notified of the petitions; that other tribes be notified as well as the petitions; that there be improved notice of petition to key persons who may have an interest in the petition, including the Governor and the attorney general of the State where a tribe seeks recognition; consideration of all relevant evidence submitted by a petitioner and other interested parties, including municipalities; require that a petitioner meet each and every one of the seven criteria for Federal recognition spelled out by the current Code of Federal Regulations; and require that a decision on a petition be published in the Federal registry that includes express written findings of fact and of law with respect to each of the seven mandatory criteria.

We had a case not long ago where the criteria of showing a continuity of relationship had been broken by more than 70 years. The Assistant Secretary, despite the findings of the technical staff that said this gap would be enough to deny recognition, overruled the technical staff and approved it anyway. So what we are doing is not writing new criteria. These criteria are part of the Federal Registry. We want to codify them to say if these criteria are important, they ought to be adhered to. If you go through the recognition process, you must meet the criteria, as well as inform affected communities.

Many States in the country have petitions pending. There are 200 pending. My State has nine. That is why there is a sense of urgency. Other States have petitions pending, as well. This is not about denying petitions. I happen to believe if criteria are met, these tribes ought to be recognized. In fact, I suggest the present process, as flawed and as broken as it is, devalues federal recognition so those that have been recognized, under stiff criteria, those who have gone through the process that took years in some cases, will see their recognition undermined in some sense if the future recognitions are granted where the criteria have not been met. That is what we are trying to avoid.

This amendment imposes a moratorium on any new recognitions until the Bureau of Indian Affairs applies these criteria. They can do it quickly and move forward, or they can delay it. And in that case, we hold up here.

We have also in this amendment provided some $1.9 million if funds are made available to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. There are some wonderful people working in this agency. But they do not have the resources needed when you have 200 applications pending, a relatively small staff, and if you are trying to do the historical research, the checking, all of the investigation that needs to be done, considering all the information that comes to you, you have to have the people who can help you do that.

I don't require this spending because that might subject the amendment to a point of order, but I merely point out that these funds, if available, should be made available to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to allow them to do the job they would like to do.

Again, I don't write anything new in terms of new criteria, new law, new hurdles. We take the existing criteria, we do say you must notify people and affected communities where this is going on so they can be heard and people have an opportunity to discuss what will happen if recognition is approved and we end up with a sense of community. I wish every single community could go through what we went through with the Mohegan Tribe in Connecticut when that Tribe was seeking recognition. The relationship with the surrounding communities that developed was not done under law. It was done because the leadership of the tribe and the leadership of the communities worked so closely together. As a result of that, today we have a wonderful relationship between a Native American tribe and the communities in which they reside.

Recently, I participated in the opening of a new hotel at the Mohegan facility, and had dinner with the tribal council. The tribal council invited leaders throughout the State. Everyone was there to celebrate the remarkable event, this wonderful relationships that have emerged, and the contribution this tribe has made. With the Pequot Tribe, we have had a more difficult relationship with some of the communities, but they are working at it. There are still issues to be resolved and they are struggling to sort them out.

We need to bring some sanity and some sensibility to a recognition process that is just not working. I wish there was some other way to deal with this. I don't ever want to support legislation to undo recognition where recognition has been granted. We are not talking about anything that would undermine the recognition of existing tribes in the country. It merely says for those petitions that are pending, the criteria should be met; that notice should be given; that opportunity to be heard should be made. We do not think that is a tremendous amount to be asking. We are looking at, in some cases, tremendous additional burdens on surrounding communities, on transportation, housing, and the like. We need to take that into consideration with Federal recognition as part of the process.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of Senator DODD's proposed amendment, of which I am a cosponsor, to reform and strengthen the Federal tribal recognition process for American Indian tribes and their governments.

I am pleased to join with my respected colleague on this amendment, and concur with his sentiment that this amendment will further constructive dialogue on establishing a more fair and open Federal tribal recognition process. In 2001, I joined him in introducing S. 1392 and S. 1393, which were similarly designed to reform and improve the process by which the Federal Government recognizes the sovereign status of American Indian tribes and their tribal governments.

The Federal tribal recognition process has greatly affected the State of Connecticut and its local municipalities from a financial and physical infrastructure standpoint. Connecticut is one of our nation's geographically smallest states. However, Connecticut already has three federally recognized tribes, one of which is being appealed, and nine more recognition petitions are in the Bureau of Indian Affairs pipeline. That is why Connecticut has been so keenly impacted by the federal recognition process.

This Federal recognition process has been fraught with controversy. We shouldn't recognize additional tribes until the process is fixed and credibility in the BIA recognition process is reestablished. It is widely recognized that the process is both extremely lengthy and that towns and other interested parties feel that their views have been ignored.

I want to stress that this amendment does nothing to affect already recognized Federal tribes or hinder their economic development plans. Nor does it change existing Federal tribal recognition laws. What this amendment does, consistent with those laws, is ensure that recognition criteria are satisfied and all affected parties, including affected towns, have a chance to fairly participate in the decision process. It assures a system of notice to affected parties; that relevant evidence from petitioners and interested parties, including neighboring towns, is properly considered; that a formal hearing may be requested, with an opportunity for witnesses to be called and with other due process procedures in place; that a transcript of the hearing is kept; that the evidence is sufficient to show that the petitioner meets the seven mandatory criteria in Federal regulations; and that a complete and detailed explanation of the final decision and findings of fact are published in the Federal Register. Under the amendment, funding available under the Interior Appropriations bill to the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the recognition process becomes available when these fundamental due process procedures are implemented by the Secretary of Interior. The amendment dictates no outcomes, it simply tries to assure a fair process, accessible and more transparent to affected parties.

Mr. DODD. I see my wonderful friend, BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL. He and I have talked about this on numerous occasions, and he is aware of what I am doing with this amendment I drafted many months ago.

I have gone through it and have had numerous conversations with Native American tribes about this amendment, as to what I wanted to do and why I thought it was important. I am very grateful for the responses I have had, the understanding here that this in no way derecognizes—in fact I would vehemently oppose any effort to derecognize any tribe in this country that has received Federal recognition.

The point I am trying to make here is that the Bureau of Indian Affairs needs resources and it needs to follow a process so there is clarity; so everybody understands what happens and how it happens; so there is the information the people need; so there is an opportunity to respond; so the criteria will be met.

You have great technical staff, great professional staff at the BIA. It is disheartening for them to go through a process and make recommendations and have an Assistant Secretary veto their hard work, and that has happened in too many instances.

We have 200 applications pending—in my State nine of them—and a number of them are going to be decided in the next 7 or 8 months. If I could wait for the next Congress, wait for an authorization bill to come up, I would rather go that way. But next year the amendment I am offering would do little or nothing if recognition is granted in places it is not deserved.

What heightens this more than anything else are some of the most recent applications. I know my friend from Colorado is aware of this, but we actually had two tribes seeking recognition. They opposed each other's recognition. The Bureau of Indian Affairs essentially rejected both applications and approved a third application that was never filed. You can understand the utter amazement of my constituents under those circumstances. That is like two people applying for a Federal grant, both being rejected, and a grant being awarded to an agency that never sought it. My colleagues who think the system is not broken: Look at that example.

While your State may not be affected today, it could be, so we need to bring some order to this, provide the resources, make sure the criteria are met, and then we ought to accept and endorse and applaud when recognition occurs and not to undermine the recognition process when problems such as this arise.

Again, I will take some additional time if necessary. I am hopeful my colleagues can just accept this amendment. I am not interested in going through a unnecessary process here, a lengthy process of debate on this. I would like to see if we could agree. I am not adding anything new. I am just taking the criteria and codifying them, and setting a moratorium. The moratorium could last a month or less if the criteria would be applied, so it need not delay things inordinately.

I have tried every which way; I know of no other way we can get BIA's attention. We cannot get a bill up. We can't get things done, and the process goes on, and if a recognition comes through—I don't want to undo a recognition when it occurs. That would be outrageous. That would put in jeopardy every single recognized tribe, which would have to fear an act of Congress might somehow derecognize them. That is not the way to go. But if we don't bring in some sanity and we end up with circumstances such as those that happened in my State, I can see somebody passing legislation that might just do that, and it would not be because they are evil or bad but it would be because they see a system that is flawed and is providing recognition where it is not deserved, or worse, denying recognition where it was deserved because other financial interests objected to them reaching that status.

So both the petitioner that deserves recognition and the neighbors of petitioners that do not are in jeopardy as a result of the present process. It's unfair and wrong.

I am hopeful we can, as I say, adopt this and then convince the administration, convince the BIA to improve the process and go this route and straighten this out before we end up with a firestorm across the country that I think could do great damage to our Nation and to those that deserve recognition that might otherwise be adversely affected by it.

I have not gone into the whole casino deal because I don't think that is the issue. If a tribe in my State deserves recognition and they go through the process, my State allows for Native American tribes to operate casinos. If a tribe deserves recognition and they open up a casino, if they deserve the recognition, then they deserve to go ahead with that. I may not be enthusiastic about it, but I don't believe we ought to be opposing recognition because Native American tribes all of a sudden have discovered a way to accrue some wealth. So my objection to this process is not grounded in the casino debate. I understand it. I am sympathetic in some ways.

Mine is a small State, smaller than Yellowstone National Park. It is smaller than some counties in California or Montana, geographically. When you end up with two of the largest casinos in the world and the possibility of nine more in a little State, you can understand some frustration being felt. But my argument is not grounded on that point. If recognition is deserved, it ought to be granted. My concern is that the recognition process is so broken and so flawed that even the Assistant Secretary has described it as such. It is incumbent upon us, it seems to me, to try to do what we can to straighten this out.

So this amendment is designed to impose a moratorium, take existing law, existing regulations, codify them so there is clarity in the process, there is a clear roadmap, so those petitioners seeking recognition and those opposing it for whatever reason can have a higher degree of expectation of what is expected of them and what the hurdles are that have to be met before recognition is granted or denied.

With that, I have taken more time than I said I probably would. I am grateful to Senator CRAIG and Senator DOMENICI for laying aside their amendment so I could lay this down for the purpose of letting my colleagues know my interests. Hopefully we can find some common ground.

My colleague from Colorado has an alternative idea. My concern is, if we don't get that done in the meantime, the recognition goes forward and obviously he is not going to offer a bill that is going to undo anything that has occurred already.

For those of us who sense urgency on this issue, I am looking for some temporary filler here until we get to a more elaborate, more established process. My concern is by the time we get that done, the horses may be out of my barn, in a sense, and there will be nothing more than a historical tragedy in a way where I have nothing more to say to my colleagues except we missed an opportunity.

It seems to me, if I do not try to do something here, then we are subject to the criticism that we knew a system was broken and we didn't make an effort to try to do something about it.

With that, let me sit down, yield the floor, and listen to the good words of my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask a couple of minutes of time from Senator BURNS, if I can get some.

Let me tell my friend, Senator DODD, I think he has brought something forward that we have long neglected. We have dealt with it in the Indian Affairs Committee several times and have not been able to find a solution.

I know, as you said, the casino issue may not be the central focus point, but clearly it has driven the debate over the last few years. There are probably 60 or 70 or more on the drawing boards right now throughout America. In fact, there is a good number in California.

We have seen the advent of huge amounts of money. Actually it ended up dividing families, about who was going to control the tribe. We are dealing with that now in California, where part of the family has literally disenfranchised some other parts through some local decisions made by the agencies in California rather than even going as far as the Secretary's office or the Under Secretary's office. So we know there are some real problems with it.

I wanted to mention that I may very well join you. But right now I understand this is going to be laid aside for a while anyway. I tried to call Senator INOUE, the chairman. I am the ranking member, as the Senator from Connecticut knows. He is not in yet, but we are going to sit down and talk about this.

I might say, in the past, my own feeling about codifying anything—in other words, taking regulations and turning them into law—without people whose lives are going to be affected, I have always been very careful about that, particularly in the Indian community. We hear very often in committee when Indians come in to testify, tribes come to testify, people say: We didn't even know you were going to do this. We had no opportunity to study it, to deal with it. I know, at least in my view, I do not think any of the national groups, for instance, the National Congress of American Indians, any professional group or any particular tribes, have had a chance to review this and try to be in on the discussion about how we fix something that is rapidly causing a lot of problems.

Mr. DODD. If my colleague will yield, I have, going back a number of months now, specifically transmitted this language, or language like it anyway, to one of the national tribal councils to get their input. I don't want to bring anything to the floor that in any way they would feel hostile about or toward.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I tell my friend, their national convention is going to be in San Diego after we get out, in November, with only 17 or 18 days of actual working time here. It might well be too late to do anything this year. But if we don't, and even if it does have the support of Indian tribes, it is certainly something we ought to review next year. I tell my friend I will be looking forward to trying to find a solution to this very difficult problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, will the majority whip yield for a second?

Mr. REID. I would be happy to yield to my friend for a question.

Mr. BURNS. Will he allow me to ask unanimous consent that the Dodd amendment be laid aside so the pending business would be the Craig amendment?

Mr. REID. Absolutely.

Mr. BURNS. I ask unanimous consent that the Dodd amendment be laid aside and that we return to the Craig amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 4518

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I want to take just a few minutes to talk about the statements given by my friend—I say my dear friend from New Mexico, the former chairman of the Budget Committee, and someone I have worked with for many years on the Appropriations Committee and the Energy and Water Subcommittee—regarding the South Dakota forest settlement that was initiated and accomplished just a few months ago.

The amendment that was offered by my friend from Idaho simply doesn't meet the Black Hills test. There are others who can probably explain that better than I. But I think I have a pretty good knowledge of what happened in South Dakota.

First of all, the amendment offered by the minority doesn't offer any new wilderness in exchange for protecting the timber from appeals. In addition to the 10 million acres of trees that my friend from New Mexico wants to have the Forest Service and BLM cutting down and doing things of that nature, if my friend wants to include a wilderness part of that, that would be something maybe a lot of us could take a look at. As we know, wilderness comes in this body by inches. It is very difficult to accomplish.

Anytime we talk about what is happening in South Dakota, understand that a component of that was creating wilderness—in fact, about 4,000 acres of wilderness. I think that is something we have to understand.

We have to also understand that the amendment offered by my friend from the minority is sweeping in its scope, covering, as I understand it, about 10 million acres. The South Dakota proposal dealt with 8,000 acres.

The terms and conditions of the individual projects under this proposal that we have from our friend from Idaho will not be subject to negotiations by environmental groups, States, and the industry. It also does not protect wilderness areas from new road construction. It will not retain large, green trees and snags—something that was in the South Dakota proposal.

I know it is an interesting ploy to say we want to do just exactly what South Dakota did. No one really means that. It is a totally different situation involving not 10 million acres but 8,000 acres.

There have been longstanding negotiations in South Dakota. It has been involved in the court system for a considerable period of time.

I think we have to get off that, and get off the fact that we only want to do what the majority leader wants. We want is to make sure that places such as beautiful Lake Tahoe, which is a lake surrounded by the States of Nevada and California are protected—a lot of people are living there. We are really afraid of a fire taking place there because lots of people now live in that basin.

During one of the trips that I remember taking with the supervisor of the forests in that area, he said: Senator, the thing we are worried about is fire, because of the downdrafts and updrafts that occur every day. If a fire starts in here, we will not be able to control it. We came very close this summer to having a fire burn into that basin. We were very fortunate. Nature was kind to us. It burned the other side toward Carson City. That was extremely important.

But what we want and what we hope to be able to have at a subsequent time is the Craig amendment and the amendment we will offer here. We will debate those two amendments and, of course, recognize that because we have the 60-vote threshold here in the Senate, we have been jumping through all of the hoops dealing with cloture. We would simply have the 60-vote threshold on both. We are in the process of seeing if we can work something out in that regard. That proposal was given to me by the Senator from Idaho earlier today. The staff is working to see if they can come up with the unanimous consent agreement.

What we want—and I will just lay out the broad outlines of that—is to protect Lake Tahoe.

What does that mean? We think 70 percent of the money should be spent protecting urban areas—not 70 percent creating new places to cut down trees where there are no people. Lake Tahoe is a perfect example of that. If we could have the trees thinned and, in effect, urban areas protected there for a quarter to a half mile, then it wouldn't matter what happened; we would be able to protect those properties and those people in that basin. The same applies around the rest of the country. We have to protect these urban areas.

We are not asking that 100 percent of the money be spent on these urban areas, but 70 percent. Now it is turned around. Now only about 30 percent is spent in urban areas and 70 percent spent outside these urban areas.

As I indicated, the Black Hills settlement agreement creates thousands of acres of new wilderness in the Black Elk Wilderness Area. The Black Hills settlement is an environmentally responsible thinning in two areas in the Black Hills National Forest. The Black Hills settlement has conditions of sales negotiated among various parties, including environmental groups. The Black Hills settlement agreement allows negotiated sales to go forward without further appeal or lawsuits. The Black Hills settlement agreement contains large green trees and snags, and it protects endangered species and habitat.

We can get into more debate in that regard with this amendment offered by Senator CRAIG and the one we will offer at a subsequent time. But I just wanted to outline the two basic proposals and how we can't keep harping on the fact that we want to do what was done in South Dakota. Nobody really means that. It is just an effort to try to create an atmosphere where the rules we play by and have been directed by for so many years dealing with forests be done away with. It wasn't done in the settlement in South Dakota. We don't expect it to be done here.

It is my understanding we have a number of amendments that have been cleared and that have been approved by both Senator BYRD and Senator CONRAD. I suggest the absence of a quorum so we can make sure that is the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I apologize to my friend from New Jersey. I sat right by him for 6 years, and it was always hard for people to see me. I apologize. I thought Senator BURNS was the only Senator on the floor.

Mr. CORZINE. I appreciate that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. CORZINE. Thank you, Mr. President.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST— S. 2845

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I appreciate the distinguished Senator from Nevada giving me the opportunity to speak on an issue that I am really quite sad about, in all honesty. This is a human issue that I bring to the floor today that I think is an oversight on the part of the Senate and actually all of us in public life.

I want to speak about families of lawful noncitizens whose loved ones perished in the World Trade Center. They are about to be put into a position where, on a legal basis, they are deportable as of September 11, 2002, and this at the same time as they are taking on that incredibly difficult task of dismantling their lives here in the United States and returning to their country of birth.

This legislation would extend by 1 year the relief we provided in the Patriot Act to allow noncitizens whose parent or spouse was murdered in the terrorist attacks of September 11.

Today is September 10, just 1 day shy of the 1-year anniversary of the most significant terrorist attack on the United States in history.

The United States lost some 2,800 lives, as you know, but in the past year we have forgotten, in my view, to take into consideration the 504 nationals from 86 foreign countries who were a part of that. Many of these victims were in the United States as guest workers, contributing their technical expertise in helping the U.S. economy be the strongest in the world, be the engine of the world's economy. When they died, their hopes to provide a better life for themselves and their children in the United States died with them.

Tomorrow is September 11, and deportation proceedings could very well begin, if the INS were to proceed this way, for the grieving families of those temporary workers. While those families watch the media coverage of the anniversary—coverage that will no doubt extol the bravery and the sacrifice of so many of their family members—their presence in the United States will be in jeopardy.

These families were admitted to the United States 100 percent lawfully. They had all of their papers. They were admitted because we invited them here to help drive our economy. They did not sneak across any border or overstay their visas. They are lawfully present in the United States because work visas were provided to their loved ones. They paid taxes and submitted all appropriate paperwork. They were active in our communities in New York and New Jersey and very productive members of our society. Yet on the 1-year anniversary of the death of their loved ones, the INS could begin making arrangements for their removal from this country. Fortunately, the INS said they are going to turn a blind eye. But folks have to live with the risk that this is a possibility.

The challenges faced by these brave families were anticipated by those of us in Congress. In fact, the Patriot Act appropriately allowed them an additional year to remain in the United States. But it is becoming quite clear an additional year for families who have had to suffer so much is not adequate. This legislation is a response to the very real challenges of these families.

For example, many of these families are participating in September 11 support groups, groups that simply would not exist in the countries to which they may be returning. Many of them are eligible for awards from the Victims Compensation Fund, but, as you know, many of the awards have not been processed, or even begun to be processed in many instances. Much work remains to be done.

Although they have been in mourning for nearly a year, many widows and children are waiting patiently for DNA analysis of the remains of their loved ones. Without closure, the grieving process has been prolonged considerably. Because of this delay, many necessary and unfamiliar financial matters have not been adequately addressed. There are homes that need to be sold and other business affairs to be settled before these folks should be returning home.

Also, there are children to consider, many of them in American schools, who have begun their lives. Many of them are American citizens, the children themselves. In fact, I think some of these children could potentially be separated from their parents as we go forward with this whole process. So it is a real issue at a human level on the ground, where people are trying to work their way through this tragic series of events.

While it is difficult to define the precise number of survivors who would be eligible for relief under my legislation, it is safe to say it is under 200. I think it also reflects some problems in the INS. The books and records are not exactly clear on how many folks there are involved. We have identified, in my office, about 80 of these people with whom we are working to try to provide special attention to them. The thought is, it would be close to 200.

Yet despite the fact that this legislation is sculpted very narrowly to address only the most immediate humanitarian considerations for this population, and despite the fact that the number of people included is a narrow 200 or fewer, each time I have attempted to get this legislation cleared, an objection has been raised. Generally, it has been one individual who has used their ability to quietly veto this legislation.

So at this time, with September 11 just 1 day away, Mr. President, I think it is time to pass this legislation. I think it is important. I think it speaks to the nature and the quality of who we are as a nation.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up and pass S. 2845, legislation to extend for 1 year procedural relief provided under the USA Patriot Act for individuals who were or are victims or survivors of victims of a terrorist attack on the United States on September 11, 2001.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNS. Objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. CORZINE. I appreciate the responsibility of the Senator from Wyoming to carry out the objection.

I continue to have serious concerns that if the facts of this issue were known broadly, they would not be resisted. I personally sought out the assistance of a number of folks who have typically objected to legislation dealing with immigration: Senator BYRD, Senator NICKLES, and particularly Senator HATCH, and they have been very helpful on this—and the Senator from Montana; excuse me. The distinguished Senator from Montana. I apologize. I am tied up in this sense of—

Mr. BURNS. I say to the Senator from New Jersey, I have lived on both sides of the line.

Mr. CORZINE. It is all a beautiful part of the country.

But I must say, of all of the issues that get at human interests, I consider it extraordinarily unusual that we have chosen to put a group of people—a limited group of people—at such risk.

I think this idea of having people be able to secretly hold legislation is a troubling one. I hope we can move on with it. I think this is an important piece of legislation.

I thank the Senator from Montana for his graciousness, and also the Senator from Nevada. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this important issue.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for working on this bill be extended past the hour of 12:30, until Senator BURNS and I can clear these amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4523 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator BOXER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is laid aside. The clerk will report.

Mr. REID. Yes. I failed to ask that. I appreciate that, Mr. President.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mrs. BOXER, proposes an amendment numbered 4523.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding 36 undeveloped oil and gas leases in the Southern California planning area of the outer Continental Shelf)

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA OFFSHORE OIL LEASES.

(a) Congress finds that—

(1) There are 36 undeveloped oil leases on the land in the Southern California planning area of the Outer Continental Shelf that have been under review for an exceptionally long period of time, some going back over thirty years, and have yet to be approved for development pursuant to the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act;

(2) The oil companies that hold these 36 leases have expressed an interest in retiring these leases in exchange for equitable compensation and are engaged in settlement negotiations with the Department of the Interior regarding the retirement of these leases; and

(3) It would be a waste of taxpayer dollars to continue the process for approval or permitting of these 36 leases when both the lessees and the Department of the Interior have said they expect there will be an agreement to retire these leases.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that no funds should be spent to approve any exploration, development, or production plan for, or application for a permit to drill on the 36 undeveloped leases while the lessees are discussing a potential retirement of these leases with the Department of the Interior.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the pending amendment, which I have offered at the request of Senator BOXER, is a sense-of-the-Senate amendment regarding southern California offshore oil leases. The amendment notes that several leases have not been developed and that the leaseholders are negotiating with the Government to retire those leases. During these negotiations, the amendment urges that no funds be spent on development of the leases.

The amendment has been agreed to by Senator BURNS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I would normally object to any amendment that would withdraw any lands from energy development or consideration. However, this one is just a little bit different. This is already tied up in litigation. I think anytime we shield land from energy exploration, we do not do this country a great favor, nor do we help our situation in the Middle East.

So I think should it be in any other form—there are litigation discussions now ongoing that could possibly expose this Government to a massive takings litigation. However, the way it is worded, it is only a sense of the Senate, and I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The amendment (No. 4523) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

AMENDMENT NO. 4524 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BENNETT, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], for Mr. BENNETT, proposes an amendment numbered 4524.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To set aside forest legacy program funds for the Castle Rock Phase 2 project and Chalk Creek (Blonquist) project, Utah)

On page 65, line 7, strike "Program," and insert "Program (of which $2,000,000 is for the Castle Rock Phase 2 project, $1,600,000 is for the Chalk Creek (Blonquist) project, and none is for the Range Creek #3 project, Utah)."

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, the amendment reallocates funding provided in the bill for Forest Legacy projects in the State of Utah. The amendment is fully offset, and both sides have agreed to it. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4524) was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4525 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside, and I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator CLELAND and Senator THOMPSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. CLELAND, for himself and Mr. THOMPSON, proposes an amendment numbered 4525.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate concerning adequate funding for the National Park Service)

On page 64, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following:

SEC. 1. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR THE NATIONAL PARK SERVICE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the National Park Service is responsible for the preservation and management of the natural and cultural resources of the National Park System for the enjoyment, education, and inspiration of the present and future generations;

(2) the National Park Service is the caretaker of some of the most valued natural, cultural, and historical resources of the United States;

(3) the National Park System provides countless opportunities for the citizens of the United States to enjoy the benefits of the heritage of the United States;

(4) the National Park Service is struggling to accommodate an increasing number of visitors while maintaining the National Park System; and

(5) in an effort to support the purposes of the National Park System, in recent years Congress has, with respect to units of the National Park System, substantially increased the amount of funding available for operations, maintenance, and capital projects.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that Congress should—

(1) to the maximum extent practicable, continue efforts to increase operational funding for the National Park System; and

(2) seek to eliminate the deferred maintenance backlog by fiscal year 2007.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I would like to thank Senator BYRD and Senator BURNS, along with their staffs, for the hard work they have put into the Fiscal Year 2003 Interior Appropriations bill. I know that, with the current budgetary constraints, it was not easy task to craft a bill which would fund all of the agencies and programs which fall under this legislation. The FY 2003 Interior Appropriations bill includes close to $6 billion for the National Park Service. This is an increase of nearly $100 million above the FY 2002 funding level and I know it will go a long way in helping the National Park Service meet their responsibilities to maintain our National Park system. However, the National Park Service currently has an estimated $600 million annual shortfall in operations funding which has significantly contributed to a backlog of unmet needs, threatening the natural, historic, and cultural treasures that the National Park Service was established to protect.

The National Park Service is charged with managing 83 million acres of land, 385 sites, habitat for 168 threatened or endangered species, more than 80 million museum objects, 1.5 million archeological sites, an 26,000 historic structures. Park Service employees do a remarkable job of preserving our heritage and welcoming park visitors, nearly 300 million each year, however, it has become clear that if the Park Service is to continue the good work they do, the Congress must provide substantial increase in funding so as to alleviate the maintenance backlog which is contributing to the physical deterioration of our parks and cut-backs in services provided.

The Chichamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, located in Georgia and Tennessee, has more than 1,400 monuments and plaques, most erected during the 1890's and early 1900's to honor those who lost their lives during the Civil War. Many of these historic monuments have been vandalized or otherwise damaged over the years and have not been repaired due to a lack of funding. Another National Park Service site in Georgia, the Ocmulgee National Monument, was established to preserve the cultural remnants of 12,000 years of human habitation in the Southeastern United States. While Ocmulgee boasts the second-largest museum collection in the park system, there is no museum curator on site to monitor the artifacts. Funding limitations have also impaired the Park Service's efforts to teach visitors about the park's cultural resources. Most recently, a week-long program introducing local youth to the park was discontinued, and instead of receiving a guided tour of the park as in the past, visitors are fortunate if there is a ranger available to hand them a brochure upon entering the park.

Earlier this year, Senator THOMPSON and I were joined by 26 of our colleagues in requesting that the Senate Interior Appropriations bill include increased funding for the National Park Service. While the Committee did not increase funding as much as we had hoped for, we are most appreciative for the increase of nearly $100 million. Today, Senator THOMPSON and I have again worked together to introduce an amendment expressing the Sense of the Senate that the National Park Service is of tremendous importance and value to the American people and that the Congress should significantly increase operational funding and eliminate the deferred maintenance backlog by 2007. I thank Senator AKAKA and Senator GRAHAM for their leadership on this issue and appreciate their co-sponsorship of this amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, as we debate the Interior Appropriations bill, I would like to take this opportunity to focus attention on underinvestment in our national parks, an issue of particular importance to me and the millions of Americans who visit our national parks each year. Earlier this year I joined 27 of my colleagues in writing to Chairman BYRD and Senator BURNS to request a $280 million increase above the fiscal year 2002 level for the National Park Service's operating budget. While the bill before us does not reach that goal, it is a step in the right direction and provides almost $98 million more than last year's funding level. I thank Chairman BYRD and Senator BURNS for their leadership, and especially for their commitment to continue working to increase operational funding for the National Park Service and to eliminate the deferred maintenance backlog by 2007.

Our national parks are a precious resource that we have a responsibility to protect. I have seen first hand the important role that our national parks play in conserving our natural resources and shaping our national heritage, and I have also witnessed the problems associated with a lack of resources for our parks. The Great Smoky Mountains National Park, located in my home State of Tennessee, is the Nation's most visited national park, welcoming more visitors each year than the Grand Canyon and Yosemite combined. Unfortunately, the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, like so many other parks across the country, is struggling to cope with an increasing number of visitors, a deteriorating infrastructure, and a general lack of resources. While Congress has regularly increased funding to operate and maintain the National Park System, we need to do more. The Federal Government has a fundamental responsibility to ensure that the Nation's 385 national parks are preserved for the enjoyment of current and future generations.

Since 1980, park visitation has grown by more than 40 percent and Congress has added more than 60 new park units. More visitors means more stress on roads, campgrounds, and trails, and requires higher staffing levels to ensure that visitors are kept safe and resources are protected. One might say our parks are being loved to death, and Congress must make it a priority to provide the funding necessary to keep pace with increasing needs. The threats facing the parks can no longer be ignored, and each year of delay only compounds the problem.

The amendment I am offering with Senator CLELAND makes clear the Senate's commitment to meeting our responsibility to our national parks. The amendment expresses the sense of the Senate that Congress should, to the maximum extent practicable, continue efforts to increase operational funding for the National Park System and to eliminate the deferred maintenance backlog by 2007. The President has promised to address the maintenance backlog, and I commend his efforts. The deterioration of our national parks did not happen overnight, and a solution is going to require a long-term commitment from both the administration and Congress.

The national parks exist for the use and enjoyment of all Americans and teach us important lessons about ourselves and the natural world in which we live. At a crucial time in our Nation's history, Americans should be able to visit our national parks and experience them as they were meant to be enjoyed. A neglected and underfunded National Park System is not the legacy that I want to leave to our children and grandchildren. I am pleased that the Senate has recognized the importance of adequately funding our national parks, and it is my hope that Congress will continue to provide increased funding in the years to come.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I join my colleagues, Senator CLELAND and Senator THOMPSON, in offering an amendment to the Interior Appropriations bill that shows the Senate's support for funding our national parks.

I am cosponsoring this amendment after hearing comments from park employees, park supporters, and park visitors about the importance of providing adequate funds to maintain our nation's natural treasures during my Third Annual National Parks Issues Forum, held at Zion National Park in Utah.

Tomorrow marks one year since the horrific terrorist attacks on our Nation. Events such as these remind us of the importance of having places of refuge where we can go to refresh and renew our spirits. John Muir wrote in his book Our National Parks, "Thousands of tired, nerve-shaken, overcivilized people are beginning to find out that going to the mountains is going home; that wildness is a necessity; and that mountain parks and reservations are useful not only as fountains of timber and irrigating rivers but as fountains of life."

John Muir's thoughts still ring true. Our national parks, be they mountains, deserts, or rivers of grass, are critically important places for Americans to go and escape the trials of civilized life.

Our Nation's cultural and natural heritage are preserved in our parks. We have demonstrated our initial commitment to preserving this heritage by setting aside these special places as national parks. We must now continue to demonstrate our commitment to these special places by providing a level of funding adequate to operate and maintain them.

Throughout the park system there are historic structures and buildings that require rehabilitation; there are utility systems that require repair or replacement; there are roads that require paving. In addition there are units that are woefully understaffed. Given our current fiscal constraints, we must be sure to invest each of our dollars in those places that will do the most good and make the biggest impact in our parks.

I also want to take this opportunity to acknowledge Senator AKAKA's leadership on this and other issues of critical importance to the national parks. Senator AKAKA is the Chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks and I have long enjoyed our work together to improve our parks.

Like Senator AKAKA, I believe that our national parks are worthy of our investment—worthy of our commitment. I urge my colleagues to help provide our parks with an adequate level of funding.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, God blessed this Nation with an abundance of natural resources and places of unmatched natural beauty. I am so glad that as a Nation we have set aside portions of our land for the enjoyment of the American people and have preserved our heritage by the restoration and maintenance of dozens of historic sites around America.

However over the course of my nearly thirty years in the Senate, I have seen the Federal Government fumble year after year its stewardship over the lands it holds as a fiduciary for the American People.

The Federal Government has continued to add acre after acre year after year, when it has been demonstrated that it cannot maintain what it already has. This has placed an enormous burden on the National Park Service and other Federal agencies who manage and hold in trust land for the American people.

The Park Service is charged with managing 385 sites which comprise 83 million acres of land drawing 300 million visitors per year. The Service is also responsible for, among other things, the care of more than 80 million museum artifacts that trace American history.

According to a report from the Congressional Research Service, the National Park Service estimated that its national maintenance backlog was $4.9 billion when it submitted its fiscal year 2002 budget request to the Congress. Let me say this again, $4.9 Billion.

The Appropriations Committee has recognized this and recommended an increase of $97,990,000 above the fiscal year 2002 enacted level, and $500,000 above the budget request, and I'm glad the Committee included an additional $20,000,000 in to meet these needs. Included in that is a 2.9 percent increase for base operations of National Parks in North Carolina. That is encouraging but the Federal Government needs to catch up.

According to the figures supplied to me by the National Park Service the total amount for "deferred repair/rehabilitation construction for the National Park Units in North Carolina" is $65,231,974.

My friend from Georgia, Mr. CLELAND, and my friend from Tennessee, Mr. THOMPSON, have offered a "sense of the Senate" resolution that calls upon the Federal Government to catch up on the hundreds of maintenance and repair projects in our national parks which I support.

Clearly, the Federal Government is behind the eight ball on its fiduciary duty to maintain and operate the National Park System.

In my State of North Carolina there are 9 sites within the State and three other parks service units that we share with other States, including the Great Smoky Mountains National Park we share with Tennessee, the Blue Ridge Parkway that we share with Virginia and the Appalachian National Scenic Trail that we share with the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee and Georgia. There are a total of 416,620.1 acres of land that the National Park Service manages for the federal government in North Carolina.

The Federal Government needs the resources for proper management and catching up on the backlog of maintenance and construction projects on the Blue Ridge Parkway, Appalachian Trail, Cape Hatteras National Seashore, Carl Sandburg Home and National Historic Site, Fort Raleigh National Historic Site, Great Smoky Mountains National Park, Guilford Courthouse National Military Park, Moores Creek National Battlefield, and the Wright Brothers National Memorial.

These parks and historic sites are among the most visited in the nation and these units in North Carolina are among the most beautiful, spectacular and historically significant in the Nation. The first powered flight occurred at the site of the Wright Brothers Memorial on December 17, 1903. Next year America will gather at the Wright Brothers National Memorial to celebrate the Centennial Anniversary of flight and I am grateful to the Appropriations Committee for providing needed funding for this event.

The Revolutionary War battle at the site of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park that was fought on March 15, 1781 is where General Nathaniel Greene and his army of 4,400 patriots severely crippled Lord Cornwallis's professional troops of 1,900 men. Lord Cornwallis lost a quarter of his army and almost a third of his officers.

This was the largest and most hotly contested battle in the Revolutionary War's Southern Campaign and led to the American victory and British surrender at Yorktown seven months later.

The beauty of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, Cape Hatteras National Seashore, Appalachian Trail and Blue Ridge Parkway are unmatched.

Our National Parks are like the front porch of America, they need to be swept and keep clean and well maintained at all times because it is a reflection of the America people. I do hope the Senate will pass this resolution and that the Federal Government will do a better job in the months and years ahead managing and maintaining land in the National Park Service system for our children and grandchildren.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this amendment, proposed by Senators CLELAND and THOMPSON, is a sense of the Senate amendment pertaining to funding for the National Park Service. While noting that Congress has substantially increased funding for the Park Service over the past few years, the amendment urges Congress to continue that effort and to try to eliminate the maintenance backlog by fiscal year 2007. The amendment has been cleared by both sides. It is my understanding Senator BURNS has agreed to the amendment.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, there is no objection on this side. In fact, we support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To set aside additional funds for permitting of geothermal energy applications, the processing of wind-energy rights-of-way, and Bureau of Land Management realty and ownership management in the State of Nevada)

On page 2, line 14, strike "of which" and insert "of which not more than $750,000 shall be made available for permitting of geothermal energy applications and the processing of wind-energy rights-of-way in the State of Nevada and $750,000 shall be made available for hiring additional personnel to perform realty work in the State of Nevada; of which".

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in Nevada, which is growing so rapidly, 87 percent of the land is owned by the Federal Government. There are a number of land applications dealing with all kinds of activities in public lands, and the BLM has not had money to process those applications. What they have done, in an effort to try to speed things up, is they have had people who are actually moving the land applications come and help them in the offices. It just does not work good, even though it may be right. Even though I hate to do this, we have clarified the expenditure of funds so they will have more money to hire BLM people to do this rather than look to the outside sector, which is an obvious, apparent conflict of interest. I should not say an obvious or apparent; I should say it appears to me it is a conflict of interest.

This amendment has been agreed to by both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4528) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 4529 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator CRAIG Thomas of Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], for Mr. THOMAS, proposes an amendment numbered 4529.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 21, line 24, Insert the following after the semicolon: "of which $750,000 is to conduct an independent and comprehensive management, operational, performance, and financial review of Yellowstone National Park;"

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, this amendment earmarks funds for a comprehensive financial study of the operations of the Yellowstone National Park. Given that this piece of Yellowstone Park lies in my own State of Montana, I am very familiar with the park and the issues that concern the Senator from Wyoming. I support this amendment and understand it has been cleared on both sides.

Basically what this amendment does, it gives a little extra money to look into the books and the financial situation at the park. We have heard some disparaging stories. The way we take care of those, as the saying goes, is to look into it. It is going to take a little money to do that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, recently ABC ran a series of stories about the National Park Service and discussed the $4.9 billion backlog of deferred maintenance nationwide in our National Park System. One segment mentioned that some operations and park programs may need to be curtailed or discontinued as a result of budget shortfalls at Yellowstone National Park.

To be absolutely fair, over the past few years both Senator BYRD and Senator BURNS have been very generous to the National Park Service and to Yellowstone in particular.

Yellowstone is the world's first national park, created in 1872, and one of the biggest. It stretches across volcanic plateaus in northwest Wyoming and into southern Montana and Idaho, and contains more than 2 million acres of geysers, lakes, waterfalls, forests, bison, bears, and tourists. But more than that, Yellowstone is very rich in cultural, historical and natural resources, and in fact, represents—in one part—the multiple facets of park operations and programs found in the individual 285 units of the System.

My amendment would use Yellowstone as a demonstration project for business transformation. The National Park Service depends upon several sources of revenue to sustain operations and modernize facilities, including but not limited to, appropriations, fee income and revenue from concessioners, lease holders and permittees. These funding sources need to be managed in the most cost-effective and efficient manner possible to ensure improvement of services to the park visitor and for the protection of natural and cultural resources. Toward this end, I believe that improved state-of-the-art business practices need to be established in the National Park Service.

This amendment would require the Secretary of the Interior to contract for an independent and comprehensive management, operational, performance, and financial review of Yellowstone National Park. As I have already stated Yellowstone National Park has a wide range of a natural and cultural resources, programs and visitor services and provides an optimal environment in which to identify and make recommendations for improved management and operational practices that can be proliferated throughout the National Park Service and transform management to provide cost-effective, efficient and responsive programs. I know, the lessons that we will learn from Yellowstone will have application to the rest of the units within the System. I would suggest that the eventual cost savings, redirection of expenditures, and cost efficiencies will more than pay for the cost of this study.

We all are aware that there is a backlog of maintenance, and Congress has attempted to address the situation. But, I have to say that throwing money at the problem does not guarantee that there will not be a deferred maintenance backlog ten years from now. Unfortunately, we have never systematically evaluated the management programs that contributed to the backlog in the first place.

I believe this is a compelling need to establish new and better modern business practices within the National Park Service. With the passage of this amendment we can take advantage of the expertise that the private business sector has to offer so that we can redirect funds to address the backlog where we can, and more importantly, ensure that measures are taken to prevent a re-occurrence of programs and policies which led to the backlog we face today. I believe we can achieve these goals while maintaining important park program and operations.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4529) was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have nothing further to bring before the Senate at this time.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I see no one else seeking recognition. I would suggest we recess the Senate for the party caucuses.

Mr. REID. There is already an order in effect.

Mr. BURNS. I move we recess under the previous order.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 12:30 p.m. having arrived, the Senate stands in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, at 12:36 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:15 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CLELAND).

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002—Resumed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5005) to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Lieberman amendment No. 4471, in the nature of a substitute.

Thompson/Warner amendment No. 4513 (to amendment No. 4471), to strike title II, establishing the National Office for Combating Terrorism, and title III, developing the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response for detection, prevention, protection, response, and recovery to counter terrorist threats.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I commend the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator LIEBERMAN, for recognizing early on that a major government reorganization should be considered in light of the tragic events of September 11th and for his leadership in putting together a basic structure for a new Department of Homeland Security. I also praise President Bush for supporting the existing congressional effort to elevate the authority and the status of the Office of Homeland Security to a Cabinet level position that will be responsive to the needs of the American people.

As we approach the anniversary of September 11th, Congress has been diligently working to insure that America has a Department of Homeland Security that can be responsive to the challenges of the post September 11th world. The Senate has spent the past few months exploring the bureaucratic obstacles that limited our capacity to identify and prevent the terrorist attacks of September 11th. We have considered in hearings whether the steps that have been taken to advance our country's safety and security since September 11 have been effective, and whether they adequately protect our most fundamental civil liberties.

The Congress has always responded to the challenge to protect this nation against any and all threats, including terrorism. I am committed to ensuring that as we build this new agency, we do so in manner that guarantees that basic fundamental rights are not lost or forgotten in a rush to be seen as doing something.

As the Senate moves forward in considering this new government structure, I have been guided by two simple questions: Will this reorganization make all of us safer? And will it preserve our liberties as Americans? That inquiry should continue to guide our consideration for a Department of Homeland Security.

So as we move forward toward establishing a Department of Homeland Security, it is important for all of us to examine and discuss both the strengths and weaknesses of the pending proposal.

All of us know that local law enforcement stands at the front line for security in our neighborhoods and communities. The new Department should be organized in a manner that helps and doesn't hinder local law enforcement. The Department of Homeland Security needs to insure that federal, state and local law enforcement work together with the necessary information, tools and resources that are required to adapt and respond to the evolving challenges our first responders are facing.

I am pleased that my bill, the First Responder Support Act, is part of the present proposal we are now discussing. I certainly want to thank my colleague from Maine, Senator COLLINS, for her work in making our responsibility to first responders a priority in this bill.

The First Responder Support Act will help first responders get the information and training they need from the Department of Homeland Security. I am also introducing the First Responder Communication Support Act to help communities who need communication systems to enable police, fire, EMS, and relief agencies to speak to one another in a time of crisis without overwhelming existing communication lines. Whether people face an act of terrorism or a tornado, in a time of emergency our first responders need to be able to communicate with one another.

I am also concerned about our efforts to protect the public from the use of weapons of mass destruction. The emerging chemical and biological weapons of the 21st century present new challenges to our military and to local first responders. The Weapons of Mass Destruction Civil Support Teams play a vital role in assisting local first responders in investigating and combating these new threats. The September 11 terrorist attacks emphasize the need to have full-time teams in each State.

I have filed an amendment that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish at least one Weapons of Mass Destruction Civil Support Team in each State by September 30, 2003. The cost of establishing, training, equipping, and operating these new teams would be paid for from existing fiscal year 2003 Department of Defense resources, thus requiring no additional spending while providing a critical level of protection. As we rethink the security needs of our country, we should support the creation of an additional 23 full-time Weapons of Mass Destruction Civil Support Teams. Establishing these additional full-time teams will improve the overall capacity and capability to prepare for and respond to potential threats in the future. I look forward to working with Chairman LEVIN and Chairman LIEBERMAN on this effort.

We must remember that not every law enforcement purpose makes sense. The administration's proposal to create the TIPS program appears to be a way to begin domestic Government surveillance in our communities with a motto not of "love thy neighbor" but "spy on thy neighbor." I am concerned that if some trained police officers have a difficulty distinguishing between the proper and improper use of race in law enforcement activities, we are asking for real trouble if we ask untrained and fearful "citizen" volunteers to report on their neighbors.

Workers in the Department of Homeland Security who will have the awesome responsibility of protecting us should have the basic job protection their fellow Federal workers are granted. No one, including the President, has shown how simple and basic job security will jeopardize our national security. I believe we can protect our country at the same time that we protect our workers. In fact, we can better protect our country if our workers' rights are well-protected, too.

I am concerned that the administration appears ready to use the creation of a new Department of Homeland Security as an opportunity to eliminate or weaken the civil service protections currently in place for the Federal employees who would be transferred to the new Department. The civil service system was put into place in order to end the corrupt patronage system that had permeated Government hiring. The creation of a new Department should not be used as an excuse to roll back these protections.

In addition, I support the right of Federal workers to join a union and am troubled that the administration wants to strip existing union representation and collective bargaining rights from many of these workers. I also am troubled by the implication that union membership is somehow a threat to our national security.

In light of September 11, there has been a tremendous amount of discussion about the FBI's ability to effectively gather intelligence information. It has become clear that federal intelligence gathering agencies, such as the FBI, need to do better in collecting, organizing and presenting basic information about domestic terrorism. I believe that important first steps have been taken. In our desire to move agencies under one roof, however, we should not be afraid to ask if the move will actually improve intelligence gathering or simply confuse us.

I also want to take a moment to lend my support to the immigration provisions in the Lieberman substitute. There has been considerable debate in recent years, and especially since September 11, on how best to re-organize the Immigration and Naturalization Service, so that we can protect our Nation from those who would seek to enter the U.S. to do harm, while we effectively and efficiently address the needs of businesses, families, students, and visitors who seek to enter our Nation for lawful purposes.

The Lieberman substitute would wisely keep the service and enforcement functions of INS together in one Department; elevate the INS to a separate division within the new Department; keep visa approval authority within the Department of State; maintain the adjudication authority for immigration matters within the Department of Justice; and include a civil rights monitoring and oversight provision for the important purpose of holding INS enforcement functions accountable.

I commend Senator LIEBERMAN for including the ideas of Senators KENNEDY and BROWNBACK, the distinguished chairman and ranking member, respectively, of the Judiciary Committee Subcommittee on Immigration. These Senators came together to create a bipartisan INS reorganization plan. Immigrant advocates have long believed that in order to be effective and efficient, INS requires a strong leader with authority to coordinate and balance the complementary functions of services and enforcement. The Lieberman substitute does just that. While we seek to secure our Nation, we cannot ignore the importance of the flow of immigrants and visitors to our Nation. They provide the nutrients of new ideas, labor, and money that grows our economy and our Nation. I urge my colleagues to support the carefully crafted immigration provisions contained in the Lieberman substitute.

I am especially pleased that the Lieberman substitute contains an important provision to ensure that the new Department complies with the Nation's civil rights and privacy laws. As I have said, I believe that our consideration of this legislation should be guided by two principles: will this proposed re-organization make our country safer, and can we do so while respecting fundamental constitutional rights and protections? Many Federal agencies have designated offices and personnel to monitor agency policies and practices to ensure that they comply with the Nation's civil rights laws. This new Department of Homeland Security, with its unprecedented array of law enforcement powers, should be no different.

It is absolutely critical that the new Department include civil rights and privacy monitoring and oversight functions. I support the Lieberman substitute's requirement of a civil rights officer and privacy officer. The civil rights officer would be Senate-confirmed and would have responsibility to oversee and review Department policies to ensure that they do not violate the Nation's civil rights laws. The civil rights officer would refer matters that warrant further investigation to the new Department's inspector general. The Lieberman substitute would require the inspector general to designate an official to receive and review complaints alleging civil rights abuses and submit reports on a semi-annual basis to Congress that detail any civil rights abuses by employees and officials of the Department. Like the civil rights officer, the privacy officer would have responsibility to oversee and review Department policies to ensure that they do not violate the Nation's privacy laws.

I was pleased to join Senator KENNEDY in urging that these civil rights and privacy oversight provisions be included in the bill. I thank Senator KENNEDY for his leadership on this issue. I also want to thank Senator LIEBERMAN for his recognition of the importance of these accountability provisions and his willingness to work with us. These provisions are an important step toward ensuring that the policies and practices of the new Department will be consistent with the rights and protections guaranteed by our Constitution. I look forward to continuing to work with Senator LIEBERMAN to ensure that the new Department includes appropriate and effective civil rights and privacy oversight provisions.

Finally, notwithstanding our desire to move rapidly to address the Nation's safety, I believe we still have to ask ourselves if the cost of the Department is reasonable. I do have budget concerns with regard to the creation of this new Department. Safety for all Americans isn't inexpensive, but I don't want this new Department to unnecessarily aggravate our budget problems.

When the President first announced his proposal for the creation of a Department of Homeland Security, he indicated that the reorganization of the existing agencies would not increase costs and in fact should actually realize savings.

That promise of net savings stands in contrast to the analysis of the proposal by the Congressional Budget Office, which estimates that the new Department as proposed by this bill will add about $11 billion in new costs over the next 5 years on top of the projected net spending for the ongoing activities of the transferred agencies. And that $11 billion in new costs does not include the cost of developing the integrated information and communications systems authorized by the bill—systems with a price tag CBO states could exceed $1 billion.

I am told that when the Education Department and the Energy Department were created, they both exceeded their initial budgets by at least 10 percent, and I don't want that to be the case with this new Department of Homeland Security.

We need an effective, responsive and efficient Department of Homeland Security. I believe we can do this in a manner that protects the citizens who will depend on the Department and is fair to the employees who will be in the agency. In the coming weeks, I look forward to the debate on the shape and size of the Department with the belief that at the end of our discussion a better and stronger plan for a Department of Homeland Security will emerge.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the disturbing thing to this particular Senator—incidentally, Senators are always disturbed—but in all candor, the best way to recognize 9/11 of last year is to make certain that a 9/11 does not occur again and that we correct the intelligence failure that brought about 9/11.

With respect to actually assuring us that a 9/11 would never occur again, we had that debate last Thursday relative to securing the cockpit of airplanes. We are depending on the White House to weigh in now with their particular view. In my view, once that cockpit door is secured, never to be opened in flight, a 9/11 could never happen again.

I speak advisedly. In the month of September of last year, I had the privilege of meeting with the chief pilot of El Al, the Israeli airline. That is the one airline in the world—particularly, of course, in the Mideast, where you have suicidal terrorists—that would be subject to a hijacking and people taking over the plane and running it into a building.

They determined years ago the only way to prevent a hijacking was to not give responsibility to the pilots for law and order on the flight itself—namely, a pistol and so forth to overpower any kind of attempted hijacking. Instead, they wanted the pilots to assume the responsibility that the plane would never go into a building or never be hijacked or taken to another country.

Over the last 30 years they have shown this is the right rule: Once the door has been secured, it has never opened in flight.

I can hear the chief pilot of El Al. He said: Senator, I can tell you here and now, if they are assaulting my wife in the cabin, I do not open that door. I go straight to the ground, and law enforcement meets me. And whoever is causing the trouble is off to jail.

As a result, they have not had a hijacking in 30 years. Yes, they have attacked the ticket counter of El Al in Los Angeles. But terrorists don't even hardly make an attempt to hijack an El Al plane because they know that, yes, they could cause trouble with the passengers but not with the crew, not with the plane itself. There is no way to take it over.

Let me embellish on that thought because we had a debate with respect to arming pilots with pistols. Many pilots wanted Congress to allow pistols in the cockpit. The House has passed that, and the Senate on last Thursday voted for that overwhelmingly.

What should be understood is, you have to remove the responsibility from that pilot. In other words, let's assume you have that pistol on the pilots as they walk to and fro; that is another danger. And as they get in transatlantic flights, that is another forbidden practice—those kinds of things need to be considered. But more particularly, if a flight attendant is crying out: They are choking me, they are killing me, open the door. In my opinion, once that door is cracked open, the pilot with the pistol might get off a shot or two. But as we saw on 9/11, there are now teams of suicide terrorists, five-member teams willing to sacrifice one, two, or three people. The pilot might be able to kill three of them, but the other highjackers would still be coming into that cockpit. They would take over that plane once that door is cracked, with pistols, machine guns, whatever else they have up there.

So it has to be categorical and clearly understood. People have criticized me for saying this, but as I come into Reagan National Airport and see the sign, "Welcome to Reagan National, Washington, DC," I would rather have a reflective sign saying, in Arabic: "Try to hijack, go to jail."

People will say: Why are you saying that in Arabic? I use Arabic numerals regularly. I invaded Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia. Incidentally, I have the highest esteem for the country of Tunisia because I traveled there not too long ago, and they have some 65 percent literacy and 80 percent home ownership. And the Foreign Minister told me, when I asked: How in the world did you ever do this? He said: The secret is to let the women vote.

He said: As soon as we allowed women to vote in Tunisia, they wanted better schools for the children. They wanted nice homes for their families.

In World War II, I was one of the first in the African campaign with Colonel Anderson and the 178th Field Artillery. I wasn't in the frontline unit. I am not trying to fudge on his bravery. But we went into Tunisia. Now you can go into the city of Tunis itself and what was the Dust Bowl during the war, looks like a golf course. They have turned the country around.

But the fact is, it was Muslim extremists who overtook the barracks in Lebanon, and who blew up barracks in Saudi Arabia. They blew up our Embassy in Dar es Salaam in Tanzania. They blew up our Embassy in Nairobi, Kenya. They blew up the USS Cole. Almost nine years ago they tried to blow up the World Trade Centers. All of those were Islamic teams that came and caused the blowing up.

So I am justified in saying this. I want those who are blowing us up to understand: try to hijack and go to jail.

As I relate all these particular incidents, I come right to the point of my amendment in the second degree to Senator THOMPSON. I was working, and my staff was working with Senator THOMPSON's staff, to see if it was acceptable to him. He is not with us this afternoon, but we will be glad to talk to him tomorrow and on Thursday because he and I have the same intent. I think we have to fix the responsibility.

There is none better in the history of the United States of America than old Harry Truman. He said: The buck stops here. He put that little sign on his desk.

That has been the trouble. I don't fault President Bush. He didn't know anything before 9/11. He was not properly informed. And having not been properly informed, he could do nothing to have prevented it. So it is not my role this afternoon, on the floor of the Senate, to find fault with the President himself.

But I think we have to fix that responsibility for national security with him. In 1947, and later, as a Presidential directive, and then later in statutory language, the National Security Council was instituted. It says: "the function of the Council shall be to advise the President with respect to the integration of domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to the national security so as to enable the military services and the other departments and agencies of the Government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving the national security."

The problem is the make-up of the National Security Council. On it are the Vice President, Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Defense. It has been in bed some with the Secretary of Treasury. But there are some others, like the Attorney General who should be included. The Attorney General has oversight of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and we know that terrorism is financed by drugs. He has the Border Patrol and the Immigration Service under him. He has all of these entities. He would be the chief Cabinet officer as of this minute for security, unless you get that Secretary of Homeland Security. But it still is going to be his professional teams that ensure security and provide the domestic intelligence that the Council needs.

So that homeland security intelligence, wherever you have it—if you have it at a Bureau or an office of homeland security in the White House, or a Department of Homeland Security with a particular assimilating and analytical role of intelligence, or as a department in Congress itself—wherever you have it, you still are going to have to take whatever analysis, whatever finding, and fuse it at the National Security Council level.

If you were President of the United States, or I were President of the United States, I would only have one particular briefing, one report on my desk. Every hour the President gets them now with respect to political intelligence. He knows what the polls show in Nebraska and what the trends are in South Carolina. He has political polls on November given to him every hour just about. So they are constantly taking that.

I want intelligence polls taken and reported to the President of the United States and fused at the National Security Council. The National Security Council has that responsibility. The particular Department of Homeland Security does not amend that particular statute. In fact, we could pass a Department of Homeland Security in the next 10 minutes and you could have a 9/11, because the very things that went wrong on 9/11 would go wrong again. The very Departments that failed, starting with the CIA is not included in the new Department. The Central Intelligence Agency knew about all of these things I have related. An article in this week's Newsweek says that they knew they had persons who roomed with the suicidal terrorists of 9/11 who commandeered the planes themselves. We know of attempts made to run a plane into the Eiffel Tower.

We know from the Philippines incident that the CIA knew they had planned to run a plane into the CIA building. You can go down the litany—all of this was known before 9/11. The CIA didn't even correlate it, didn't pay attention to it, and certainly didn't pass it on and give it in the briefings to the National Security Council. I can hear Condoleezza Rice, the Director of the National Security Council, saying, "We never got anything specific."

I want to be sure they get something specific. The Department of Homeland Security bill, now being debated on the floor of the Senate, could pass and you would not have any of the Departments included that failed on last September 11.

The CIA failed. The FBI had reports from the field that something is wrong. The field teams said people were coming in and getting flight training, and we ought to be looking into it. It didn't get past the second level. You have Coleen Rowley, from Minneapolis, saying in her memo that they could be flying a plane into the World Trade Towers. We knew the World Trade Towers were vulnerable. They had already attacked them in 1993. Here was a memo again that they didn't pay any attention to. She came all the way to Washington and talked to the folks in the FBI. Nothing was done. We know, of course, the National Security Agency had something that said "Tomorrow is zero hour." That was in Arabic.

People tell me that I will hurt somebody's feelings if I put up a sign in Arabic that reads: try to hijack and go to jail. They say that is typecasting, profiling. Well, I mean to profile. I want it understood. That is exactly what occurred—in Arabic, "Tomorrow is zero hour." They got that on September 10 of last year, but they didn't translate it at the National Security Agency until September 12—after the tragedy.

Here we have everyone running up and down saying we are going to make sure 9/11 never happens again. Not with this bill. You might tinker around with what we already have on course.

Incidentally, of the 170,000 proposed staff for this Department, we already have 110,000 of them together in one Department—the Transportation Department. We had a hearing this morning with Admiral Loy of the Transportation Security Administration. It is a blessing we have him, because he knows what he is doing. He is moving and working. He has the airports, the authority, Republicans and Democrats—everybody pulling together. He solved the biggest problem we have had with respect to airline security. But he has the seaport security, the rail security, and Amtrak—the rail stations, the tunnels, and everything else of that kind; they are all in one Department. We haven't been waiting.

If you had just the homeland security bill and it had an up-or-down vote this minute, without any amendments, I would have to vote against it. I don't want to mislead my constituents and say that I have voted for homeland security, because I know with that bill I have not voted for homeland security; I haven't done anything about the intelligence failures of 9/11 of last year.

So, Mr. President, that is the attempt of my particular amendment—to get the National Security Council beefed up. By beefing up, I mean the President did put out an order in February after he took office last year. You ought to see that particular order. It has included in various forms of the Council, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, the Peace Corps, and everybody else. It was so inclusive as to really confuse rather than fix a responsibility, that the buck stops here.

I want to make it absolutely certain that this particular National Security Council needs to be beefed up, irrespective of whether we pass a Department of Homeland Security, irrespective of whether they put an Office of Homeland Security in the White House, as is presently constituted with Governor Ridge, or whether they call it a bureau—and I certainly would go along with Senator THOMPSON with respect to the matter of confirmation. I know if I were President, I would not want my staff subject to the confirmation and to have to respond to the Congress. You elected me the President, you have given me the responsibility, and the buck stops here. My Chief of Staff, head of my Security Council, and everything else like that, are my choice, and I have my team, and I don't have to worry about the politics over in the legislative branch as to confirmation and being responsible to subpoenas coming over. We cannot subpoena the Director of the National Security Council. We should not be able to just subpoena willy-nilly. They can say we just have to plead executive privilege.

Be that as it may, I think the distinguished Senator from Tennessee is off on the right track. He wants to make sure we don't have all this bureaucracy; in other words, if you are going to have a Department collecting intelligence, you have the CIA collecting intelligence, you have the National Security Council collecting intelligence, and you have got domestic intelligence collected by the FBI.

You have the office in the White House trying to correlate and work with it, but even that correlation has to be fused with international threats, with foreign policy. There is only one place, and that is the National Security Council, as the Congress has already determined and as determined by none other than President Truman himself back in 1947, "The buck stops here." I do not want to have another buck stop in an office here and a department here and another agency there and a CIA agent and a defense intelligence agent over here. We have intelligence coming out of our ears. The reason this is not understood is we do not have an independent Presidential commission investigating 9/11.

I was moved the other evening when we heard former Vice President Mondale emphasize the need for that particular initiative. I joined in that some months back, and I did so advisedly. The reason I do it is when you have the House and the Senate investigate intelligence, you have a political split. It is 50 Republican and 50 Democratic. Having served for 8 years on the Intelligence Committee I can tell you that we had categorical sworn testimony to a certain effect, that was known by the White House, and we had it on two occasions to verify it, but we never could make that public because of 50 percent being Republican. They just did not want it to surface because it was critical.

Incidentally, that same Intelligence Committee staff is not subject to a polygraph. I want to emphasize that for the simple reason that one cannot get a job with the Secret Service unless they are polygraphed. They cannot get a job with the Central Intelligence Agency unless they are polygraphed. They cannot get a job with the FBI unless they are polygraphed. More particularly, they cannot get a job out there as a Capitol policeman unless they take a lie detector test.

I was told that certain information was not revealed to me by the CIA, as a member of the committee, because my staff—not my personal staff but the staff of the Senate Intelligence Committee—had not had the proper clearance.

I will never forget I had a constituent who was arrested in another country, and I was trying to get him out of that arrest. I had to struggle to do it. The country involved said he was an agent of the CIA or had gotten briefings from the CIA. They categorically denied it. It was a year and a half to 2 years later, I went into one country and talked with the station agent. He said: Oh, Senator, you are from South Carolina.

I said: I certainly am. How is that?

He said: Well, I debriefed so and so. He was one of the best we ever had.

That is how I found out about the lie saying that they never knew anything about him.

I served on the Hoover Commission in 1954 under GEN Mark Clark and President Herbert Hoover investigating the intelligence activities of the United States of America. It was the Joe McCarthy days. We went into the CIA, the CID, the Army, Navy, air intelligence, Secret Service, Q clearance, and the Atomic Energy Commission, and all the rest of the intelligence divisions.

I have a slight background in intelligence. There is a lack of coordination. In addition to having the buck stop here, you have to have that coordination, and only the President of the United States can get that coordination. He has to get those involved on the Council. I have talked to Director Mueller of the FBI because I oversee his appropriation. He says he has gotten CIA fellows over there. But then I hear reports that they are not always exchanging the information.

That information exchange and getting it all to the one Commander in Chief to make a decision as to whether or not we have intelligence, for example, with respect to a need to invade Iraq, that has to be centralized, not at the Department of Homeland Security, not at an Office of Homeland Security, but fused at the level of the National Security Council, reporting directly to the President of the United States.

I have included in this amendment, in an advisory capacity to the Council, the Director of the FBI—as is the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency. He is also in an advisory capacity. But that one summary intelligence report that is put on the President's desk early every morning has to have the fused intelligence of domestic as well as foreign intelligence.

There is this idea now that we can beef up and fix that responsibility. I am very much concerned, as I have tried to point out with respect to this particular amendment—I am in step with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee. He is trying to avoid further bureaucracy and further politics with respect to confirmation. You never have the Director of the National Security Council confirmed or the chief of staff. The Presiding Officer of the Senate or this particular Senator would never have our chief of staff or administrative AA assistant confirmed by the Senate. That is just more bureaucracy. I agree with Senator THOMPSON on that. But it still does not fix that responsibility of the buck stopping there and that has to be at the National Security Council level with the President of the United States, and nowhere else. There has to be one place in case we ever have anything that is even like 9/11, instead of people running around finger pointing, saying: This Department said, no, but the CIA did not do it, but the FBI, well, the National Security Agency guy, no, we did not find out from defense intelligence.

They knew. They should have told. We have intelligence, tens of billions of dollars according to what I read in the newspapers. We have all kinds of entities running around with intelligence. Here we are going around and saying we are going to avoid a 9/11 by the institution of a Department of Homeland Security.

So this particular Senator has been working in that field. Namely, we passed 100 to 0, all Republicans and all Democrats, airport security. We got together and we reported out of the Commerce Committee, and it passed the Senate 100 to 0, all Republicans and all Democrats, seaport security. It is hung up over in the House with respect to the conference. I have at the desk rail security in an Amtrak bill by a vote of, I think it was, 20 to 3 out of the committee. So I have been working in this field. I sat down last fall with the new Director of the FBI, Bob Mueller. We gave him $750 million. We said: Straighten out your computers, get those all working, reorganize your department, institute domestic intelligence.

We never wanted to do that. We shied away from domestic intelligence. With the McCarthy days and the witch hunts, the un-American activities and all, we do not want to go down that road. But the terrorism war requires an intelligence effort at the domestic level. Fine, you can have a Department—we have it going right now, to tell the truth, and we are trying to reorganize it under a new Secretary.

According to GAO, it is going to take 5 to 6 years to get it organized right, so we are going to have to depend on what we have.

I have been working in that particular field and just got through with a hearing this morning with the new Administrator of the Transportation Security Administration in the Department of Transportation, and I think we are on course. But we are behind the curve with respect to seaport security. We are behind the curve with respect to rail security, with respect to actual intelligence security and correlating it. This bill absolutely leaves out all of the failures of last year, 9/11, and includes therein all of the good operative entities; namely, that there was nothing wrong with the Coast Guard that would be included in the new Department, there was nothing wrong with FEMA or the agriculture office that would be included in the new Department.

As they said in the Navy during World War II: When in danger, when in doubt, run in circles, scream and shout.

We are running around here. We have a Department going, and it is supposed to govern. I voted for homeland security. You did not. This bill could pass in the next 10 minutes and it would not correct the failings of September 11. My amendment to the Thompson amendment would fix that responsibility at the National Security Council, so the buck would stop there. The President of the United States would have to know what is going on. If he could not find out, this President would get rid of him.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I listened very carefully to the comments of my friend and colleague from South Carolina. Once again he makes a great deal of sense. I look forward to being supportive of his effort.

My colleague from Connecticut, Senator LIEBERMAN, is doing a remarkably fine job managing a very complicated piece of legislation. He deserves great deal of credit for taking on that responsibility. I have not had a chance to speak on the bill as of yet, but I don't want to miss the opportunity of congratulating him and thanking him, and all of our colleagues, for the work he has done and to thank Senator HOLLINGS for his tireless efforts on related matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent we proceed for a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. If the managers will come back and want to yield more, we will be happy to consent to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

MENTAL ILLNESS PARITY

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, the Washington Post on September 9 had an editorial titled "Equity for Mental Illness." I ask unanimous consent this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 9, 2002]

EQUITY FOR MENTAL ILLNESS

Last spring President Bush announced a new commitment to improving mental health care for Americans. He cited unfair limits on treatment as one major obstacle to effective care and pledged to seek legislation by year's end to require that insurance plans treat mental illnesses in the same way they treat other medical ailments. Now time is getting short and the calendar is crowded, but Congress still should approve a parity bill, and Mr. Bush, recalling his pledge, should help make it happen.

This isn't the position we took when we last examined the subject, last year, and many of the issues that troubled us then haven't disappeared. Parity legislation is not a panacea. It won't help the uninsured. There's a risk that, by raising costs, it could cause some employers to weaken or abandon existing coverage or charge employees more for benefits. Congress tends to be much more interested in providing benefits than in dealing with their costs: That's especially true for a mandate like this, in which the costs would be borne almost entirely by the private sector. Businesses wrestling with double-digit increases in health care costs are fighting any move that would add even marginally to the problem.

But two factors now seem to us to outweigh those concerns. The first is practical: Experience in both the federal employees' insurance system and in states that have enacted their own parity laws argues that, by managing care, insurers can move toward equal treatment without crippling cost increases. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that enacting the parity bill now pending in Congress would add just less than one percent to the overall national cost of insurance premiums, though specific costs will vary from business to business depending on what benefits are offered. Insurers, CBO noted this spring, still will be able to exercise the management tools that have been used in the past to decide what treatments are appropriate and warranted, and to hold down expenses. The right response to the gathering health care crisis is to fix the system, not make the mentally ill bear a disproportionate burden.

The second factor is one of fundamental fairness, and of removing the stigma that for too long has shrouded mental illness. Many mental disorders can be clearly diagnosed and effectively treated; some can't. The same can be said of cancers. The pending legislation would require large employers who offer coverage for mental and other illness to handle all disorders in essentially the same way: You can't put treatment limits or financial requirements on mental health benefits that are not imposed on physical ailments. Insurers would not have to pay for what is not medically effective. It's not a huge step, but it would help some people get the treatment they need. It's right to level the field.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I will read the opening paragraph:

Last spring President Bush announced the new commitment to improving mental health care for Americans. He cited unfair treatment as one major obstacle to effective care and pledged to seek legislation to require the insurance plans to treat mental illness in the same way they treat other medical ailments. Now time is getting short and the calendar is crowded, but Congress still should approve a parity bill, and Mr. Bush, recalling his pledge, should help make it happen.

This isn't the position we took when we last examined the subject.

As a coauthor of this legislation with Senator DOMENICI, I am gratified and moved that the Washington Post has come out with a very strong editorial in favor of parity in mental health coverage. This legislation is called the Mental Health Equity Treatment Act, with, by the way, 67 Senators, two-thirds of the Senate, and 243 Representatives, including authors MARGE ROUKEMA and PATRICK KENNEDY, bipartisan in both the Senate and the House, in support of it.

The Washington Post says it is not a be-all or end-all. The Washington Post is absolutely right. But it at least is a huge step toward ending the discrimination. And more or less, I argue, once we have the coverage in the plans, the care will follow the money. And there will be more of an infrastructure of care for people who do not get any help.

I don't know what has happened with the negotiations. There is no stronger advocate than my colleague, Senator DOMENICI. I was excited when the President announced his support. I thought the White House would bring people together and we would have agreement in the House and the Senate and we would pass legislation. Frankly, I have not seen a lot of negotiation take place. It has been a huge disappointment to me. I hope the White House will become fully engaged. It is not too late.

The President went on record as saying: I want to see this legislation passed; I want to see this discrimination ended. We need to see those words backed by action.

What we call the Mental Health Equity Treatment Act has tremendous support. If the White House would become engaged in this, we can pass this legislation. There are any number of different vehicles we still have this month. I believe we can attach this legislation to one of those vehicles and one of those appropriations bills or other pieces of legislation. This legislation will pass. It will pass for a couple of reasons. It will pass because all of the families that have been affected by this illness—and there is not anybody in the Senate or the House who does not have a member of the family who has not been affected one way or the other—have stepped forward. They have become their own leaders. They have become their own citizen lobby. They basically say it is time to end this discrimination. This is major civil rights legislation.

It will pass. Last time, this became part of the Education, Labor, Health and Human Services appropriations bill. Both Senator HARKIN and Senator SPECTER were strong advocates of this matter when it went to conference committee. We had near unanimous support in the Senate. Then it was blocked last session by the House Republican leadership and the White House. But there were a number of Republicans who said: We are very uncomfortable voting against this. Several of them, I believe, have their own personal experiences in their own families or with friends with mental illness. Several of them said: Look, if this comes back a year later and nothing has been done, we do not want to vote against this.

I come to the floor to include this very important editorial in the Washington Post in the Senate RECORD to bring this to my colleagues' attention. This is a change of position on the part of the Washington Post. The Washington Post points this out in their editorial.

Second, I remind the President that he has made a commitment to helping pass this legislation this session, not to put it off year after year after year. I hope he will back his words with the deed, the good Hebrew word, "mitzvah."

Time is not neutral. We do not have a lot of time yet. There is a lot of good will in the Senate, both by Democrats and Republicans. Certainly, one of the key leaders is Senator DOMENICI. Nobody has done more. I mention MARGE ROUKEMA and PATRICK KENNEDY on the House side. Senator REID has done so much work. I could go on and on. The White House has been semi-missing in action. We need them to become engaged. I have no doubt we can pass this in the Senate either on its own or as part of this appropriations bill or another bill. I worry there would be an effort to block it.

I think the President can do something wonderful. I think he can do something very positive. I think not only would he get a tremendous amount of support in the Senate and the House, but he would get a lot of support from families and people all across the country.

For my own part, working with my colleague, Senator DOMENICI, I am ready to put this amendment on to a bill. I am ready to do that. Certainly, we are going to do that in the Senate. We are going to get this into a conference committee. If we get the support from the President, we will pass this legislation. It would be win-win-win.

The insurance industry will not love it. That is true. They will not be in love with it. But it will be a win for the White House for doing something very good for people. It will be a win for both Democrats and Republicans, Republicans and Democrats. Most important of all, it will make a positive difference in the lives of many families and many people across this country.

Let's get this done. Let's get the support from the White House. Mr. President, you said you were all for this. We need you. We need you to be engaged. We need you to exert leadership. We need your support. If we get your support, we will pass this legislation.

As we look toward September 11, and commemorate this tragic day in America's history, we can be proud of the way in which the American people rallied to support those who suffered such unspeakable losses in their lives. Many of us still feel the shock and the fear of that day, and while we can take great pride in the ways in which our country has recovered, we know that for many, the grief and the trauma is still sharp and constant. We know more about how such events can leave scars on the psyche of a country, as well as individuals. We know that many who had suffered from mental illness prior to September 11 may find they need treatment again. We know that many in New York and other parts of our country are suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder. We show our strength as Americans when we respond not only with our strength and outrage toward the perpetrators of this horror, but also with compassion and support toward the victims.

I was pleased to sponsor support for programs that provided emergency mental health care for survivors and emergency workers and their families in the Senate's bioterrorism bill and other legislation. But we know that more is needed to improve the overall infrastructure of mental health care in our country's response to terrorism. People with mental illness are routinely denied decent mental health care. They are required to pay more for their care, and are given less access, simply because their illness is located in the brain, and not in another part of the body. While we can be proud as a country for our ongoing fight to reduce stigma against the mentally ill, we here in Congress should not be so proud. Nor should the President. We have not yet done our job in truly helping those with mental illness by ensuring full mental health parity in insurance coverage.

The Mental Health Equitable Treatment Act, which I have sponsored with Senator PETE DOMENICI, is poised to pass in this congress. This bill is more than ready to move forward and to be signed by the President. S. 543 enjoys the support of two-thirds of the Senate, 67 Senators, the majority of the House, 243 Representatives, and about 250 organizations representing health care, education, law enforcement, disability, religious organizations, and many others. On June 6, more than 2,000 people rallied at the Capitol in 100 degree heat to demand that this legislation move forward. On April 29, President Bush publicly proclaimed his support for full mental health parity and vowed to work with Congress to make sure he signed a full mental health parity bill this year.

And today, the Washington Post, which has historically questioned the value of mental health parity, reversed its position in support of full mental health parity. The Post states on its editorial page, "Now time is getting short and the calendar is crowded, but Congress still should approve a bill, and Mr. Bush, recalling his pledge, should help make it happen."

Throughout this Congress, I have continued to work with Senator DOMENICI, and with Senator KENNEDY, who, as Chair of the HELP committee, has been so helpful in moving this bill forward. Senator DASCHLE has stated many times that this legislation is one of the priority issues for the Senate floor. I have worked with White House staff to help clarify the intention of Congress in shaping this legislation—that we expect it to be a comprehensive bill that does not discriminate against people by diagnosis. We have been open and available to discussing issues of concern to other members and the White House. But we are still waiting? Why? Because the opponents of this bill—the insurance industry—continue to try to influence their friends at the White House and on Capitol Hill to either kill this bill, or weaken it so much that it would provide very little help to those who are praying for its passage.

Every argument the opponents have tried to put forward—whether it is cost, or science, or treatment effectiveness—every one of these arguments has been fought and won by the supporters of this bill. Opponents have challenged the CBO cost estimate of this bill not once, not twice, but three times, to no avail. The cost of S. 543 is low: the estimated increase in premiums for full mental health parity, covering all diagnoses, is 0.9 percent.

The opposition also distorts the purpose and intention of the bill by trying to limit it to only 5 percent of mental illness diagnoses. They know there is no scientific or even economic basis for restricting coverage in this way, but they continue these destructive methods as one more way to try to kill the bill. They resort to ridicule by trivializing the pain and reality of mental illness and the toll it takes on the lives of those with this illness and their families. This is an outrage, and we cannot allow such tactics to destroy the democratic process.

We all are very aware of how much work is remaining on our Senate calendar, much of which is so important to our country. But here, in this piece of legislation, we can show true bipartisan support, along with solidarity with the President, for those with mental illness. This bill will help those with chronic mental illnesses, those with acute depression, anxiety, or PTSD resulting from the trauma of September 11, children with autism or eating disorders, and the millions of other Americans with mental illness. Without treatment, mental illness can worsen, and can even lead to death. We cannot as a country allow people with mental illness to be treated as second-class citizens any longer. As the Post said today, "The right response to the gathering health care crisis is to fix the system, not make the mentally ill bear a disproportionate burden."

When President Bush spoke in support of full mental health parity, we in the Senate had already done our job. We had invested many months in bipartisan meetings to shape a bill that respected the business community, the insurance industry, and the needs of those with mental illness. This is why this bill has the support of the majority of Congress and about 250 organizations who represent millions of Americans.

It is time for President Bush to speak again, to publicly support this bipartisan, bicameral bill that clearly has the support of the American people. The House has finally held hearings on this, and I want to thank those committees for doing so. The hearings made it possible for witnesses to expose the arguments of the insurance industry for what they are. The opposition is based on nothing more than discrimination and protecting the corporate bottom line.

I want President Bush to be confident that he has my continued support to do everything possible to pass this legislation. But I ask him now to follow through on the promise he made in New Mexico to support full mental health parity. This legislation is ready to move forward. The President asked to sign a full mental health parity bill. There is nothing stopping this bill except the politics of the insurance industry. I ask President Bush to put the needs of those suffering from mental illness first, to help prevent further suffering and deaths, and to ease the pain of those scarred by September 11 by helping to make treatment available to those who need it. I ask him to urge Republican Congressional leaders to support this legislation. I ask him to endorse S. 543/H.R. 4066.

Within the constraints of the Senate calendar, this bill may move forward independently, or we may again attach it to an appropriations bill, as we did last year. With the tremendous support for this bill on and off the Hill, we have these options. However, when the bill moved forward on LHHS appropriations in 2001, 10 House members voted to kill this bill, and President Bush wrote a letter to Senator DOMENICI promising to help pass it this year. I ask the President to follow through on that promise. I ask him to prevent the insurance lobby from killing this bill again. Our country needs this legislation, and the majority of Americans have made it clear that they want it now.

I look forward to the day when people with mental illness receive decent, humane, and timely mental health care. It will be a good day for our country. I ask the President to make sure that this day comes soon.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I know there are Senators who wish to travel to their States to accommodate the remembrance ceremonies with which many are involved tomorrow. As a result of that understanding and in appreciation of the need for travel, it is my expectation to withhold scheduling any additional votes today and then to announce that there will be no votes tomorrow.

So Senators who have an interest in traveling are welcome to do so. We have had a number of requests from Senators on both sides of the aisle. To accommodate those requests, that will be the decision.

There will be votes early, at least I should say midmorning, on Thursday. Senators should be prepared to come and participate in debate and be prepared to vote as early as 10 or 10:30 on Thursday.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ASSESSING IRAQ'S MILITARY CAPABILITIES

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, as we approach the anniversary of the September 11 tragedy, our Nation is in the midst of a national debate about war with Iraq.

I am sure the presiding Senator recalls, as I do, graphically, that day just a year ago, on September 11, when the Capitol Building was evacuated. During the course of that evacuation, it finally hit me, as I stood on the grass outside the Capitol and was looking at this building, I was looking at the last building ever invaded by a foreign army on the continental United States soil, when the British attacked the Capitol during the War of 1812. That struck me as I stood there and reflected that once again an enemy had struck the United States home.

I never would have imagined, when I came to work that week, that by the end of the week I would be voting unanimously with my colleagues in the Senate, Democrats and Republicans, to give to the President of the United States the authority to go to war and the resources to go to war. It happened so quickly, but it was the right thing to do. We understood that the United States was in peril, was in danger—and still is—from the forces of terrorism around the world. We stood as one, in a bipartisan way, to back the President, to fight this war on terrorism, to go after those who were responsible for the September 11 tragedy which struck the United States.

Now, here we are a year later. The war on terrorism continues. Few, if any, would say that it is resolved or that we have won it. And we are debating the possibility of another war against another enemy. Osama bin Laden has not been captured or accounted for. The major leaders in al-Qaida are still on the loose somewhere. We believe al-Qaida still has a network of sleepers in 60 nations around the world. Afghanistan, the first battleground in the war against terrorism in the 21st century, is still not a stable and safe country. Hamid Karzai, the President of Afghanistan, barely survived an assassination attempt last week. We have thousands of American troops still on the ground there. I had the honor to meet with some of them last January; our hearts and prayers are with them every single day. But that war on terrorism still continues.

Yet the administration comes forward and tells us we still have to think about the possibility of another war, in this case a war against Iraq. Indeed, it is possible that within a few days or maybe a few weeks the people of the United States of America, through their Members of Congress, will be asked to vote on whether to go to war against Iraq. It is hard to believe the events are moving so quickly that we would be declaring a second war within little more than a year of the September 11 attack.

Last Sunday on "Meet the Press," Vice President CHENEY indicated that the administration would like the Congress to vote on Iraq prior to adjourning this October. Do you realize that is a matter of weeks—weeks, before we would be called on to make this momentous decision? Because this is not a matter of high-altitude bombing when it comes to Iraq. We wouldn't have the luxury of that type of warfare. We are talking about, in the President's words, "regime change." We are talking about removing Saddam Hussein from power, not peacefully but with force. That would involve, I am afraid, land forces invading, the type of war we have not seen in many decades in the United States.

We recall the Persian Gulf war. It was a much different situation, a little over 10 years ago, precipitated by Saddam Hussein's invasion and occupation of Kuwait: The formation of a coalition led by the United States but also with the United Nations and allies around the world, including many Arab States who joined us.

We fought to remove Saddam Hussein from Kuwait. We were successful in doing that. We had logistical support. We positioned our troops in Saudi Arabia and nearby. We had a broad coalition. We were forcing Saddam Hussein out of a territory he had occupied.

This is a far different challenge if we invade Iraq—different in that the coalition today consists of England and the United States, and no others. Logistical support is hard to find because the countries surrounding Iraq have basically told us they will not support us in this effort. Frankly, we would be fighting Saddam Hussein on his own territory, which gives him a home field advantage, which most military experts concede. Would we be successful ultimately? Yes—at some cost and at some price over some period of time. I have no doubt the American military—the very best in the world. Hussein would be gone. I can't tell you what it would cost.

In the midst of the Kuwait situation, Saddam Hussein didn't use chemical and biological weapons, which we believe he has, but instead he decided to fire Scud missiles on Israel—kind of a third party to this conversation—hoping, I am sure, that he would destabilize the Middle East and cause such an uproar and consternation that the United States would withdraw. It didn't work. Sadly, Israelis died in the process.

This time, we are not talking about moving Iraqi troops out of Kuwait but actually killing and capturing Saddam Hussein. To what lengths would he go in response? What victims would he seek? He doesn't have missiles to reach the United States, but he has the capacity to train what missiles he does have on nearby neighbors such as Israel.

Vice President CHENEY said that before the October adjournment, Congress would be asked to "take a position and support whatever the President needs to have done in order to deal with this very critical problem."

By most definitions, that is article I, section 8, clause 11, of the Constitution which gives the Congress, and the Congress alone, the power to declare war. The people who wrote that Constitution—the Founding Fathers—had seen a king in action, a king who had dragged his country into wars, and said that the United States would be different. We will never have a President to take us into a war. The American people will make that choice through Members of Congress—Members of the House elected every 2 years, and the Senate every 6 years. They will make the call, and do it very explicitly.

Vice President CHENEY is saying to Congress: It is your turn to make this decision.

The decision to go to war is the most significant decision any government can make, and Congress plays an essential role. We and the executive branch need to have all the relevant facts analyzed as thoroughly and objectively as possible before making the decision to put America's military men and women in harm's way.

Senior administration officials publicly identified Iraq's development of weapons of mass destruction and the potential of Iraq's transfer of these weapons to terrorist groups as the primary threat to our Nation. Ultimately, our Government must rely on the intelligence community to make the most thorough and unbiased analytic assessment of the current and projected status of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction infrastructure, regardless of whether the analytic judgments conform or conflict with stated U.S. policy. In other words, we are saying that the intelligence community should give us the unvarnished truth, tell us what Iraq has and its likely capability.

It is interesting, if you look at the countries that the Bush administration designated as part of the axis of evil—North Korea, Iran, and Iraq—of the three, the military capabilities of North Korea and Iran far surpass the capability of Iraq. We know that in the case with North Korea, and probably Iran as well, they have nuclear weapons today. We also know they are working on developing long-range missiles. We believe North Korea is the closest to developing missiles which could make it to the shores of the United States. But we think Iran is trying to do the same thing.

All that I am telling you is a matter of public information. We know this. We know what their capability is. When you look at the status of the three countries which the President said are the axis of evil, Iraq clearly ranks third. If all three are threats and enemies to the United States, why is it that the administration has focused in on Iraq, which to our knowledge does not have nuclear weapons today nor the ability to deliver any type of long-range weaponry against the United States?

As a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, I am deeply concerned that the intelligence community has not completed the most basic document which is asked of them before the United States makes such a critical life-or-death decision.

It is within the power of the Director of the CIA, George Tenet, to order a national intelligence estimate, known as an NIE. National intelligence estimates bring together all the agencies of the Federal Government involved in intelligence, sits them down, and collects and coordinate all of their information to reach the best possible conclusion he can come up with.

I was stunned to learn last week that we have not produced a national intelligence estimate showing the current state of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. What is incredible, with all of the statements made by members of this administration about those weapons, is the fact that the intelligence community has not been brought together.

If we learned anything from September 11 of last year, we learned, when it came to the intelligence out there at the FBI and the CIA and other agencies, that no one ever brought it together. Had we been able to bring it together by September 10, could we have avoided September 11? I am not sure. I wouldn't say that. But we certainly would have appreciated the threat a lot better, and perhaps we would have been prepared a lot better. Maybe—just maybe—we might have avoided some or all of the tragedy. But we didn't do it.

Time and again since then as we looked back on last year, we have said we have to be better prepared, with better communications and better coordination of information from outside the country and inside, and bring it all together so we can make the best decision.

When we are talking about a possible invasion of Iraq and a war against Iraq, why haven't we really created the most basic document that we have the power to create in this Government—the national intelligence estimate—so we know exactly what we may be up against in Iraq? It has not been done.

This morning, I handed a letter to the deputy to Director Tenet asking that he give it to the Director personally, asking that they move as quickly as possible to establish and create this national intelligence estimate. Once it is established, I think we should meet on Capitol Hill—the Senate and the House Intelligence Committees. We should have classified hearing on things that can't be discussed publicly about this NIE, and then a public hearing as well to share with the American people, without compromising in any way the safety and security of the United States, as much information as we possibly can about the current state of affairs in Iraq.

National intelligence estimates are the Director of Central Intelligence's most authoritative written judgments concerning national security issues. They contain the coordinated judgments of the entire intelligence community regarding the likely course of future events. They provide not just a snapshot of a particular national security problem today but a coordinated assessment of how that problem might evolve over the next several years. This is the vital policy planning tool for our Nation's policymakers.

Let me tell you the many components of the U.S. intelligence community are worthy agencies. Each and every one of them does a good job of intelligence collection—the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the Department of State Intelligence and Research Bureau, and the Department of Energy's Intelligence Office which is critical to doing an assessment of nuclear capability, and the National Security Agency, just to name a few. They provide analytic assessments on an hour-to-hour, day-to-day basis. They can tell us better than any other group the current situation in Iraq. We need to know what their consensus opinion is before we decide in advance whether or not this war should be undertaken. I firmly believe that policymakers in both the executive branch and the Congress—the President, the White House, the Department of Defense, the Department of State, and the Congress—would benefit from the production of a coordinated consensus document produced by all relevant components of the intelligence community on the current and projected status of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

The letter I sent to Director Tenet asked him to initiate this process as quickly as possible and to produce the NIE within several weeks. I requested that an unclassified summary of it be produced, as has been done in the past, so the American public can better understand this vitally important national security issue.

Let me tell you that during the time I served in the Congress—the House and the Senate—there is no moment I recall with more pain in my heart than the debate a little over 10 years ago about the Persian Gulf war. After we persuaded President Bush's father to follow the Constitution, to come to Congress and to seek the authority of the American people and the permission and approval of Congress before initiating that war, we then engaged in a debate—a long debate. I think virtually every Member of the House of Representatives took the floor over a 2- or 3-day period of time. The House met continuously. In that period of time, each of us stood in the well of the House of Representatives—as we did in the Senate Chamber here—and spoke our hearts about the challenge we faced and the vote we faced. We knew that if a vote were cast to go to war, innocent people would die and that American soldiers and American sailors and marines and airmen would have their lives on the line.

It meant a lot to me personally because of a friend of mine, who was a Marine at the time—I knew his parents well. They were from Springfield, IL. I had known his mother and father for many years. They came to me early on when the debate got started and said: We are worried to death about our son. Really, our hope for the future of our family is in the Marines. He is there in the Persian Gulf, and we sure don't want to see anything happen to him.

I assured them that I would think about him constantly as I made my decision on the Persian Gulf war. Of course, we all recall what happened. Finally, after the approval was given, the war was initiated. The land war did not take but 2 or 3 days and it was over. And I thought, at the time, what a great relief it was to be able to call his parents and tell them that it had ended so quickly and so well.

Little did I know that Christian Porter of the U.S. Marine Corps from Springfield, IL, was one of the several hundred American casualties in that war. This young man, whom we all worried about so much, was the victim of friendly fire.

I went to his funeral service in Springfield and to the veterans cemetery afterwards. My heart was broken for that family. But it was a good reminder for this Member of Congress—now a Member of the Senate—to remember what war is all about. It is about the potential loss of life of many innocent people. It is about being in harm's way for many Americans in uniform.

We have to take this responsibility very seriously. And if we are going to take it seriously, we must insist, in Congress, that the administration produce the clear and convincing evidence that an invasion of Iraq is the only option available to us to bring this potential threat under control.

If this administration cannot produce a National Intelligence Estimate which comes to that same conclusion, then, frankly, those of us who have listened to the heavy rhetoric over the last several weeks will understand that, when it comes to the evidence, there is something lacking.

It is time for the administration to rise to the occasion, to produce this evidence, as has been asked for and been produced so many times in the past when America's national security was at risk. We cannot accept anything less than that before any Member of the House or the Senate is asked to vote on this critical question of going to war.

We have to say to the administration: Bring forward your best evidence and your best arguments so that, ultimately, when we make this momentous and historic decision, we can go back to the States and people who we represent and say that we have dispatched our responsibility in a credible, good-faith manner, that we have done everything possible to understand the nature of the threat, and the best response of the United States.

War is the last option. We have to know every element before we make that decision. We have to exhaust every other opportunity before we reach it.

On Thursday, the President will be at the United Nations in New York. I am certain he is going to remind them that Saddam Hussein is a thug, that he has been a threat to his own people, to the region, and to people around the world with his weapons of mass destruction. He will, undoubtedly, remind them of his cruel invasion of Kuwait, which mobilized the United Nations to defeat him and to displace his troops from Kuwait. He will, undoubtedly, remind them of what has happened since: when the United Nations resolution, which condemns and prohibits Iraq from ever having weapons of mass destruction, has been ignored by Saddam Hussein; how the inspectors, some 4 years ago, were pushed out of his country; and how this man has literally, as a thug, ruled this nation in a manner and form that most civilized countries in the world find reprehensible.

All of those things, I will concede, are true. But the next question facing the United Nations and facing the United States and its people, through its elected representatives in Congress, is: Is it the right thing for us to do?

We cannot make the right decision without the best information. And the production of the National Intelligence Estimate will give us that information.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STAYING IN TOUCH WITH THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, the President talks a lot about the coffee shop in Crawford, TX, which brings to mind Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy's Smokehouse in West Virginia where I have been talking with people for a long time. You ought to come down to that shop sometime—Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy's Smokehouse. I talk with those people quite often. We have one of those in every State, I suppose. I suppose each of the Senators here has a coffee shop such as the one in Crawford, TX, or like Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy's Smokehouse in their State. So I have one of those.

It is good to get back home and kind of get the feel of the people and "press the flesh" a little, as Lyndon Johnson used to say, and know what they are saying back there in that coffee shop.

But, Madam President, despite all of his talk about staying in touch with the people at the coffee shop in Crawford, TX, the President seems to have lost touch with the needs of the American people. I worry that the extra caffeine must have affected the President's ability to take the pulse of America. After looking at some of the administration's actions over the past few weeks, I am almost certain of it.

At almost every turn, the President seems to be a day late and a dollar short. Let me just give a few examples. On July 16, the House added $700 million of supplemental funding to the Interior bill to fight fires that are raging across this Nation. The administration, through the Office of Management and Budget, wrote to the Congress and strongly objected to that funding. Yet on August 28—just 6 weeks later—the President requested $825 million for emergency firefighting funding. It is a complete about-face.

In mid-July, the White House, through the Office of Management and Budget, again pressed Congress to reduce the size of the supplemental that was then in conference. The OMB Director, Mitch Daniels, recommended that conferees on the bill reduce funding for the Transportation Security Administration by $219 million. The conferees acceded to the administration's request. Yet on September 3—just 6 weeks later—the President requested that $219 million and an additional $327 million for the Transportation Security Administration. That is $546 million that, 6 weeks earlier, the administration did not think was necessary.

In late July, Congress approved $200 million for economic assistance to Israel and $50 million of disaster assistance for Palestinians, which was not requested by the President. The President had until September 1 to designate the funds as emergency and, thus, make the funds available to spend. The President rejected the funding on September 1. He could have had it then. All he needed to do was sign his name. No, he rejected it on September 1. But 2 days later, on September 3, the President requested—you guessed it—$250 million for the very same purpose. Are we seeing a pattern here? It is as plain as the noonday Sun on a cloudless sky. On September 4, the administration wrote Congress to stress its desire for Congress to restrain spending by keeping spending for the fiscal year that begins October 1 to a level of $759 billion, and yet on August 2 and September 3 the President requested $1.3 billion of additional funding and proposed no offsets for that spending.

The Congressional Budget Office now estimates that the President has requested $760.5 billion for the fiscal year that begins October 1, and yet the President insists we spend only $759 billion—that far and no farther, $759 billion. This President seems to rely on the same types of accounting techniques with regard to homeland security that are causing such problems in corporate America.

The President and his administration love to tell Americans that we are constantly at risk of new terrorist attacks. The President's Cabinet members have been out in great force time and time again putting the country on alert for a possible terrorist attack. We have been told to watch the bridges, watch the fuel trucks, watch the banks. Remember the little boy who cried wolf too often, too many times?

So we are constantly at risk, the administration says. In fact, just this afternoon the administration raised the Nation's level of alert from yellow to orange, believing there is a high risk for a terrorist attack.

I have been thinking that, too. I suppose most people in this country have been concerned about that as well. Apparently, security concerns have grown by such an extent in the last 24 hours that Americans at home and around the world are being told to be extra vigilant and alert. Specifically, the Attorney General pointed to new threats aimed at embassies overseas, at our Nation's transportation network, and at the symbols and monuments of our country. That is why Congress overwhelmingly included in the emergency supplemental package $10 million for embassy security. That is why Congress passed $17.7 million for security at the Washington Monument and the Jefferson Memorial. That is why Congress approved $150 million for airport security. That is why Congress approved another $42 million for security at air traffic control towers.

Congress has not been asleep at the wheel. Congress has been acting like Paul Revere in saying: Alert, rise, for the day is passing, and you lie sleeping on. Others have girded their armor and forth to battle have gone. So Congress has been sounding this alert. That is why Congress approved $150 million for airport security and another $42 million for security at air traffic control towers, but the administration rejected those items and labeled them as wasteful spending.

Wasteful, my foot. There is nothing wasteful about investing in the security of the American people. Hear me down there at the other end of the avenue. Hear me, Mr. President. There is nothing wasteful about investing in the security of the American people who send us to Washington, whose taxes pay the bills, whose sons and daughters give their blood in wars—the American people.

The only thing wasted by the President's rejection of these funds is time, time necessary to put these dollars to work and put them to work rightly, prudently, carefully, to put these dollars to work and to protect American lives.

The administration is right to warn America when it learns of new, credible terrorist threats, whether at home or abroad. However, Americans must have the tools to secure our homeland. The homeland defense problem cannot be solved simply by moving boxes around on an organizational flowchart or by "now you see it, now you don't" funding shenanigans.

A few weeks ago, Congress approved $2.5 billion for homeland defense programs, $2.5 billion that was put into legislation by this Senate through its Appropriations Committee, in a bipartisan display of support; $2.5 billion for homeland defense programs to secure our ports, our river ports, our seaports, to secure our airports, to secure our nuclear facilities, to train and equip our Nation's police and firefighters. Those are the people who ran up the steps, those are the people who sought to protect the lives of others, and those are the people who gave their own lives to save the lives of others. Those are the people who have now left widows and orphans, happy dreams forever gone. That is what Congress was thinking of when we put that money in the bill. This funding would have addressed the very security concerns the administration outlined this very afternoon.

The first question that was ever asked in the history of the human race was, "Where art thou?" When God came in the cool of the day, walking in the Garden of Eden looking for Adam,

Adam was in hiding. God said, "Adam, where art thou?" That was the first question that was ever asked in the history of the human race: "Adam, where art thou?"

I say, where were you? The people will say to the administration, where were you? Where were you when the Congress passed that measure providing $2.5 billion for the security, for the welfare, and for the protection of the American people? Where were you, Mr. President? Where were you? It was up to you. Just the signature of a name would have given the $2.5 billion to the firefighters, the policemen, the health emergency people, would have given you that money for the protection of our nuclear facilities, for the protection of our ports of entry, for better border security to the north, for better border security to the south, for more food inspectors. Why did you turn your back on that money for the security of the American people?

I say again, that funding would have addressed the very security concerns the administration outlined this afternoon. Yet on September 1, the President chose to cancel those funds, turn his back on those funds, push them away. I wonder what goes into that coffee in Crawford?

Today, the Senate passed a drought relief amendment by a 79-to-16 margin. This amendment would provide disaster assistance to our Nation's farmers and ranchers in the face of unprecedented drought. That ought to be pretty easy to understand. I have lived in northern Virginia now for 50 years, the same number of years that I have served in Congress. In those 50 years, I don't recall ever such a drought as we have experienced and such weather as we have experienced as this year. I have been accustomed to pulling up my tomato plants, cutting up the stems, and putting them in the trash bags to be hauled away by the garbage truck. And I have been accustomed to doing that in mid-September or late September. This year, forget it. I did it in mid-August. Those vines were dying. The blossoms that had come earlier had never flowered into tomatoes. Don't think I am a great tomato producer. I only have three or four vines. I have planted as many as seven or eight during the years I have been in McLean, but that is just from a wee tomato farmer.

This is a drought. I have lived now 85 years, lacking a very few days—85 years. I have seen something happening out in the heavens as we witnessed pestilences and droughts, floods and fires. Something has happened. This was an unprecedented drought as far as I am concerned. I am probably not going to put out any tomato plants next year. The country will not miss my tomato plants, but the country misses the signature on that $2.5 billion that would have been turned loose, that would have been there for the country, for the protection of the people, for all these items and more that I have mentioned.

Yet the President has told our farmers and ranchers that he opposes this funding. How about that? He has told the farmers and ranchers he opposes this funding. But he did not oppose a $1.3 trillion tax cut that goes for the most part to the wealthiest in this country. Those people never lived on my side of the tracks, the people who are going to be the beneficiaries of most of that tax cut. They did not come from my side of the tracks. No, the people on my side of the tracks have not reaped any benefit from that tax cut. My side of the tracks, yes, had a coffee shop on that side, too, but not many people could afford 5 cents for the cup of coffee.

So when the President tells our farmers and ranchers he opposes this funding, without this help many farms and ranches will dry up and disappear. Congress knows how to take the pulse of the Nation and to respond to the needs of the people. There are people in this Congress who may have lived on the other side of the tracks, mingled with people not just in the Crawford coffee shop but in Uncle Josh's and Aunt Nancy's Smokehouse from where the common people, the ordinary people come.

If we wait for the President to change his mind, there may be no pulse to take for our farmers and ranchers. Once again, the President seems to be a day late and a dollar short. It is time for the administration to wake up and smell the coffee.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I understand that on my call for regular order, we go back to the pending bill. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SPECTER. Then I do call for the regular order.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. REID. Was there a unanimous consent request, Madam President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked for the regular order.

Mr. REID. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, H.R. 5005.

Mr. REID. If my friend would allow me to speak, it is my understanding that we were in a period of morning business with Senators allowed to speak for up to 10 minutes each. Would it not take consent to get out of that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business occurs by consent. The regular order was the legislation.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I think I have the floor. If I might just comment, what I would like to do is speak on the bill.

Mr. REID. We would like to hear you speak. But I say to my friend, there would be no amendments. We have the Thompson amendment pending, and we would have to have consent to set that aside, or I guess you could offer a second-degree to Senator THOMPSON's amendment. But you are not planning to offer an amendment?

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I don't plan to offer any amendments or anything unusual. I want to make some comments on the pending bill. I don't plan to do anything that would require the presence of anybody here to safeguard their interests. I don't wish to do anything that would be construed as contrary to anybody's interest. I would like to have people here who are on the bill.

Mr. REID. I only say I am sorry I have to leave the floor because I would love to hear the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I say this as affirmatively and sincerely as possible. The Senator always makes statements that are good and direct, and I am sorry to have interrupted him, but I didn't know what was going on.

Mr. SPECTER. I am sorry the Senator from Nevada will not be here to hear my presentation, but there are 97 other Senators who could come. Counting the Presiding Officer and myself and the Senator from Nevada, that leaves 97 others. That is probably more people than are watching on C-SPAN 2, as a matter of fact, Madam President.

AMENDMENT NO. 4513

The pending amendment seeks to speak to the provisions of the bill relating to a National Office for Combating Terrorism, and I believe the thrust of the provisions for this national office are well founded as a coordinating mechanism. But after discussing the matter in some detail with the author of the bill, the distinguished senior Senator from Florida, and considering the views of the President, who does not want to have a confirmed officer in the West Wing but is looking for an adviser, as former Governor Ridge who is now his adviser, as Dr. Condoleezza Rice is the National Security Adviser—it seems to me there are strong reasons for us to avoid this legislation to have a Secretary of Homeland Security who will be confirmed and then have a Director for the National Office for Combating Terrorism, because all of these duties, in my opinion, can be handled by the Secretary of Homeland Security. So the objectives which the senior Senator from Florida seeks to accomplish can be accomplished without adding this additional office. I know the President does not want another officer confirmed by the Senate. He didn't want one in the first place, and didn't want a Department of Homeland Security, but now has acceded.

Senator LIEBERMAN and I introduced the legislation for a Department of Homeland Security and a Secretary of Homeland Security last October, and eventually the President acceded to that necessity, and there is now a bill on the floor.

But as I look over the responsibilities which the senior Senator from Florida has assigned to the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, it is my view that these duties can be handled by the Secretary of Homeland Security. The responsibilities which are set out in section 201(c):

To develop national objectives and policies for combating terrorism.

I think that is an appropriate function for the Secretary.

To direct . . . [the] assessment of terrorist threats and vulnerabilities to those threats . . .

Again, I think that is something that can be handled by the Secretary.

To coordinate . . . the implementation . . . of the Strategy by agencies with responsibilities for combating terrorism . . .

Again, I think that is something the Secretary can do.

To work with agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, to ensure that appropriate actions are taken to address vulnerabilities identified by the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection within the Department.

Again, that is something which the Secretary can handle.

To coordinate, with the advice of the Secretary, the development of a comprehensive annual budget for the programs and activities under the Strategy, including the budgets of the military departments and agencies within the National Foreign Intelligence Program relating to international terrorism . . .

That can be handled by the Secretary. In fact, this provision calls for coordination with the Secretary.

The provision does exclude military programs, projects or activities relating to force protection. This is a controversial item, as to whether there ought to be somebody with budget authority. I think it is a good idea. Right now there is diverse budget authority with a larger share of it on the intelligence agencies coming out of the Department of Defense. I believe it would be very useful to have that centralized.

When I chaired the Intelligence Committee in the 104th Congress, I proposed legislation which would have brought all of the intelligence agencies under one umbrella, the Central Intelligence Agency. Now I think there is an opportunity to do that with the new Department of Homeland Security since we are taking a fresh look at this area. I know there are objections to giving budget authority to anyone on an overall basis, but it would be my hope that this provision would stay—but it would stay under the dominion of the Secretary of Homeland Security.

The other responsibilities of the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism are:

To exercise funding authority for Federal terrorism prevention and response agencies . . . .

Simply, all of the functions of the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, in my view, can be handled by the Secretary of Homeland Security. I think those objectives are sound.

It is my hope that we will legislate here to put under the umbrella of the Secretary of Homeland Security the necessary authority to protect against terrorists. It is my judgment that had all of the dots been under one umbrella, there would have been a veritable blueprint for what happened on September 11 and that September 11 might well have been prevented. This is the time, with the new Department of Homeland Security to be established, that we have a chance to implement what so many people have proposed.

My idea to bring all of the intelligence agencies under one umbrella in the legislation, which I proposed in the 104th Congress when I chaired the Intelligence Committee, is an idea which has been proposed by many. At the moment, there is on the President's desk a comprehensive proposal to accomplish just that. But the reality is that the turf wars involving the various agencies are so fierce that this is never accomplished. Now we have a chance to do it.

Had the one umbrella been present to identify the FBI Phoenix memorandum—where there was a flight student with a big picture of Osama bin Laden and indicators of potential terrorist activity—had that, combined with the two men identified, who were later hijackers on September 11, in Kuala Lumpur where the CIA never told the FBI or the INS—had that been added to the records—the National Security Agency got it on September 10; it wasn't translated as a threat that something would happen the next day, perhaps later, until the 12th—especially with the information which could have been obtained, had a warrant been issued for the computer of Zacarias Moussaoui and for the search of his premises—there was a virtual treasure trove of information linking Moussaoui to al-Qaida.

We have learned a very different lesson from 9/11. Now is the time for the Congress to change it. We simply have to override the various Federal agencies that are fighting for their turf. The stakes now are too serious.

We have an enormous responsibility in the Congress to do everything we can to see to it that there is no recurrence of 9/11. We have action to be taken if there is a biological attack. We have worked on various antidotes for various biological weapons—smallpox and anthrax. But if we have to respond, it is a 99 percent loss. What we have to do is prevent it.

The intelligence agencies that want to maintain their own sovereignty just ought to change that attitude. The legislation which has been proposed would put all of these analysis sections under the Secretary of Homeland Security. That is what ought to be done. That can be done in this bill.

There was a meeting on July 31 with the President, Governor Ridge, and Members of Congress, where we talked about these ideas.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, there is a critical line on the letter I have written to Governor Ridge. I will read just a little bit of it.

Dear Tom:

I was very pleased to hear the President's affirmative response yesterday to the proposal to have analysts from every intelligence agency (CIA, FBI, DIA, etc.) under the umbrella of the Department of Homeland Security with the Secretary having the authority to direct those intelligence agencies to supply his Department with the requisite intelligence data.

This doesn't mean that Homeland Security will have authority over CIA agents. They will remain with the CIA. It doesn't mean the Secretary of Homeland Security would have the direction of the FBI agents or any other agents. They will all remain in their Departments. But the analysts will all come together under one roof. There will be nothing to stop the CIA from having analysts under the CIA roof. But they will have to be CIA agents under the roof of the Director of Homeland Security so that all of the analysts are there and can put the dots together in one place.

The critical paragraph in the letter set forth is:

Responsibilities.—The Directorate of Intelligence . . . . On behalf of the Secretary, subject to disapproval by the President, directing the agencies described under subsection (a)(1)(B) to provide intelligence information, analyses of intelligence information and such other intelligence-related information as the Directorate of Intelligence deems necessary.

That is the critical part of it.

The other way of articulating the idea would be to say that the President approves the Secretary having this authority. But it is unrealistic to expect the President to come in and make an analysis and take affirmative action. But it is effective to get the same job done if the problem is sufficient to have the matter disapproved by the President.

I don't think you really have to have statutory language because the President directs anybody as he chooses. They are going to be bound to carry out his orders. But this would give the Secretary of Homeland Security umbrella authority, as I say, subject to disapproval of the President.

Although I do think the senior Senator from Florida had a good idea and purpose in the National Office for Combating Terrorism, the better policy is to leave these responsibilities to the Secretary of Homeland Security, a separate Department. The President is then free to have an adviser on homeland security—as he currently does, a position filled in the West Wing by Governor Ridge.

EXHIBIT I

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, August 1, 2002.

Hon. TOM RIDGE,
Director of Homeland Security,
Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I was very pleased to hear the President's affirmative response yesterday to the proposal to have analysts from every intelligence agency (CIA, FBI, DIA, etc.) under the umbrella of the Department of Homeland Security with the Secretary having the authority to direct those intelligence agencies to supply his Department with the requisite intelligence data.

As I said in the meeting in the Cabinet Room yesterday, I think that had all of the intelligence information known prior to September 11th been under one umbrella, the terrorist attacks of September 11th might have been prevented.

Senator Thompson, as I understood him, did not disagree with that ultimate approach except to express the view that he thought that changes in the structure of the intelligence community should await further studies. My own strongly held view is that we have a unique opportunity to make the changes in the intelligence community now because of the imminent terrorist threats; and, if we don't act now, we will go back to business as usual.

As you and I discussed in our meeting of July 29, 2002, there have been many proposals to place the intelligence agencies under one umbrella, including legislation which I introduced in 1996 when I chaired the Intelligence Committee, and the current proposals which have been made by General Scowcroft.

I suggest that Section 132(b) of the bill reported by the Governmental Affairs Committee be modified by adding at the beginning a new paragraph (1) to read as follows:

(b) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Directorate of Intelligence shall be responsible for the following:

(1) On behalf of the Secretary, subject to disapproval by the President, directing the agencies described under subsection (a)(1)(B) to provide intelligence information, analyses of intelligence information and such other intelligence-related information as the Directorate of Intelligence deems necessary.

I am sending copies of this letter to Senator Lieberman and Senator Thompson so that we may all discuss these issues further.

My best.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, while our troops have had enormous success abroad, the war on terror, obviously, is not over. We are just beginning. We must do everything we can to prevent future attacks on the homeland.

Tomorrow is going to commemorate that awful experience. My attention over the weekend was riveted to an article in one of the country's major newspapers that reported on a debriefing of one of the al-Qaeda detainees who had indicated that the fourth airplane, the one that crashed in Pennsylvania, had as its target the U.S. Capitol.

How many of us on that day were working in the U.S. Capitol? I was in a meeting on the west front of the Capitol, only 30 paces from where I am now standing in the Chamber of the Senate. It was a meeting attended by about 15, chaired by the majority leader. We had already seen the television images of the World Trade Center, but we continued our meeting.

Someone burst in the door and said: "The Pentagon has been hit." We leapt to the windows overlooking the west front of the Capitol, overlooking the mall in the direction of the Pentagon, and saw the black smoke rising on the other side of the Potomac.

Interestingly, my immediate reaction was to leap to a telephone to try to get word to my wife, Grace. Only 5 days earlier, we had moved into an apartment overlooking the southwest corner of the Pentagon. My message to her was—and we didn't even have a telephone in the apartment, since we had just moved in—to get into the basement garage because, of course, I didn't know what was happening on that side of the Potomac.

In the meantime, Grace Nelson is getting dressed in the apartment. She hears the airplane. She said it sounded so loud, as if it was going to hit the apartment. And the line of flight was very close to the apartment. She heard the impact. She ran to the window and saw the whole thing.

When she saw the people streaming out of the Pentagon, her immediate response, which is the great patriotic instinct of my wife, was: What can I do to go down and help those people?

That, of course, was a riveting experience, like any that you have had in your adult life. I was in college at the time of the assassination of President Kennedy. I can tell you exactly where I was when we received the word. So, too, on any other tragic event, such as the destruction of the space shuttle Challenger. And so, too, Americans will remember exactly what they were doing and where they were at the time of receiving the news that the Nation was under attack a year ago.

This war is going to be a long one, and it is going to be very difficult because it is a new kind of war. We don't have the luxury we have had for two centuries of two big oceans protecting us from our enemies, for now the enemies have figured out a way to infiltrate within. Of course, all of the U.S. interests and assets around the world, including our ambassadors, are targets we have to protect.

It is appropriate that this legislation is being considered at this time. What do we have to do to help protect future attacks on U.S. soil?

Clearly, there was a colossal intelligence failure on September 11. That is primarily what we need to address. The inexcusable bureaucratic inefficiencies and inability of one hand of the bureaucracy to know what the other hand was doing, all of that has to be ironed out. In the briefings that we have had, I have some degree of confidence that it is being ironed out. It better be. We have no choice. For the only way to thwart the terrorists is to find out what they are going to do before they do it and stop them.

Combining this new threat also requires a more agile government. What we are about to do is undertake the largest governmental reorganization in the last five decades. This new department will combine 22 agencies, 170,000 people, with an annual budget of $38 billion. But considering the seriousness of the threat and the scope of the restructuring, I must say that I am surprised by the administration's demands that this new Department of Homeland Security be run with minimal accountability to the American people, which includes accountability to this Congress.

There is something that we all swore to uphold when we took office: the Constitution of the United States. The political geniuses who gathered over 225 years ago fashioned a document that had checks and balances so that power could not be concentrated in any one branch of the Government.

So as we start to create this new, vast reorganization of the executive branch, we have to make it accountable to the American people by having it accountable to the Congress, with our oversight functions, with our appropriations functions, with our authorization functions, with all that has served this Nation so well since the beginning of our constitutional government in 1789.

I am concerned and a little bit surprised that the administration demands that they have it their way without the accountability, which is the checks and balances of the Constitution, necessary to the functioning of our constitutional government.

Many of us on both sides of the aisle believe this is an issue of great importance, involving such a massive reorganization of the Government that we must ensure that there are checks and balances. The American people deserve to know how this new department will be managed and how the resources allocated to the war on terror are going to be used.

Transparency is essential to ensure that this new department is working. I am not sure that is the message that has come from the administration. It is going to be up to us, particularly those of us who feel so strongly about this.

We have heard a number of people talk about the great leadership of Senator LIEBERMAN, the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, and, clearly, the man who not only believes daily and recites daily the U.S. Constitution but carries that Constitution with him wherever he goes, a man who has been in Congress for over 50 years, Senator BYRD, who has expressed his concerns. And there will be more, including mine that I am registering today.

I am afraid that the administration's bill—which, in essence, is the House of Representatives-passed bill—fails to adequately protect the nonhomeland mission of the Coast Guard. Think of that. The Coast Guard overseas a number of important maritime missions, which save countless lives each year, including search-and-rescue operations, Marine safety, and recreational boating safety initiatives.

Am I sensitive to this? You bet. Look how much coastline Florida has. I have not actually measured it against the California coastline, but I suspect ours is greater if not equal to the California coastline.

So is the search-and-rescue operation, Marine safety, recreational boating safety—a non-homeland-defense mission of the Coast Guard—important? Of course, but so is the Coast Guard's mission on law enforcement, which includes drug interdiction, and alien migrant interdiction, and general maritime law enforcement.

Would it not be nice if we in Florida were not sensitive, as we are, to drug interdiction and to alien migrant interdiction? Waves of people try to come to Florida's shores illegally—some with just cause, but of which the Coast Guard plays a very important role. As resources are transferred to the war on terror, we should not forget about protecting people from the nonterrorist threats that can be harmful to our communities.

The final plan to transfer the Coast Guard to a new Department must ensure, in my judgment, that law enforcement safety and transportation missions are not unreasonably compromised. That is why I think we have to adopt the Senate language and protect it then in the conference committee—ironing out the differences between the Senate and House versions.

In addition—and very importantly—the administration's language in the House bill completely undermines workers' rights. Guaranteeing the basic civil service rights of people hired to keep us safe does not and will not jeopardize national security.

What are we trying to protect? We are trying to protect the civil service of this Federal Government from being politicized, which is the reason why the Hatch Act was passed years ago, decades ago, saying that there was going to be a barrier put up so that any administration, after the Hatch Act, was not going to be able to use the Federal bureaucracy for their political ends; thus, the Hatch Act was enacted.

What the administration's language does is take away those worker rights, those basic civil service rights, and that is not healthy, because it has been healthy, as we have seen how the Federal bureaucracy operates under those protections in the Hatch Act.

The House bill would grant the President a blank check to take away the civil service protections of nearly 170,000 employees of the new agency. I don't think that is in the interest of the country. That is not going to affect the national security. The vague authority granted to the President would exempt employees from traditional labor laws if he determined, without any explanation, that the workers' rights somehow adversely affect the Department's homeland security mission. That is not right for the workers of the new agency, and it is not right for the country.

Finally, the administration bill hangs consumers out to dry by limiting the liability of firms providing new antiterrorism technologies and devices because damages caused by untested technologies that fail to work would be restricted even in cases of gross negligence in the manufacture of those new technologies and equipment and apparatuses. This limited liability provision gives carte blanche then to fly-by-night companies looking to profit from 9/11 by selling products that, at best, do nothing and, at worst, could cause direct harm. I don't think we want to hang those consumers out to dry—indeed, much more than that, we don't want to harm those consumers.

As the clock ticks, the time becomes increasingly somber as we reflect back on what we were doing 365 days ago, what happened to us personally, and how we have changed not only as a nation but individually. I think it is important for us to look at the big picture and that as we fashion a bureaucratic response that is more flexible to protect our homeland, we do so in a wise and cautious fashion.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, in the absence of any other Senator on the floor seeking recognition on the bill or, for that matter, any other purpose, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as if in morning business for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDALS FOR CREW AND PASSENGERS OF FLIGHT 93

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to proceed as if in morning business to discuss legislation I have pending, S. 1434, a bill which has 69 cosponsors, which would give the Congressional Medal to all of the crew and passengers on flight 93 which crashed in Shanksville, PA, on September 11, 2001.

As we know from cellphone conversations from passengers on that plane, the passengers took over the plane from the terrorists, at least to the extent of depriving the terrorists control where the terrorists, as was widely suspected, were headed for the Capitol of the United States. And the plane crashed in Shanksville, PA, killing all of those on board.

It seems to me this is a unique place for the Congressional Gold Medal, because those passengers saved the Congress. Had that plane reached the Capitol, this Chamber would not now be in existence, nor the Rotunda, nor the House of Representatives. It is hard to say in the morning, perhaps mid-morning, how many Members of the Congress of the United States and staff would not be here today. In seeking this recognition, it is a very unique opportunity to acknowledge those passengers.

This bill has languished because it has gotten tied up, as it is not uncommon for legislation to be tied up for a variety of other reasons. There are some who want to give medals to everyone who died on September 11, which I think is a fine idea. There are some who want to give medals to all of those who were in the rescue squads from the police precincts or fire stations or the Port Authority. And there, again, I think that is a commendable idea. And all the ideas to recognize other people may be fine, but they can take their turn on legislation.

But this legislation ought to be enacted before sunset tomorrow, before September 11, 2002, expires. I am now working with some of my colleagues in the Senate to accomplish that. If we cannot accomplish that, then I am going to ask unanimous consent to call up S. 1434, which has 69 cosponsors. It should have been discharged from committee a long time ago. With 69 cosponsors, that is 18 more votes than necessary to pass legislation in the Senate.

There is a bill in the House of Representatives which approaches the issue slightly differently. The proposal in the House is to leave the decision up to the Attorney General of the United States. Well, that might be a good idea if there was something for the Attorney General to determine that we do not now know. But all of the knowable facts as to what happened on flight 93 are now known.

The Attorney General cannot conduct an investigation and pinpoint any specific individuals. And it is doubtless true that some individuals were more responsible for taking control of the plane away from the terrorists than others. But all were present. And all of those who were present were accessories to heroism. They lent their support by their presence. Of course, they could not go anywhere else, but the passengers brought down the plane. And the passengers saved the Capitol of the United States.

Interestingly, just yesterday, The New York Times published a release which contains confirmation from key al-Qaida operatives that flight 93 was, in fact, headed for the Capitol. That has been a fairly accepted conclusion, but this is what the New York Times story of yesterday, September 9, says:

Yosri Fouda, correspondent for the satellite station Al-Jazeera, told The Associated Press that he was taken, blindfolded, to a secret location in Pakistan to meet Khalid Shaikh Mohammed and Ramzi Binalshibh in a June interview arranged by al-Qaida operatives.

The thrust of the story is that the al-Qaida operatives said that flight 93 was headed for the Capitol. So, in essence, I think we have waited long enough. I think this action ought to be completed before sunset on September 11, 2002. And I hope we can work out an accommodation from the Members who are now with varying points of view. But, as I say, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be acted upon before sunset tomorrow.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this New York Times report identifying from al-Qaida operatives the fact that this plane, flight 93, was headed for the Capitol, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 9, 2002]

REPORT: CONGRESS WAS ON 9/11 LIST

(By the Associated Press)

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates.—The U.S. Congress was the fourth American landmark on al-Qaida's Sept. 11 hit list and the terror group also considered striking U.S. nuclear facilities, according to a purported interview with two al-Qaida fugitives wanted in the terrorist attack.

Yosri Fouda, correspondent for the satellite station Al-Jazeera, told The Associated Press that he was taken, blindfolded, to a secret location in Pakistan to meet Khalid Shaikh Mohammed and Ramzi Binalshibh in a June interview arranged by al-Qaida operatives.

Founda said he has waited until now to air the audiotaped interview—it is scheduled to be broadcast Thursday on the pan-Arab satellite station—because he wanted to include it in a documentary marking the first anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks.

In an article in London's Sunday Times, Fouda wrote that he learned during the interviews that the U.S. Congress had been al-Qaida's fourth Sept. 11 target. Two hijacked planes slammed into the World Trade Center, another into the Pentagon, and a fourth went down in a Pennsylvania field.

U.S. counterterrorism officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said many of Mohammed's statements about the origins of the Sept. 11 plot are plausible, but they have no information that would verify those claims.

The officials could not corroborate Mohammed's statements that the U.S. Capitol was the intended target of the fourth plane or that nuclear power plants had also been considered as potential targets for the Sept. 11 attacks.

Abu Zubaydah, a top al-Qaida leader in U.S. custody since March, told interrogators that the White House was the fourth plane's target, U.S. officials have said.

U.S. officials regard Mohammed as one of the highest-ranking al-Qaida leaders still at large and believe he is still planning attacks against U.S. interests. U.S. officials say Binalshibh belonged to a Hamburg-based cell led by Mohammed Atta, an Egyptian suspected of leading the Sept. 11 hijackers.

"I am the head of the al-Qaida military committee and Ramzi (Binalshibh) is the coordinator of the 'Holy Tuesday' operation," Fouda quoted Mohammed as saying. Sept. 11, 2001 fell on a Tuesday.

Mohammed said planning for the attacks began 2½ years before Sept. 11 and that the first targets considered were nuclear facilities.

We "decided against it for fear it would go out of control," Fouda quoted Mohammed as saying. "You do not need to know more than that at this stage, and anyway it was eventually decided to leave out nuclear targets—for now."

Fouda, an Egyptian reporter and host of al-Jazeera's investigative program "Top Secret," said he flew to Islamabad, the Pakistani capital, and from there to Karachi on al-Qaida instructions. In Karachi, he was taken blindfolded and via a complicated route to an apartment where he met the two men.

Fouda, speaking by telephone from London, said al-Qaida operatives told him not to bring any electronic equipment—including a camera or recorder—to the interview. The al-Qaida members videotaped the interview but instead of sending a copy of the video as promised, sent him only the audiotape, he said.

At one point while being led to the meeting, Fouda said he thought he was going to meet bin Laden. Speculation has been rife that the al-Qaida leader may be in Pakistan after fleeing U.S. attempts to kill or catch him in neighboring Afghanistan.

Fouda said during the two days he spent talking to the two, Mohammed once referred to bin Laden in the past tense, leading him to believe bin Laden could be dead.

The U.S. officials said they do not consider Mohammed's use of the past tense to refer to bin Laden as any sort of definitive evidence that he is dead.

Fouda said he also learned that Atta, the chief hijacker, had been a sleeper operative in Germany since 1992 and started detailed planning with a 1999 meeting in Afghanistan with other sleepers.

Once in America, Atta communicated with higher ranking al-Qaida officials via e-mail, Fouda wrote. But when he had determined everything was ready, he telephoned Binalshibh in Germany to tell him the date, using a riddle that referred to the shapes of the numbers 9 and 11.

Al-Jazeera, the Qatar-based satellite broadcaster, has drawn world attention with its broadcast of interviews with and statements by bin Laden and his top lieutenants.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this has been an unusual day. Earlier today, the majority wanted to vote on the Thompson amendment. We were led to believe, not wrongly, that the minority did not want a vote on that today. So we decided we would not vote on that today. We learned, later in the day, that Senator THOMPSON wanted a vote on his amendment today. By then, people had gone home for September 11 occurrences.

So now we are in a position where Senator THOMPSON thought there would be nothing happening on his bill today, and he left to do other things.

We have learned that the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. HOLLINGS, now wishes to offer a second-degree amendment to the Thompson amendment. I have not been able to speak to Senator THOMPSON. I have spoken, on a couple of occasions, to the Senator from South Carolina.

It would be my suggestion, therefore, that the Senator from South Carolina speak on his amendment, and that on Thursday, when we come back on this homeland security bill again, the Senator from South Carolina be recognized to offer his amendment.

We would be taking no advantage of the minority because, as everyone knows, the majority leader has the right of first recognition. And we have indicated to the Senator from South Carolina that he would be in order to offer that amendment, unless we can work something out with Senator THOMPSON that it need not be offered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. So I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that we go to a period of morning business, now, until 6 o'clock today, with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period of up to 10 minutes each. I hope that we would have consent that Senator HOLLINGS could offer the amendment; otherwise, we would, of course, have Senator DASCHLE come and offer that on Thursday.

Is the Senator from South Carolina satisfied with that?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That I be allowed to offer it at what time on Thursday?

Mr. REID. We have not decided what time Thursday, but we do not go to the bill until Thursday afternoon because—

Mr. HOLLINGS. If I could at least get an hour of debate, or whatever it is, on my amendment before we vote on the Thompson amendment.

Mr. REID. Yes. On the Thompson amendment itself, we were planning to do an hour and a half to 2 hours of debate prior to voting on it. That was the plan. Now, with you offering this second-degree amendment, I don't know what the pleasure of Senator THOMPSON would be. But we will work on that today, and tomorrow if necessary, with your staff and his.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished leader. I think he has certainly accommodated the Senator from South Carolina. I definitely understand Senator THOMPSON is not here. I wanted to offer it while he is here so we can talk about it. But we will offer it at that particular time on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

SEPTEMBER 11, 2001, ANNIVERSARY

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to share a few thoughts on the eve of tomorrow's anniversary of the terrorist attack, September 11, 2001. Tomorrow, a lot of our colleagues, both in this Chamber and the other body, will be expressing themselves, with many Members attending memorial services at the Pentagon. The Senate, as a body, plans to come together late tomorrow morning to meet as a body and to share our thoughts with the country about the events of a year ago. I take this opportunity to remember and to honor the nearly 3,000 of our fellow citizens and others who had come to this country to work—not all were Americans; the majority were—but lost their lives 1 year ago tomorrow in one of America's darkest of days.

I also join all of America in paying tribute once again to the countless men and women whose acts of bravery and heroism so inspired us on that day and the days that followed the tragedy of September 11, and continue to serve as a solemn reminder that the American spirit shines as bright as ever despite the events of that day, that horrible day a year ago.

Thousands of families across this great country of ours, including families in my home State of Connecticut—families in my State lost some 149 people, most of whom lost their lives in the World Trade Center—these families and their loved ones have endured a year of unimaginable grief and unimaginable bravery. Every American grieves with them as many of our fellow citizens the world over from around the globe have shared with us the sense of grief and horror of a year ago and have continued to relate to us and to share their thoughts and prayers with all Americans as a result of our commemoration of the events of 12 months ago.

Over the past 12 months, I have heard countless stories, tragedies that were once unthinkable. In Connecticut, I know of a man who lost both his wife and his only child on that day a year ago; of parents who lost their young children in their twenties, just beginning their lives as young adults, with professional careers; of wives who had received the last phone calls from their husbands before the Twin Towers fell.

Every American will always remember where they were when the Twin Towers were attacked and collapsed. Every American will always remember where they were when they heard a hijacked plane had crashed into the Pentagon, only a few blocks from where I am sharing these thoughts this afternoon. Every American will always remember how they felt upon learning that a group of passengers fought back against the terrorists who hijacked their plane before it crashed in the field of Pennsylvania. September 11, 2001, is a day that will be etched in all of our memories for the rest of our lives and etched in history forever.

Although all Americans went through that day together, we will always share its memory. Last September 11 was also a deeply personal day for each and every one of us. We each had our own highly personal experiences during those horrid hours that began in the early morning—that wonderful clear, bright, cloudless sky over the eastern part of our country.

For me, the hours and days and weeks following the terrorist attacks were filled with immensely mixed emotions, as most of my colleagues know. I see my friend and colleague from Texas on the floor. We shared the great joy last year of having children come into our lives. My first child, my daughter Grace, was born just 48 hours after the attacks, born on September 13, at a hospital right across the river in Virginia. From the window of the maternity ward, my wife Jackie and I watched the smoke rising from the still-burning Pentagon as we held our newborn child in our hands.

I can still vividly recall trying to balance my feelings of incredible, intense joy with this new beautiful life, mixed with the powerful feelings of horror and trepidation over what kind of a world my daughter Grace would grow up in, in the 21st century.

Something heartened me that day. I have told this story on numerous occasions. In the hospital as my wife held our newborn daughter, many of the doctors and nurses, several of them who held her shortly after she was born, came from places outside of America to become citizens. Three of them came from Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Lebanon. Here we are, 48 hours after the events, those countries had been the places of refuge for those engaged in the attacks on our country, and here were people from that very part of the world, United States citizens today, nurturing and caring for my newborn daughter.

That was all the evidence I needed at that particular moment that America was attacked not for who we are, but for what we stand for: Freedom, liberty, and community. And we shared something very powerful in common: We were devastated over the attacks, and we were never prouder to be Americans, almost simultaneously.

Word was already out that the terrorist attacks were the work of al-Qaeda, a fanatical group which hijacked planes, but also an otherwise peaceful religion, Islam, to perform their evil deeds.

Word was out that Osama bin Laden and his minions of hate thought that by attacking us, our buildings, our Pentagon, and our planes, they could somehow divide our great Nation and somehow weaken our resolve to be a global power, to be a force for freedom and democracy around the globe.

Word was out that those who hate the United States simply for who we are, for our freedoms, our prosperity, and our diversity, thought that by murdering thousands of innocent Americans and shattering the lives of thousands of families, our Nation would somehow lose its ability to function as a great democracy.

They were wrong. We are today stronger, I argue, than ever.

September 11 changed America forever. At one level, the attacks made us aware of our vulnerabilities and forced us to realize there is no such thing as the unthinkable. Yet at another level, the way in which the entire Nation came together, in the days and weeks and months after the attacks, has served as a profound and inspirational reminder to strengthen the American people and the breadth and depth of the American spirit.

So as we mark this historic day, a day of sadness, we look back and remember September 11, not just for the tragedy it evokes but also in renewing our faith in the greatness of the wonderfulness of our Nation, in which we are charged temporarily to be custodians, as Members of this body, to see that that daughter of mine and the children of our colleague from Texas grow up in a world far safer than what we witnessed a year ago. That becomes our collective responsibility as public officials: To put aside differences and, wherever we can, to work together as one people to make our country stronger and better, to achieve that sense of perfection that the Founders of our Nation envisioned more than 200 years ago.

With those thoughts in mind, I extend my deepest sympathies, my thoughts, and prayers to the families in my State and across our Nation who still grieve terribly for the loss they suffered a year ago.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Before Senator DODD leaves the floor, I appreciate so much his beautiful remarks. We do share something very special, and that is that each of us had a new baby—mine through adoption, yours with your wife. It was right during that very sad time. I think it was so helpful to have this new life I knew then we were fighting for, to make sure that my young son and my young daughter would have the same kind of life as I did.

I know you feel that way about Grace, and to look out from her birth to see the Pentagon smoldering must have been an emotional experience beyond any ability to describe.

So I am so proud that I have two babies born in 2001, and I have the firmest commitment to make sure we do everything in our power to assure that they have the freedom and the love of this country and the diversity we champion and the tolerance we have shown to the world. That is the way people should live. I thank the Senator for his remarks. I just wanted to say how their lives will be intertwined forever.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Senator.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I would like to speak on the bill. My colleague, Senator FEINSTEIN, will speak, and then I would like to have the bill passed following those remarks.

Mr. President, I am so proud that the Senate Judiciary Committee has already passed the AMBER Alert bill on which Senator FEINSTEIN and I worked during the recess, after the tragic happening in California with the teenage girls who were lost but then found because of AMBER Alert, and the tragic kidnapping in Texas of a baby who was also found because of the AMBER Alert.

Although in numbers the child abductions through the summer weren't any more than previous years, they seemed so much more because we knew about them and we were able to do something about them. Not all of them have had a happy ending, but more than ever before have had a happy ending.

The realization that their child has been abducted must be the most terrifying nightmare a parent can endure. But that is what has happened to parent after parent in our country.

The AMBER Alert bill is named for Amber Hagerman, who was abducted when she was 9 years old, riding her bicycle near her home in Arlington, TX, in 1996. Amber was murdered. But her mother and law enforcement personnel in the Arlington-Dallas-Fort Worth area believed so strongly there should be some way to do something that would find these children that they created the AMBER Alert on a local level.

Today, cities, regions, and States have established AMBER Alerts and 30 abducted children have been found and rescued because of the AMBER Alert.

Most of the credit for this remarkable record goes to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, which provides technical guidance to communities and coordination among widely separated AMBER networks. And the Center could not be effective without the willing cooperation of the National Association of Broadcasters and local television and radio stations across the nation.

As we have witnessed this summer, AMBER Alert plans in different communities have been effective in bringing children home safely. Recently, an AMBER Alert was sent out to search for 10-year-old Nichole Timmons of Riverside, California. The Alert was not only delivered throughout California but contacts also were made in neighboring States, and Nichole was found in Nevada. Nichole and her family were extremely lucky because dedicated people at the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children made the effort to notify every possible jurisdiction, and local broadcasters devoted previous air time to the Alert. The vast majority of States, however, do not yet have comprehensive, statewide coverage and lack the ability to effectively communicate between plans. This is a critical issue particularly when an abducted child is taken across State lines.

Nichole's case clearly illustrates the need for a national AMBER network. My bill, the National AMBER Alert Network Act, prepared with the help of my friend, DIANNE FEINSTEIN of California, will fill the gaps that exist in the current patchwork of AMBER systems. We will provide resources for States and communities to build their AMBER Alert systems and spread information to surrounding jurisdictions.

Our bill establishes an AMBER Alert Coordinator within the Department of Justice to assist States with their AMBER Alert plans. The AMBER Alert Coordinator will set minimum, voluntary standards to help States coordinate when necessary. The AMBER Alert Coordinator will help to reconcile the different standards for what constitutes an AMBER alert. In doing so, the Coordinator will work with existing participants, including the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, local and state law enforcement and broadcasters to define minimum standards. Overall, the AMBER Alert Coordinator's efforts will set safeguards to make sure the AMBER system is used to meet its intended purpose.

In addition, the bill provides for matching grant programs at the Department of Transportation and the Department of Justice. The grant programs will help localities and States build or further enhance their efforts to disseminate AMBER Alerts. To this end, the matching grant programs will fund road signage and electronic message boards along highways, dissemination of information on abducted children, education and training, and related equipment.

When a child is lost, the whole community grieves along with the family. An AMBER Alert channels this energy to a positive purpose. Tips from average citizens have resulted in the safe and rapid recovery of many children. We can spread the word about abducted children across county and state lines quickly, before the kidnappers have the chance to cover their tracks and get too far away.

I was very touched, when Senator FEINSTEIN and I decided we were going to introduce this National AMBER Alert bill, that Mr. Ed Smart, the father of Elizabeth Smart, who was abducted from her home in Utah and who has not been found, had a press conference with Senator BENNETT from Utah to say: Please enact this national system. Maybe it could have helped if we had had that in place.

Senator HATCH from Utah was so helpful in making sure the Judiciary Committee did expedite the passage of this bill. We could not have done it without Senator LEAHY, who allowed us to go forward, really, in miracle record time. Senator CLINTON came forward immediately to offer her help. So we have had a lot of people working on this issue. I do not think the Senate has ever come together so uniformly and so quickly to enact a piece of legislation as this AMBER Alert bill.

It is important that we enact this bill and that the President be able to sign it before we leave for a 3-month recess because there is no telling how many children could be helped if we had this in place and ready to go.

In memory of Amber Hagerman and for every family ravaged by the tragedy of child abduction, I urge my colleagues to pass the National AMBER Alert Network Act to safeguard America's children.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I would like to begin by thanking the distinguished Senator from Texas for her leadership, for her perspicacity, for her work on this bill. We have to remember this bill was introduced exactly 1 week ago. We had hearings. It is on the floor. It is going to be passed today.

I hope it sends a message to the Nation. I hope that message is, if yours is a State that doesn't have an AMBER Alert, let us get one. Let me tell you why.

Seventy-four percent of the children who are abducted are lost within the first day. Therefore, if you can identify the abductor, if you can identify a license plate, you may well save the life of a child.

I think that came in loudly and clearly to both Senator HUTCHISON and me in the Judiciary Committee.

The Senator mentioned Nichole Timmons and her mother Sharon. It was interesting. Nichole was kidnapped by the gardener who worked at their home. She was taken across the State line from Riverside County into Nevada. Within 24 hours, a tribal officer in Nevada recognized the license plate of the vehicle, and that went out on an AMBER Alert. There was duct tape in that car. There was a metal rod in that car. If the license had not been run, Nichole never would have come home. The AMBER Alert worked.

In my State of California, we have only had the AMBER Alert for about a month. There have been 13 AMBER Alerts. One was a misstep. Eight were stranger abductions. Four were family-related abductions. All 12 of those children were returned. Never before have I seen a statistic such as that.

We know the AMBER Alert works. Now we have an opportunity to get this nationwide.

I think the bill is thoughtful. I think it is well set out.

Since 1996, when the AMBER Alert went into being, it has been credited with the return of 30 children to their families, including one case in which the abductor, interestingly enough, released the child himself after hearing the alert. In other words, it can act as a deterrent as well.

What is more important than our children, other than war and peace? I don't think anything. This is really important because it means you can avoid a child being murdered simply by issuing this AMBER Alert.

The Senator has indicated the various points of the bill. But I want to say this. The AMBER Alert is typically issued only when a law enforcement agency confirms that a predatory child abduction has occurred. When the child is in imminent danger and there is information available that is disseminated to the public, they can assist in the safe recovery of the child.

In the bill, we have provided that the Attorney General would set these minimum standards. So the same standards would be used across every State, probably close to what I have read, and therefore avoid a plethora of unnecessary AMBER Alerts. We can have a system which really functions well in those cases where the likelihood is that something grievous could in fact happen to that child.

I am hopeful that we will shortly have a national system with 15 AMBER Alerts. We are very proud that the National Association of Broadcasters is strongly supportive. As you know, when an AMBER Alert goes out, it interrupts the television program or radio program. It is on the highway. That is what gives the broad knowledge to people.

Interestingly enough, at the hearing, Marc Klaas was also there. His daughter Polly several years ago—in the mid-1990s—was taken from her bedroom when she had a sleepover with a number of girls in her home. Someone came into her home and took her. He truly believes that had AMBER Alert been in place, Polly might have been saved.

At that hearing, we had Nichole and her mother. She was saved. And we had Marc Klaas, who lost his daughter because there was not an AMBER Alert. For many of us, it was a real juxtaposition.

I thank the Center for Missing and Exploited Children. I thank my colleague, Senator HUTCHISON. I particularly thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. Without Senator LEAHY, this bill couldn't have been put on the calendar, it couldn't have been marked up, and it couldn't have been moved in the very short time in which it was.

I think it has accomplished something for our children today. It will pass unanimously. Only 15 States have it. And hopefully other States are going to move very rapidly. Hopefully one day Senator HUTCHISON and I will be able to come before you, Mr. President, and the rest of this body, and say that every State in the United States today has an AMBER Alert. Here are the statistics, ladies and gentlemen. We have saved a lot of children and had them returned to their parents.

I only say to the Senator, my friend, good work. I am delighted to be here today.

I thank my colleagues for voting for this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from California for jumping right in after the tragic abduction of the teenage girls. Those lives were probably saved 5 minutes before they would have been murdered. That is what the testimony was. It was the result of the AMBER Alert, which is a statewide system in California. Senator FEINSTEIN, as the Senator from the home State, has an emotional tie to this issue. I just hope we can prevent in other States other parents from having this kind of scare in their lives. At least, if they have the scare, we will be able to help them and save the lives of the most innocent in our society. Of course, that is our children.

I send a list of cosponsors—we have 38—to the desk and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list of cosponsors was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2896—HUTCHISON-FEINSTEIN AMBER ALERT
BILL OF 2002
CO-SPONSORS (38)

Democrats: Senators Biden, Carnahan, Cleland, Clinton, Dayton, Dodd, Durbin, Edwards, Feingold, Feinstein, Harkin, Johnson, Landrieu, Leahy, Bill Nelson, Rockefeller, Stabenow, and Wyden.

Republicans: Senators Allard, Bennett, Collins, Crapo, Ensign, Fitzgerald, Hatch, Helms, Hutchinson, Inhofe, Kyl, Lott, Lugar, Santorum, Sessions, Gordon Smith, Snowe, Thurmond, Voinovich, and McConnell.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, it is my understanding that other Senator's wish to speak. I was not sure if Senator NELSON wanted to speak before we passed the bill. I want to make sure we pass the bill. I don't know if we need to wait for other Senators before we do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas would be amenable, while we are waiting for Senators, I have remarks with regard to another matter. It is my understanding that we are in morning business. I can accommodate you all in whatever way you would like. Senators could insert their remarks in the RECORD after the fact.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I think that is probably what we would like to do. I would like to then go forward.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, over the last few months the American people have awakened to the tragic reality that our children face the very real threat of predatory criminals each and every day.

The airwaves have been filled with story after story of children who have been abducted, sometimes to be found alive later thanks to an AMBER alert or good law enforcement work; sometimes to be found, tragically, dead; and sometimes never to be found at all.

This is not a new problem, but the increased attention to the problem gives us a real opportunity to make some much-needed changes in the law to prevent some of these horrible crimes and to better protect the children of this Nation.

The bill Senator HATCH and I introduce today will help ensure that law enforcement officers have the tools and resources they need to find, prosecute, and severely punish those who commit crimes against innocent children.

Specifically, the Hatch-Feinstein Child Crime Bill would do the following:

First, the legislation directs the FBI to establish a National Crimes Against Children Response Center. This Center would have as its primary mission the development of a comprehensive, rapid response plan to reported crimes involving the victimization of children. Working undoubtedly in conjunction with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, the AMBER Alert systems nationwide, and other agencies and private entities as well, this Center would be the focal point for seeing that the victimization of children does not go unsolved, or unpunished.

Second, the legislation will create a new Crimes Against Children Section at the Department of Justice, tasked with prosecuting crimes against children; providing guidance and assistance to Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies and personnel who handle such cases; coordinating efforts with international law enforcement agencies to combat crimes against children; and acting as a liaison with the legislative and judicial branches of government.

The bill also directs this new office in DOJ to create a national Internet site that will consolidate sex offender information which States currently release under the federal reporting act.

The bill also directs States that have not developed Internet sites to do so. Currently, all 50 States have registration statutes that require sex offenders to register and to share information with the United States Attorney General through the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and over 30 States make offender information available to the public on the Internet. But not all States include all available information, and there is no single place to easily acquire this information about local sex offenders. The national database will be such a place.

The legislation also prevents the use of the so-called "Marital Privilege" to allow one spouse to protect another in cases where a parent, guardian or supervising adult has abused a child in the home. If an adult is abusing a child in his or her own home, it is vital to put a stop to the situation. Allowing a spouse to refuse to testify about the abuse by asserting an outdated "marital privilege" puts the child at continuing risk. This makes no sense.

In order to assist law enforcement track and punish child predators and other violent criminals, this legislation also expands the class of offenses that are included in the Combined DNA Index System, CODIS, by adding to the system all Federal felonies and additional offenses that subject Federal offenders to sex registration requirements. Currently, only select Federal offenses are entered in CODIS.

The bill makes two modifications to Rule 414 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, which already allows evidence of a defendant's prior acts of child molestation to be admitted in a criminal child molestation case.

Unfortunately, the definition of prior acts of child abuse includes only children under 14, so acts against 15 or 16-year olds, for instance, are inadmissible. This legislation extends the definition of "child" contained in Rule 414 to include any person below the age of 18—rather than age 14.

And the amendment also makes clear that where a defendant previously possessed what may have been virtual, as opposed to actual, child pornography, such evidence is admissible under Rule 414.

We have also included language to expand the Federal Wiretap Act by adding as predicate offenses to the statute, sex trafficking, sex exploitation, and other interstate sex offenses. Currently, the wiretap statute authorizes the interception of wire, oral, or electronic communications in the investigation of just two sexual exploitation of children crimes.

To obtain a wiretap, law enforcement authorities will still need to meet the strict statutory guidelines of the wiretap statute and obtain authorization from a court.

The legislation would also extend the maximum supervised release period that applies to sexual offenders, by granting Federal judges the discretion to impose up to lifetime periods of supervised release for individuals who are convicted of sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, transportation for illegal sexual activity, or sex trafficking offenses.

Under current law, a judge can impose no more than 5 years of supervised release for a serious felony, and no more than 3 years for a lesser categorized offense. This amendment will not require judges to impose a period of supervised release longer than 5 years; it simply authorizes them to do so where the judge sees fit based on the nature and circumstances of the particular case. Some sexual offenders may pose a potential risk to their communities for longer than 5 years, and discretion to supervise those offenders past an artificial time limit is simply common sense.

The legislation also increases the maximum penalties that apply to certain sexual offenses, by doubling the maximum penalties for sex offenses involving the trafficking of children and other interstate elements. This will allow the Sentencing Commission, and federal judges, greater latitude in determining sentences for the worst of offenders. No changes are made to mandatory minimums.

Finally, we direct the Sentencing Commission to review the guidelines that apply to child abuse and exploitation offenses to determine whether they are sufficiently severe.

Earlier this month Senator HUTCHINSON and I introduced legislation to help establish a national AMBER alert system. These systems have been proven effective in finding abducted children quickly, and most certainly saving some lives. That bill, which will pass tonight is one step in protecting our children from dangerous predators.

The bill I introduce today with my good friend Senator HATCH is simply another piece of the anti-predator puzzle. I hope my colleagues will join us in this effort.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate agree to the committee substitute amendment, that the bill, as amended, be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendment in the nature of substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2896) was read the third time and passed.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from Florida.

I do not know if a bill has ever gone through the Senate any faster. It couldn't have happened without Senator LEAHY. I think passing this kind of bill before we leave for 3 months could be responsible for saving lives.

I am just so appreciative that we can go forward and that every single Senator on both sides of the aisle will give their consent to this bill passing.

So, Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Vermont for his leadership and for helping us work through what could have been a delay, but it was not because of his leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank my good friend from Texas for her kind remarks, but I was simply able to expedite the very good work that she and the distinguished Senator from California have done.

I note that what has happened here is an idea which has come from the Senator from Texas and the Senator from California, who have worked together in a bipartisan fashion. Actually, this is a nonpartisan issue. They are both parents. The Senator from Texas knows how much I admire her work as a parent, as I do the Senator from California.

Whether or not you are a parent, the most terrifying experience is for a child to be suddenly missing, especially if foul play is involved. I am not talking about a child getting lost on the way home from school who is going to show up an hour later because all the neighbors are out looking for that child or a child who stayed too long at a friend's house and forgot to call and then calls a frantic parent 45 minutes or an hour later and says, "Gee, I forgot to tell you I was at Johnny's or Susie's house," or something like that. This comes into play in a case where, much as you hate to suspect there may be foul play, there may well be.

If you can return one child—one child—to the parents, look at what you have done. If you can return hundreds, which is the potential with this legislation, look how much more you have done.

It is the case where you have big States, such as those of the Senator from Texas and the Senator from California. They come from very large States: large geographically, large in population. I come from a very small State: small in geography, small in population. But if you can tie in my part of the country—the northeastern part—we go from very small States, such as mine, to the bordering States of New York and Massachusetts, which are much larger States in population. It is the whole northeastern corridor, but somebody can drive through those States in half the time it takes to drive, for example, across the State of Texas or the length of the State of California. So we have to be able to coordinate.

I think that is why so many came together on this: Senators HATCH, BIDEN, DURBIN, EDWARDS, FEINGOLD, KYL, SESSIONS—and I think you have 34 cosponsors.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Thirty-eight.

Mr. LEAHY. Thirty-eight. I thank the Senator from Texas.

The Senator from Florida represents a State the length of which, if it went in the other direction, it would go across time zones.

Incidentally, people may see the success stories on one or two television programs, where there might have been one last year or last month or last week, but the Department of Justice estimates the number of children taken by strangers annually is between 3,000 and 4,000. That is terrible.

This plan originated in Arlington, TX, after the murder of 9-year-old Amber Hagerman. We will help coordinate. We will make sure the local, State, and Federal officials can work together.

But not only that, private citizens will be involved because they will hear from State broadcasters or from law enforcement people. I don't know of anybody who hears of a missing child who would not want to help. And this will make that possible.

So it will help kidnap victims. It will also preserve the flexibility of the States because States are different in how they want to implement it.

It is disturbing to see on TV or in the newspapers photo after photo of missing children from every corner of the Nation. As the father of three children, as well as a grandfather of one grandson, with another grandchild on the way, I know that an abducted child is a parent's or grandparent's worst nightmare.

Unfortunately, it appears this nightmare is happening all too often. Indeed, the Justice Department estimates that the number of children taken by strangers annually is between 3,000 and 4,000. These parents and grandparents, as well as the precious children, deserve the assistance of the American people and helping hand of the Congress.

By coordinating their efforts, law enforcement emergency management and transportation agencies, radio and television stations, and cable systems have worked to develop an innovative early warning system to help find abducted children by broadcasting information—including descriptions and pictures of the missing child, the suspected abductor, a suspected vehicle, and any other information available and valuable to identifying the child and suspect—to the public as speedily as possible.

The AMBER Alert system's popularity has raced across the United States. Since the original AMBER Plan was established in 1996, 55 modified versions have been adopted at local, regional, and statewide levels. Eighteen States have already implemented statewide plans. It is also a proven success—to date the AMBER Plan has been credited with recovering 30 children.

This bipartisan legislation will authorize the Attorney General, in cooperation with the Secretary of Transportation and the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission to appoint a Justice Department National AMBER Alert coordinator to oversee the Alert's communication network for abducted children. The AMBER Alert Coordinator will work with the States, broadcasters, and law enforcement agencies to set up AMBER plans, serve as a point of contact to supplement existing AMBER plans, and facilitate regional coordination of AMBER alerts.

It also directs the AMBER Alert coordinator, in conjunction with the FCC, local broadcasters, and local law enforcement agencies, to establish voluntary guidelines for minimum standards in determining the criteria for AMBER alerts and for the dissemination of those alerts. As a result, our bipartisan bill helps kidnap victims while preserving flexibility for States in implementing the alert system.

Because developing and enhancing the AMBER alert system is a costly endeavor for States to take on alone, our bipartisan bill establishes two Federal grant programs to share the burden. First, the bill creates a Federal grant program, under the direction of the Secretary of Transportation for statewide notification and communications systems, including electronic message boards and road signs, along highways for the recovery of abducted children. Second, the bill establishes a grant program managed by the Attorney General for the support of AMBER alert communications plans with law enforcement agencies and others in the community.

Our Nation's children, parents and grandchildren deserve our help to stop the disturbing trend of children abductions. I am gratified the Senate has passed the AMBER Alert National Network Act, and I hope the House and the President will act expeditiously on this important piece of legislation to ensure that our communications systems help rescue abducted children from their kidnapers and return them safely to their families.

Mr. President, I thank the Senators who have joined on this measure.

I yield the floor and thank the distinguished Senator from Florida for his courtesy in allowing me to speak. But I hope he will note, in honoring that, I tried to wear a suit as close in color to his as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

ELECTION REFORM

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, before the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee leaves the floor, I want to call to his attention, which I did a few minutes ago to his colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee, that, lo and behold, there are problems with the voting equipment in Florida today during the primary elections. It underscores the fact there is a need for this Congress to enact an election reform package.

In the Senate, we have passed a substantial bill which is a much different version than has been passed by the other body, the House of Representatives. And the conference committee has been unable to come to terms of agreement.

If it can happen in Florida, almost 2 years after the awful experience that the Nation went through in disputed ballots in the general election of November 2000, it can happen anywhere. It was a circumstance which riveted the attention of not only the Nation but the world with ballots that were confusing—ballots that were miscounted because it was difficult to determine the intent of the voter.

In fact, the Florida legislature had responded by providing appropriations so that the various counties, through their supervisors of elections, could modernize and update voting equipment, as well as procedures and providing voter education.

All of that has been in place in the State of Florida, where all of our citizens are so highly sensitive to the fact that their vote might not be counted, as happened in the experience 2 years ago. If it can happen in Florida today, as it literally has on primary election night, then how much more likely will it happen in other States? And how much more do we have to make the case that it is so important for us to get resolution of the differences and come to agreement in an election reform bill for the country as a whole?

That clearly is a matter that is relevant to the moment. As a result of the discrepancies that have happened earlier today in Florida, the Governor has extended the deadline for voting in Florida from 8 o'clock Eastern time to 10 o'clock this evening. So the results of the primary elections will be coming in quite late. Yet it bears to be underscored this is another reason we need to pass the election reform bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

IN MEMORY OF THE CALIFORNIA VICTIMS OF 9/11

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for what he said on the need to get homeland security right. He touched on the Coast Guard as an example of where we don't want to lose the function of the Coast Guard that is so important to our States—those of us who have waterways and oceans and a search-and-rescue element. I could not agree more with that point.

I am also going to be working on the Federal Emergency Management Administration. We know they have come to our rescue many times, and we don't want to lose the ability of that agency to function in a natural disaster, as well as, of course, utilizing them if, God forbid, we have another terrorist attack. I think these are things on which we need to reflect.

I am very pleased that Senator BYRD has slowed us up on considering this bill because it is not about an artificial date; it is about getting it right.

Mr. President, I am here in a very somber mood. We are approximately 15 hours away from the very moment 1 year ago that our Nation was hit, and I want to take just a moment of the Senate's time—maybe 15 minutes—to reflect on that day and, most of all, to remember the Californians we lost that day, numbering 54.

For me, and perhaps for you and many Americans, September has really been a month of excitement and anticipation. I have always loved September. It is the end of the summer, the beginning of a beautiful fall with the changing of the leaves, back to school, and perhaps a little quicker pace, a faster step. September, for most of us, never reminds us of loss, of fear, of shock, of the horrors born of an extreme, unbridled, blind hatred.

In September, we found out about those things. We also found out as a Nation what heroism truly is, how strong and united we can be, how we can set aside differences for the greater good and work together.

The images of September 11 are deep in our minds and deep in our souls. The pain is there, just under the surface. For some of us in America, it is on the surface, and it will always be on the surface for the families who grieve, for the children who will never know a parent—thousands of them—for communities that were decimated.

Today I want to remember those in my State who died on that day. Each was unique. Every one of those planes on that fated day was headed to California. So even though my State was 3,000 miles away from Ground Zero, from the World Trade Center or the Pentagon, we were linked in our sorrow, and we were linked in our outrage.

I am going to read the 54 names, and then I am going to talk a little more about some of the people whose families wanted me to just say a little more about them and show their picture to you.

David Angell; Lynn Angell; David Aoyama; Melissa Barnes; Alan Beaven; Berry Berenson; Dr. Yeneneh Betru; Carol Beug, and her mother Mary Alice Wahlstrom died together on flight 93. Mary Alice is from Utah.

Mark Bingham; Deora Bodley; Touri Bolourchi; Daniel Brandhorst, Ronald Gamboa, and their adopted son, David Brandhorst. He was 3 years old.

Charles "Chic" Burlingame, the captain of American Airlines flight No. 77. Technically, he was from McLean, VA, but his family is from California, and they considered him a Californian, and they said he considered himself a Californian.

Thomas Burnett; Suzanne Calley; Jeffrey Collman; Dorothy DeAraujo; Lisa Frost; Andrew Garcia; Edmund Glazer; Lauren Grandcolas; Andrew Curry Green; Richard Guadagno; Stanley Hall; Gerald Hardacre; John Hart; John Hofer; Melissa Hughes; Barbara Keating; Chandler Keller; Christopher Larrabee; Daniel Lee; Maclovio Lopez; Hilda Marcin; Dean Mattson; Dora Menchaca; Nicole Miller; Laurie Neira; Ruben Ornedo; Marie Pappalardo; Jerrold Paskins; Thomas Pecorelli; Robert Penninger; Mari-Rae Sopper; Xavier Suarez; Alicia Titus; Otis Tolbert; Pendyala Vamsikrishna; Timothy Ward; Christopher Wemmers; John Wenckus.

Mr. President, I want these names to be memorialized again today.

There is a beautiful song called "Try to Remember," and one of the lines is:

Try to remember the kind of September when no one wept except the willow.

Sadly, those of us who lived through September 11, 2001, will weep for our lost brothers and sisters, but we will always remember our country, our embrace of freedom, and our democracy. And we will always cling closer to our loved ones. This place, this great democracy, America, will endure.

Now I am going to tell you a little bit more about a few of the people we lost in California. Many people noted that the New York Times has run an ongoing biography of the people who were lost on that day. I was talking to Bob Kerrey, the former Senator from Nebraska, and he said this to a group of us: When you read those memorials, what you realize is how wonderful and important each of these people was and what wonderful stories were related from their families, their friends, and their coworkers. What really emerged is why this is such a great country. These people, they do not get in the news. They get up and go about their lives. That is what you are going to find out as I read about these people and show these pictures in memoriam.

LAUREN GRANDCOLAS

Mrs. Grandcolas was a 38-year-old advertising sales consultant when the flight she was on, United flight 93, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed in a Pennsylvania field killing everyone on board. We also know of the heroism of the passengers on that plane.

Mrs. Grandcolas was born in Bloomington, IN, and attended the University of Texas at Austin where she met her husband, Jack Grandcolas. After graduation, she worked as a marketing director for a law firm and then for PricewaterhouseCoopers.

At the time of her tragic death, Mrs. Grandcolas was working as an advertising sales consultant at Good Housekeeping magazine and was researching and writing a nonfiction book to help women boost their self-esteem.

Lauren had enthusiasm and passion for life, loved the outdoors and was devoted to physical fitness. She hiked, jogged, kayaked, and enjoyed in-line skating around her neighborhood. Her energy was boundless. She took classes in cooking and gardening, scuba diving, and wine appreciation. Lauren was active with the United Way, March of Dimes, Project Open Hand, Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, Breast Cancer Awareness, and Glide Memorial.

Her husband Jack recalls she had a heart the size of Texas. Knowing her flight had been hijacked, Lauren left her husband a message on their home answering machine and then loaned her cell phone to another passenger to call loved ones.

The joy Lauren felt pursuing new interests and developing new skills was being interwoven in the book she was writing for women. Jack recalls:

She made a point to do things that were good for her, and she thought she could extend what she had learned to help other adult women gain confidence. Her sister and I will fulfill her dream by completing the book.

Lauren Grandcolas is missed deeply by her family.

I wanted to take a moment to tell you a little bit more about her.

NICOLE CAROL MILLER

This next picture in memoriam is of Nicole Carol Miller. I want to start out by reading a poem that was dedicated to Nicole that was written by her father, David James Miller. It was written last September 11. If I cannot get through this, I will put it in the RECORD. My daughter's name is Nicole. This is the poem.

How I love thee My Nicole.

When the thoughts of you come into my mind

It's as if a breeze has passed through our rose garden and the sweet savory I smell

The taste of roses upon my tongue brings the sweetness of your memory to my mind

It comes upon me as the morning dew weighs the roses down

Smooth and pleasant are the thoughts of you, as the petals of a rose

And once again I am nourished with your love.

Nicole Carol was a lovely 21-year-old college student when the flight she was on, United flight 93, was hijacked by the terrorists. That was the plane that was brought down by the passengers in Pennsylvania.

Nicole's memory lives on in the hearts of those she loved. She took great joy in life and exemplified this with her wonderful outlook and her tenacious personality. Nicole's radiant smile, which we can see in this photo, could light up the room as she energized those around her. She knew how to be an outstanding friend. She was blessed with two families, her father and stepmother, David and Catherine Miller of Chico, CA, and her mother and stepfather, Cathy and Wayne Stefani, Sr., of San Jose, CA.

In her father's words:

She had that sweet baby quality. She could make you smile and forget your troubles for a little bit.

Friend Heidi Barnes describes Nicole as very friendly and welcoming. She had a big heart, and it was open to everyone.

Nicole lived in San Jose, CA, with her mother and stepfather. She attended local schools and graduated from Pioneer High School in 1998. A talented softball player during all 4 years of high school, Nicole won a college softball scholarship during her senior year. Even though she had never been a competitive swimmer, she tried out for the Pioneer High swim team as a freshman and made the team. At the time of her tragic death, she was a dean's list student at West Valley College in Saratoga working part time and weighing whether to transfer to California State University at Chico or San Jose State University.

I offer this tribute to Nicole.

HILDA MARCIN

I would like to take this opportunity to share with the Senate the memory of one of my constituents, Hilda Marcin, who lost her life on September 11, 2001. Mrs. Marcin was 79 years old when the flight she was on, United Airlines Flight 93, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed in a Pennsylvania field, killing everyone on board.

Mrs. Marcin was born in Schwedelbach, Germany. When she was 7 years old, her family emigrated to the United States to escape oppression. Like many immigrants, her family left all possessions behind and came only with the clothes on their backs.

Her family settled in Irvington, NJ, where she attended local schools. She worked seven days a week in the payroll department of the New Jersey shipyards during World War II.

A friend arranged a blind date with Edward Marcin and they were married on February 13, 1943. They had two daughters, Elizabeth and Carole. The Marcin family enjoyed participating in school functions, class trips, the PTA, and various church activities. Mr. and Mrs. Marcin were also socially and politically active in Irvington. Mrs. Marcin later worked as a special education teacher's aide.

Hilda Marcin embraced life with enthusiasm and made the most of every minute. She adored her family and her granddaughter, Melissa Kemmerer Lata. She was an inspiration to those she touched, including the special needs children in the school where she worked. Her friends admired her positive attitude and her desire and ability to continue working during the later years of her life. Mrs. Marcin treasured freedom and democracy, and her American citizenship.

At the time of her death, Mrs. Marcin was flying to San Francisco to live with her younger daughter, Carole O'Hare. She is survived by her daughter, Elizabeth Kemmerer and son-in-law Raymond Kemmerer; daughter Carole O'Hare and son-in-law Thomas O'Hare; and granddaughter Melissa Lata and Melissa's husband, Edward Lata. I offer this tribute to her.

DANIEL LEE

Daniel Lee lost his life on September 11, 2001. Mr. Lee was 34 years old when the plane he was on, American Airlines Flight 11, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed into the World Trade Center, killing everyone on board.

Daniel Lee grew up in Palm Desert, CA. He was a carpenter and a drummer in a local southern California band. He met his wife, Kellie, in 1991 at a rock concert in which he was playing the drums. They were married October 7, 1995 and their first child, Amanda Beth, was born December 11, 1998.

Mr. Lee was a dedicated and successful set carpenter in the music industry, known to work 20 hour days when necessary. He worked with many talented musicians including Neil Diamond, Barbara Streisand, N'Sync, Aerosmith and Yanni. He was touring with the Backstreet Boys when, on September 11, 2001, he left to fly home to be with his wife as she was about to give birth to their second child. Allison Danielle Lee was born September 13, 2001.

Kellie Lee recalls Dan's bright, relaxed and charming smile. "He was caring, loving, funny and romantic. He loved being a Dad and was so excited about having another child on the way," she says. One of his special joys was getting friends together for barbecues and pool parties," Kellie remembers.

Dan Lee is survived by his wife, Kellie Lee, his daughters, Amanda and Allison, mother and stepfather Elaine and John Sussino, brothers Jack Fleishman and Stuart Lee and sister, Randi Kaye. I offer this tribute to Daniel Lee.

Mr. President, I take this opportunity to share with the Senate the memory of one of my constituents, Mari-Rae Sopper, who lost her life on September 11, 2001. Ms. Sopper was a 35-year-old lawyer and gymnastics coach when the flight she was on, American Airlines Flight 77, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed into the Pentagon, killing everyone on board.

Ms. Sopper was a native of Inverness, IL, and attended William Fremd High School in Palatine, IL. At the age of 15 she set the goal of becoming a champion gymnast. She succeeded, becoming all-American in 4 events, the school's Athlete of the Year and the state's Outstanding Senior Gymnast of the Year.

Larry Petrillo, her high school gymnastics coach, remembers her as brash and committed. "One thing she taught me is, you never settle for less than you are capable of. We should never accept limits. We should always fight the good fight. She was a staunch supporter of gymnastics and what's right," he recalls.

Upon graduating from Iowa State University with a degree in exercise science, Ms. Sopper earned a master's degree in athletics administration from the University of North Texas and a law degree from the University of Denver. Ms. Sopper was an accomplished dancer and choreographer and continued to coach at gymnastics clubs.

Ms. Sopper practiced law as a Lieutenant in the Navy's JAG Corps, focusing on Defense and Appellate Defense. She had left the Navy JAG Corps and was an associate with the law firm Schmeltzer, Aptaker & Sheperd, P.C. when she found her dream job: to coach the women's gymnastics team at the University of California at Santa Barbara.

It was a 1-year appointment and Ms. Sopper was looking forward to the challenge. Her mother, Marion Kminek, says Mari-Rae was excited about the opportunity. "I said go for it. Life is too short. It was something she had always wanted to do and she was so happy and excited," recalls Kminek.

At the time of her death, Ms. Sopper was moving to Santa Barbara to begin her appointment. Her close friend, Mike Jacki, recalls "This was to be a new adventure for Mari-Rae, and an opportunity to get back into the sport she loved. We have lost a very special person. She was prepared to make her dream come true, and in an instant it was gone."

Mari-Rae Sopper is remembered for her loyalty, strong values, excellent work ethic and spirit for life. She is survived by her mother, Marion Kminek and stepfather, Frank Kminek, her father Bill Sopper, sister Tammy and many loving friends.

Mr. President, the last story I share with the Senate is the memory of one of my young constituents, Deora Bodley, who lost her life on September 11, 2001. Ms. Bodley was a 20-year-old college student when the flight she was on, United Airlines Flight 93, was hijacked by terrorists. As we all know, that plane crashed in a Pennsylvania field, killing everyone on board.

Ms. Bodley grew up in San Diego, California. As a high school student, she visited local high schools to discuss HIV/AIDS with her peers. She volunteered with the Special Olympics and a local animal shelter. Chris Schuck, her English teacher at La Jolla Country Day School, recalls, "Deora was always thinking big and going after big game."

At the time of her death, Ms. Bodley was studying psychology at Santa Clara University. She coordinated volunteers in a literacy program for elementary school students. Kathy Almazol, principal at St. Clare Catholic Elementary, recalls Ms. Bodley had "a phenomenal ability to work with people, including the children she read to, her peer volunteers, the school administrators and teachers. We have 68 kids who had a personal association with Deora."

In the words of her mother, Deborah Borza, "Deora has always been about peace." At the tender age of 11 years, Deora wrote in her journal, "People ask who, what, where, when, why, how. I ask peace." A warm and generous person, Deora was a gifted student and a wonderful friend. Wherever she went, her light shined brightly.

Deora's father, Derrill Bodley, of Stockton, CA, feels her life was about "getting along" and sharing a message of peace. Her 11-year-old sister, Murial, recalls Deora taught her many things and says, "Most of all she taught me to be kind to other people and animals. I cherish the memories of my sister and plan to work hard in school and in everything I do so she can be proud of me like I was of her."

Mr. President, none of us is untouched by the terror of September 11th, and many Californians were part of each tragic moment of that tragic day. Some were trapped in the World Trade Center towers. Some were at work in the Pentagon. And the fates of some were sealed as they boarded planes bound for San Francisco or Los Angeles.

So I am honored and very moved to have had this chance to put into the RECORD today the names of these more than 50 Californians, every one now a bright and shining star in the sky. Their memories will live on and their legacies will live on, as will the memories and legacies of every American and every person, every innocent victim, who was cut down in the most hateful way on that tragic day.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The Senator from Alabama.

TERRORISM

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator from California for her eloquent remarks. It is time for a memory indeed. Tomorrow I will be going to the Pentagon for a memorial service, as will many other Senators, to memorialize that terrible day on September 11, when we lost the people at the Pentagon. Five of those lost at the Pentagon happened to be from the State of Alabama, but the State has lost 10 or more personnel since this war on terrorism began. It has touched the entire country.

Some of our finest people, innocent of any wrongdoing, innocent of any involvement in what might be considered to be oppression or disagreements with the terrorists who did these acts, paid the price. Historically, the civilized world has rejected these acts.

But there is afoot today terrorist groups and terrorist cells throughout the country. A significant number of people would believe they have a right to use terrorism and weapons of mass destruction to kill and maim people who have done nothing in their lives to wrong them. I believe we have to confront that.

The President has been talking about Iraq and the problem it presents. It is a real problem. It is a problem that will not go away.

We could wish it would go away, but it will not go away. The reason is they have been in such continual violation of the agreements they made with regard to not participating in weapons of mass destruction.

We are in a critical time right now. I think the President has done the right thing, to say he wants Congress to participate in a debate and to give him a resolution of support of his action with regard to Iraq. I believe that is a good step. I think it is good, not because it is absolutely clear to me that it is required—I know Senator DAYTON is a member of the Armed Services Committee and has been through a lot of these hearings—but we are at this point with regard to Iraq because we held back. We did not complete the job. We did not continue to move into Baghdad and capture or kill Saddam Hussein and completely take that country in 1991 during the gulf war—Desert Storm. We didn't do that.

We said OK, and the U.N. sort of stepped in, and they wrote up this agreement, and Saddam Hussein agreed to many different things. He agreed to reject weapons of mass destruction, chemical and biological weapons, and not only did he agree not to do those things, he agreed U.N. inspectors could be sent there to actually go into his country and examine anything that looked unusual, he would not attempt to stop that, and we could send inspectors to prove he was not participating in weapons of mass destruction—chemical, biological, or nuclear weapons.

But what has happened? The history is very sad. It is a circumstance that is particularly frustrating. We wish we did not have to direct our attention to it, but we do. It is not going away. He has broken virtually every one of the promises he made, and I suspect, from what I read, the President is going to talk about that at the U.N.

Let me say this about the United Nations. The United Nations is a noble organization, with noble goals, that deserves respect. Remember in the Declaration of Independence, they, the fathers of the American Revolution, used the phrase "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind" to require them to set forth the reasons for separation, the reasons for revolution.

So I think the President should explain to the world—and the U.N. is a great forum to do that—precisely why he believes we should act now.

I suspect what he is going to talk a lot about is resolutions that Saddam Hussein agreed to and that were put forth by the U.N. and were U.N. resolutions that have been violated. Resolution after resolution, for a decade or more, they have been in violation. He will raise that tomorrow—or Thursday, as he should.

The gravity of the problem is clear. Saddam Hussein's violations are matters of life and death. I wish it were not so. I wish it were just some disagreement over tariffs, or maybe oil prices, or something like that. But what we are talking about is that Saddam Hussein has, with determination and consistency for many years before the gulf war—11, 12 years ago, and since—persisted to develop weapons that he has used in this world. So it is a matter of life and death.

They demonstrate not just technical infringements on their agreements but they constitute a deliberate and determined program to develop weapons of mass destruction that he himself can use if he desires, or he can in secret provide to stateless terrorists so they can use these weapons on law-abiding American citizens and people of the world. So there is a real danger here.

Some say: What new evidence do you have to go forward? What new evidence do we have? Apparently, from some of the things you read in the papers—and I will not make reference to anything that is confidential—there have been indications that there is new evidence to indicate continued progress toward achieving dangerous weapons. We know, for example—we were shocked to find, at the time of the gulf war when we were victorious and did the inspection of the nuclear facilities, that Saddam Hussein had—that they were within 6 months of being able to produce a nuclear bomb when the United States successfully defeated Iraq in that war—6 months. The experts did not think that at the time, but the inspection of the country afterwards found that.

So I would say first of all, as Secretary Rumsfeld said: Oftentimes we know what we don't know. We know some things that indicate that he has continued steadfastly to improve chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons. We know that. But precisely how far he has gone we cannot say. But we know what his goal is. It has not changed. So I would say that is important for us to remember.

These things should not come as a surprise to any serious observer of the scene. We have been dealing with this man and his deliberate plans to obtain weapons of mass destruction for quite a number of years, and virtually daily since the gulf war. The fact is, he had no intention of complying with the world's demands to stop. He will not stop. Will a single person in this Congress, will a single person, come forth and say that they believe he will even unequivocally promise to stop? Which I doubt he will—but he might. But more important, will he actually stop production of these weapons? I challenge this body and the House of Representatives, and I will ask that question. Is there anyone here who thinks he sincerely will stop his activities to build weapons of mass destruction? I do not think anyone would.

Why? Is it just anger we are involved in here? Are we just angry over his bellicose statements about the United States? Are we just angry over his attempt to assassinate the President of the United States? Is it just anger over the fact that he gave $25,000 rewards to families of suicide bombers in Israel or other places, people who would murder innocent civilians, that cause us to say we don't trust him? No. It is not anger—although we have a right to be indignant over what he does. But we must not act solely out of anger.

I used to try criminal cases as a Federal prosecutor. Many times, the evidence from credible, honest witnesses would be contradicted solely by the words of the defendant. He would say: I didn't do it.

I used to do a little deal sometimes and talk to the jury. I said: Just because somebody says they won't do it doesn't mean they will not. I can say: I don't have a pencil in my hand, and if I do, I am not going to drop it. And I didn't drop it. I didn't drop the pencil.

Does that change the fact that I had a pencil and I dropped it? I think not.

This man is not credible. What we have to do when we deal with a man of this kind is look at his acts. Can they be just short-term acts? That is important, but long-term acts are even more important.

I think a decision that is to be made by a great nation, a nation that desires to protect its citizens and has the protection and security of its citizens in this country and around the world as its highest priority, that nation has to be serious. We cannot deal in wishful thinking. We cannot do so.

People say to me, basically: Can't we get along? Why do you want to talk about war?

Why do we have to wrestle with these issues? Isn't it possible that Saddam Hussein has seen the light and will change? I think people are not saying that. I don't think people are saying it. But in their hearts they are hoping that. Sometimes I think the same way. Isn't it just possible that this will change?

But let us consider the matter rationally and reasonably. What are the facts? What is the evidence? Is there a case here?

When solely evaluated, I submit there is overwhelming evidence that the facts present a demonstration that Saddam Hussein is manipulating the world, acting to keep them at bay while he steadfastly pursues his plan for weapons of mass destruction in direct violation of the agreement that saved his monstrous regime 11 years ago.

There are many ways to detail the charges against this most vicious dictator with the possible exception of North Korea, the most brutal dictator in the world today, and one who has been more active to export his violence than any other nation in the world today.

At this time, I think we should talk about the Iraq Liberation Act of 1998. This Congress voted on it. It passed the House of Representatives almost unanimously. There were maybe 30 "no" votes. It passed in this body unanimously by consent.

This is what we found in 1998 at a time when Saddam Hussein ejected the inspectors that he agreed to have come into his country. We did nothing about it. This is what the findings say:

The Congress makes the following findings. On September 22nd, 1980, Iraq invaded Iran, starting an 8-year war in which Iraq employed chemical weapons against Iranian troops, and ballistic missiles against Iranian cities.

This country is not Iraq. It is not a backward country. It has a government of laws, longstanding. It has for that region of the world an educated population. They are capable of doing so much better than they are today.

Unfortunately, the people of Iraq are suffering more than anyone else as a result of Saddam Hussein's bad leadership.

It goes on in paragraph 2:

In February of 1988, Iraq forcibly relocated Kurdish civilians—

These are citizens of Iraq—

from their home villages in the Anfal campaign, killing an estimated 50,000 to 180,000 Kurds—

Fifty-thousand to 100,000 of his own civilians in 1988 after he lost the war, after he signed an agreement not to use weapons of mass destruction, and after he agreed to inspections—

On March 16th, 1988, Iraq used chemical weapons against the Iraqi Kurdish civilian opponents in the town of Halabja killing an estimated 5,000 Kurds—

Causing numerous birth defects that affect the town to this day.

How long has it been since a nation in the world used chemical weapons against anyone, much less their own citizens, killing 5,000 Kurds? It is a despicable act by a despicable man who is not worthy to be a part of civilized nations, I submit.

On August 2nd, 1990, Iraq invaded and began a 7-month occupation of Kuwait.

This is a sovereign, independent nation on its border that happened to have substantial oil reserves that Saddam Hussein wanted. So on August 2, 1990, he invaded and began a 7-month occupation killing and committing numerous abuses against Kuwaiti citizens and setting Kuwaiti oilfields ablaze in his retreat.

Do you remember that? Just out of perversion and pure meanness, he set the oilwells on fire, polluting the atmosphere, putting at risk thousands of lives, and causing tremendous expense to bring those fires under control. In fact, they were brought under control better than we had any right to expect. At first, people expected it would take much longer than the long period it ultimately took.

No. 5—this is our findings, the Congress:

Hostilities in Operation Desert Storm ended on February 28th, 1991, and Iraq subsequently accepted the cease-fire conditions in the United Nations Security Council Resolution 687 on April 3, 1991, requiring Iraq, among other things, to disclose and fully permit the dismantlement of his weapons of mass destruction program, and submit to long-term monitoring and verification of such a dismantlement.

That was the basic condition of it. We said: OK. Mr. Saddam Hussein, we will not continue this war. We have ousted you from Kuwait where you had no right to be, but you have to agree to dismantle your weapons of mass destruction. OK. He agreed to that. That was the U.N.-brokered deal.

Paragraph 6:

In April of 1993, Iraq orchestrated a failed plot to assassinate former President George Bush during his April 14 through 16, 1993, visit to Kuwait.

What a despicable act. I submit to you as a Member of the Senate of any party that when a head of a foreign nation deliberately sets about to assassinate the leader or former leader of any great nation, that is something that should not be lightly dealt with. Frankly, I think we dealt with it too lightly at the time. We did take some action but not enough.

This man attempted to kill, assassinate the President, former President of the United States of America while he was visiting Kuwait, a country that former President Bush had led the liberation of and freed from this oppressive regime.

So it continues. That was in April of 1993:

In October of 1994, Iraq moved 80,000 troops to areas near the border of Kuwait posing an imminent threat of renewed invasion of or attack against Kuwait.

This is a man who wants us to get along with him and says, If you want complete destruction of my Government, I will behave and end weapons, and I will get along with my neighbors. And here he is moving 80,000 troops down on the border towards Kuwait where he does not station them normally. It just shows the aggressive hostilities of which he is capable.

On August 31 of 1996, paragraph 8:

In the findings of the U.S. Congress, Iraq oppressed many of its opponents by helping one Kurdish faction capture the seat of a Kurdish regional government.

Since March of 1996, Iraq has systematically sought to deny weapons inspectors from the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq—UNSCOM—access to key facilities and documents, has on several occasions endangered the safe operation of UNSCOM's helicopters transporting UNSCOM personnel in Iraq, and has persisted in a pattern of deception and concealment regarding the history of its weapons of mass destruction program—

And persisted in a pattern of deception and concealment regarding the history of his weapons of mass destruction programs—

The U.S. Congress, U.S. Senate unanimously found:

On August 5 of 1998, Iraq ceased all cooperation with UNSCOM, and subsequently threatened to end long-term monitoring activities by the International Atomic Energy Agency and UNSCOM.

The International Atomic Energy Agency is monitoring Iraq's nuclear bomb capability.

Paragraph 11:

On August 14, 1998, President Clinton signed Public Law 105-235 which declared that "the Government of Iraq is in material and unacceptable breach of its international obligations" and urged the President "to take appropriate action, in accordance with the Constitution and relevant laws of the United States, to bring Iraq into compliance with its international obligations."

No. 12:

On May 1, 1998, President Clinton signed Public Law 105-174, which made $5,000,000 available for assistance to the Iraqi democratic opposition for such activities as organization, training, communication and dissemination of information, developing and implementing agreements among opposition groups, compiling information to support the indictment of Iraqi officials for war crimes, and for related purposes.

It goes on to say:

Sense Of The Congress Regarding United States Policy Toward Iraq.

In Section 3, this is what we found as a Congress:

It should be the policy of the United States to support efforts to remove the regime headed by Saddam Hussein from power in Iraq and to promote the emergence of a democratic government to replace that regime.

I repeat that. That is so important. We voted unanimously in this Senate that:

It should be the policy of the United States to support efforts to remove the regime headed by Saddam Hussein from power in Iraq and to promote the emergence of a democratic government to replace that regime.

I suppose we have tried to do so in many different ways. The problem is, we have not been very successful. Iraq continues to make a mockery of its agreements and continues to build and develop weapons of mass destruction.

So the President is, I am sure, from newspaper reports, going to talk about that to the United Nations. I am so glad that he is because we have to think about an important subject.

Mr. President, you are aware that the Economist magazine, a London publication, in England, which is seriously reviewed around the world—and people give its opinions great weight—has expressed a view that there is no alternative but to war in this circumstance.

A couple months ago, they had an insert on the role of American foreign policy in the world, and they talked about this tension between multilateralism and unilateral action by the President, or can the United States act alone or with a few allies? They raised this question.

Multilateralists say we ought to reach agreements, and those agreements ought to be for the purpose of making our world safer. And they can work in that regard. The question the Economist posed is: What if the people who sign them do not abide by them? What if the people who have signed them deliberately, deceitfully operate in violation of those agreements, thereby threatening the safety and security of the rest of the world? Does the world just sit by and do nothing? Is that a credible response?

Do you think that is what was on President Bush's mind when he said, in recent words—and I think I can quote him directly—"the credibility of the world is at stake"?

Yes, it is one thing to have resolutions. It is one thing to say we are going to have agreements so we can go away and wash our hands and say the matter is solved and the danger is over. That may be OK if it is a trade issue or some such event as that. But if it is a matter of life and death, dealing with a country that is capable of and has proven in the past it will use weapons of mass destruction against enemies in its own country and outside their country, if that is so, then we have a big problem.

So I think the President is determined to confront this issue and that the status quo in Iraq is not sufficient. We need to go back and remember what has already occurred. And that is where we are.

They say: Well, you have to have a unanimous vote. The United Nations has to support this action. I think a decent respect for the United Nations calls on the President to go there and state his case. I think it is important for the President to explain it to good and decent leaders all over the world, and seek their support wherever he can get it. But as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I can tell you, we do not have to have the support of any one nation to defeat Iraq. I hope we can do it promptly.

One thing I do believe is, he does not have popular support in his country and many of the people will be delighted to see him go. And I think it is not as if we are attacking a country that has loyal and decent people willing to die for their country. There may be some, but it is not nearly that many because this man is a brutal dictator.

But the President is required to state his case around the world. That is important. I hope he does not feel compelled to describe, in any detailed way, precisely how he might conduct a war, if a war becomes necessary. Maybe it will not be. I hope it will not be. But from my reading of this history, both before Desert Storm and after, of Saddam Hussein's absolutely steadfast determination to frustrate the world and do what he wants to do, I do not believe he is going to change. So I think we are going to be confronted with that situation sooner or later.

The question is, shouldn't we have the support of the United Nations? The problem there is this: A United Nations resolution requires a Security Council vote, a unanimous vote of the Security Council.

The American people have spent a lot of money building up the greatest military force in the history of the world. We will spend, next year, $370 or so billion on a national defense system for this country. And on the United Nations Security Council there are countries such as France and Germany and England, and also China and Russia. So what are we going to do? Are we going to say that the Chinese or the Russians, or any other member of the Security Council, for any reason they choose, has the right to say: No, Mr. President, we don't agree. You can't use force against Iraq. You can't use force to liberate Kuwait. You can't use force against Panama, as President Bush did. You can't act against Kosovo because we say no?

That is not something that a great nation, the preeminent world power—let's say it frankly—can allow. The preeminent world power—a good and decent nation, whose actions are not for self gain but to vindicate legitimate rights and interests—cannot allow its power to be curtailed by the vote of one nation in the U.N. Security Council.

So the President cannot say: I am going to defer this matter to the U.N. That would be absolutely wrong. It would be unwise. And the American people would not support that. It is our military. We did it to protect our just national interests—not our unjust national interests, but our just, legitimate national interests. I believe the President understands that distinction. I hope that we, as Americans, think that through because some tend to believe we have to have a vote of the U.N. before we can act to defend our national security interests around the world, and that is not correct. Very few would agree with that.

We are in a time of remembrance as we move toward September 11. We will be at the Pentagon tomorrow. Others will be in New York. Others will be in Pennsylvania. Others will have memorials in their communities and towns, as I will be visiting one in Birmingham, hosted by the religious community, to commemorate this sad occasion of September 11.

The President told us we were going to have to return to our fundamental beliefs, we were going to have to be courageous, and if we stepped out and took on these people, and we chased them to their lairs and went after them, we could make the world safer.

I believe the world is safer today. I believe it is an unacceptable policy to allow any nation to harbor terrorists, to allow any nation to allow their territory to be used as a training base or where they can build their weapons and plot their diabolical actions. We cannot allow that to happen. It is against the policy of the United States and this Congress, I believe.

We are in a time that all of us need to study how we got to where we are, being quite serious about this entire circumstance. I am coming to the conclusion that it is very unlikely, based on the consistent, long-term history of Saddam Hussein, that we can reach any kind of agreement with him.

As the Economist magazine said, for 11 years we have been trying to contain him in a box. The box is leaking. Who has suffered most? The people and children of Iraq. They are the ones who have been suffering for these 12 years. It is difficult for us to defend to the Arab world this kind of oppression that falls mainly on the innocent. They said, concluding their very serious editorial: Painful as it is, our vote is for war.

I hope we don't come to that, but I am afraid that is where we are heading. It is a subject we have to talk about. I believe that debate will now commence.

I yield the floor.

REVISIONS TO THE 2002 APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE ALLOCATIONS AND THE BUDGETARY AGGREGATES

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, section 314 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, requires the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee to adjust the budgetary aggregates and the allocation for the Appropriations Committee by the amount of appropriations designated as emergency spending pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

On July 23, I filed adjustments to the 2002 budgetary aggregates and allocation for the Appropriations Committee resulting from the $29.9 billion in emergency funding included in the conference report to H.R. 4775, the 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Act for Further Recovery From and Response to Terrorist Attacks on the United States (Public Law 107-206). The legislation, however, included $5.1 billion in emergency funding that the Congress made contingent on the President designating the total amount as emergency spending within 30 days of enactment. On August 13, the President announced that he would not declare the $5.1 billion as emergency spending, thereby vitiating the entire amount. Consequently, I am lowering the adjustments I made on July 23 by the amount of the contingency—$5.1 billion in budget authority—as well as by the estimated amount of the contingency's impact on 2002 outlays—$0.96 billion.

Pursuant to section 302 of the Congressional Budget Act, I hereby revise the 2002 allocation provided to the Senate Appropriations Committee in the concurrent budget resolution in the following amounts:

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred August 22, 2002 in San Francisco, CA. Two people beat a lesbian outside a nightclub. The assailants, Jack Broughton, 35, and Jean Earl, 32, punched and kicked the victim, who was later treated at San Francisco General Hospital. Police say that the attackers shouted anti-gay slurs, and are investigating the incident as a possible hate crime.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

COMMUNITY HERO

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise to salute a World War II veteran from my home State of Oregon. Today, I want to recognize the efforts of August F. "Gus" Smoorenburg, a member of the European resistance fighters who lived and struggled in Nazi occupied territories throughout the last century's largest and most destructive war.

Born in Amsterdam in the 1920s, Gus was 19 years old when Germany invaded Holland, Luxembourg, and France. To stop the Germans, the Dutch tried using their own landscape, opening the country's famous dams and sluices to stop tanks and trucks filled with soldiers. After the brutal killing of thousands of civilians, including schoolchildren, the Dutch surrendered on May 15, 1940.

The European resistance fighters, as they have come to be known, began as independent groups of youths clandestinely sabotaging the occupying German forces by whatever means at their disposal. Resistance groups sprang up in every Nazi-occupied country. Gradually, like-minded people banded together and worked in secret to overthrow the invaders. Dutch, French and Polish youths risked their lives day and night to slow the advance of the Nazi forces. They accomplished small victories by such simple methods as rearranging traffic signs and filling the gas tanks of their enemy's vehicles with sugar. These groups became a part of an organized European resistance movement when they finally established short-wave radio contact with London and received coded messages.

The risks of joining the resistance were great. A resistance worker caught by the Nazis faced certain death. The Germans sometimes rounded up and executed hundreds of civilians in revenge for an act of sabotage. Gus' life was no exception to this backlash to the resistance fighters. By 1944 his family was living on meager rations of tulip bulbs and two of his fellow resistance fighters and a cousin had been executed by firing squad.

The ferociousness of the fighting and danger that these unsung heroes faced are conveyed by his description of the bombing of Dortmund: "This sight I cannot ever forget: burning roofs collapsing, burning window sills and brick walls crashing down on sidewalks, bricks and debris lying everywhere from roads as well as from houses, blown to pieces. It is unforgettable . . . to see and feel a city, an entire city, on fire."

Gus moved to Portland, OR in 1977 to be closer to his oldest daughter. He has been a valuable member of the community and a welcome piece of living history. I believe it is time that he, along with other resistance fighters, be recognized for the sacrifices they selflessly made fighting the oppressive forces of fascism during those dark years.

Each allied nation is indebted to patriots such as Gus; without their invaluable efforts the greatest war of the last century might have lasted much longer and cost many more thousands of lives. It is with humble respect and praise that I offer my recognition today to Gus and the European resistance fighters.

THE NOMINATION OF PRISCILLA OWEN

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, in light of the continuing criticism of Republicans about the Senate Judiciary Committee's vote on the nomination of Priscilla Owen to be a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, I am making my statement from September 5, 2002, on that vote a part of the RECORD.

I would also like to respond to the misleading suggestion that the Senate Judiciary Committee has never defeated a nominee who received a "well qualified" rating from the American Bar Association. In fact, in the prior six and one-half years of Republican control of the Senate the nominations of more than a dozen judicial candidates with unanimous well qualified ratings were defeated in the Committee through the decision of Republicans to block them from receiving hearings and votes on their nominations. More than three dozen others received partial ratings of "well qualified" and "qualified." More than 50 of President Clinton's judicial nominees never received Committee votes, despite their ratings. The truth is that Republicans defeated dozens of judicial nominees with well-qualified ratings, not in the light of day with a democratic vote, but in the dark of night through secret, anonymous holds or other tactics.

Here are some of the Clinton nominees with unanimous well qualified or partial well qualified ratings who never received a Senate Judiciary Committee vote and whose nominations ended in Committee: Alston Johnson, Fifth Circuit, James Duffy, Ninth Circuit, Kathleen McCree-Lewis, Sixth Circuit, Enrique Moreno, Fifth Circuit, Judge James Lyons, Tenth Circuit, Allen Snyder, D.C. Circuit, Judge Robert Cindrich, Third Circuit, Judge Stephen Orlofsky, Third Circuit, James Beatty, Fourth Circuit, Frederic Woocher, Central District of California, Richard Anderson, District of Montana, Jeffrey Coleman, Northern District of Illinois, John Binger, Western District of Pennsylvania, Elena Kagan, D.C. Circuit, Elizabeth Gibson, Fourth Circuit, Lynette Norton, Western District of Pennsylvania, Judge Legrome Davis, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, Judge Richard Leonard, Eastern District of North Carolina, Judge Linda Reigle, District of Nevada, Gary Sebelius, District of Kansas, Judge David Cercone, Western District of Pennsylvania, Patricia Coan, District of Colorado, Stephen Achelpohl, District of Nebraska, Judge Jorge Rangel, Fifth Circuit, Ronald Gould, Ninth Circuit, and Robert Freedburg, Eastern District of Pennsylvania. This is just a partial list.

Of course some of President Clinton's judicial nominees who received hearings and Committee votes had also received well-qualified ratings, but that did not stop Republicans from voting against them and trying to defeat their nominations. For example, some of the same Republicans who now claim it is unprecedented to defeat a nominee with a well-qualified rating voted against several Clinton nominees with that same rating, either in Committee, on the floor or both. The following nominees with well qualified ratings were subject of Republican efforts to defeat their nominations, despite the rating that Republicans now cling to like a impermeable shield against criticism: Judge Rosemary Barkett, Eleventh Circuit, Judge Merrick Garland, D.C. Circuit, Judge William Fletcher, Ninth Circuit, Judge Ray Fisher, Ninth Circuit, Judge Marsha Berzon, Ninth Circuit, Judge Sonia Sotomayor, Second Circuit, Judge Margaret McKeown, Ninth Circuit, Judge Richard Paez, Ninth Circuit, Judge Margaret Morrow, Central District of California, Judge Gerald Lynch, Southern District of New York, and Mary McLaughlin, Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

Republicans tried mightily to defeat these nominations. In fact, some of these nominees were asked about their ABA membership, as if being active in the Nation's largest bar association were somehow disqualifying. Republicans almost defeated some of these nominations. For example, Judge Paez was voted out of committee with barely a majority, and he received 39 Republican votes against his nomination despite his partial well-qualified rating. Judge Fletcher, who had a unanimous well-qualified rating, received negative votes in Committee from some of the same Republicans now complaining about negative votes on the nomination of Justice Owen, and Judge Fletcher's nomination received 41 Republican votes against his confirmation.

Thus, what Republicans are really complaining about is not that a nominee who received a well-qualified rating was defeated, but that one of their nominees was defeated, regardless of her ABA rating. That is understandable. What is not understandable is their effort to distort the facts and the history of defeat of numerous other nominees of President Clinton who had the same rating as Justice Owen. Those ratings were no obstacle back then to Republican efforts to defeat those nominations, either through blocking hearings and votes or through attempts to defeat nominations in the Committee and on the floor. It was not due to lack of effort on their part that a nominee with a well-qualified rating was not actually voted down on their watch. In fact, dozens were defeated in far less public ways, but their nominations failed, nonetheless, and were returned to the President without confirmation.

Additionally, I would like to respond to the notion that the vote against Justice Owen was somehow "anti-woman." Such a claim, as that made by Attorney General Ashcroft, is absurd. I recall that when John Ashcroft was in the Senate he voted against the confirmation of at least 11 judicial nominees of President Clinton and almost half of them are women who now sit on the federal bench. The Senate Judiciary Committee has been far fairer to this President's judicial nominees, including the women he has nominated to the federal bench.

Since the reorganization of the Senate Judiciary Committee 14 months ago, 17 women nominated to the Federal bench by President Bush have been given a hearing and reported out of committee. Sixteen have already been confirmed by the Democratic-led Senate. Four of these women were nominated to the Circuit Courts and were some of the first nominees in years to receive hearings, after the anonymous holds and obstruction during the period of Republican control of the Senate. Ten of those women nominees with records of fairness as lower federal courts or State court judges have been voted out of the Democratic-led Senate Judiciary Committee, including former Minnesota Supreme Court Justice Joan Lancaster.

Justice Owen's record, in contrast, was not one of fairness and adherence to precedent. Instead, time after time, Justice Owen's written opinions demonstrated her willingness to substitute her policy preferences for those of the Texas legislature and her determination to distort precedent. Even her fellow judges criticized her approach. These issues are discussed in more detail in my full Judiciary Committee statement that follows:

Statement of Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy on September 5, 2002 on the nomination of Justice Priscilla Owen to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit:

Today, the Senate Judiciary Committee considered a number of the President's nominees, including Priscilla Owen to be a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and Reena Raggi to be a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. These two nominees were the 80th and 81st judicial nominees voted on by the Committee in less than 15 months, and the 16th and 17th circuit court nominees voted on by the committee in that time. This committee has worked diligently since the change in majority last summer to consider more than 250 of the President's nominees.

During our first year in the majority, we have held twice as many hearings for President Bush's Courts of Appeals nominees as were held in the first year of the Reagan Administration, when the Senate was controlled by Republicans, and five times as many as in the first year of the Clinton Administration, when the Senate was controlled by Democrats. Under Democratic leadership, this committee has also voted on more judicial nominees, 79 so far, than in any of the six and one-half years of Republican control that preceded the change in majority. We have already voted on twice as many circuit court nominees, 15, as the Republican majority averaged in the years they were in control. In fact, this last year we voted on more judicial nominees than were voted on in 1999 and 2000 combined and on more circuit court nominees than Republicans voted on in 1996 and 1997 combined.

We have achieved what we said we would by treating President Bush's nominees more fairly and more expeditiously than President Clinton's nominees were treated. By many measures the Committee has achieved almost twice as much this last year as Republicans averaged during their years in control.

In the six and one-half year period of Republican control before the change in majority last summer, vacancies on the Courts of Appeals more than doubled from 16 to 33 and overall vacancies rose from 63 to 110. We have reversed those trends, even though 43 vacancies have arisen since the changeover last year.

I have taken a number of actions to seek a cooperative and constructive working relationship with all Senators on both sides of the aisle and with the White House in order to make the confirmation process more orderly, less antagonistic, and more productive. Not all of my efforts have been successful and very few of my suggestions to the Administration have yielded results, but I have continued to make these efforts in the best interests of the country, the Senate and this committee.

I am proud of the work the Committee has done since the change in the majority. I am proud of the way we have considered nominees fairly and expeditiously.

The circuit court nominees voted on by the Senate Judiciary Committee today are two very different examples of the types of nominees sent to the Senate by this President. Judge Reena Raggi was appointed to the trial court in 1987 by President Ronald Reagan. She has a solid record of accomplishment in both the private and public sectors. She received the strong bipartisan support of two Democratic Senators, CHARLES SCHUMER and HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON, and of the New York legal community. We have every reason to believe that she will serve with distinction on the Second Circuit as a fair and impartial judge. She is a conservative Republican.

In sharp contrast is the record of the other circuit court nominee we considered today: Justice Priscilla Owen, a nominee whose record is too extreme even in the context of the very conservative Texas Supreme Court.

Justice Owen has been nominated to fill a vacancy that has existed since January, 1997. In the intervening five years, President Clinton nominated Judge Jorge Rangel, a distinguished Hispanic attorney from Corpus Christi, to fill that vacancy. Despite his qualifications, and his unanimous rating of Well Qualified by the ABA, Judge Rangel never received a hearing from the Committee, and his nomination was returned to the President without Senate action at the end of 1998, after a fruitless wait of 15 months.

On September 16, 1999, President Clinton nominated Enrique Moreno, another outstanding Hispanic attorney, to fill that same vacancy. Mr. Moreno did not receive a hearing on his nomination either, for more than 17 months. President Bush withdrew the nomination of Enrique Moreno to the Fifth Circuit and later sent Justice Owen's name in its place. It was not until May of this year, at a hearing before Senator SCHUMER, that this committee heard from any of President Clinton's three unsuccessful nominees to the 5th Circuit. This May Mr. Moreno and Mr. RANGEL testified along with a number of other Clinton nominees about their treatment by the Republican majority. Thus, Justice Owen is the third nominee to this vacancy and the first to be accorded a hearing before the Committee.

In fact, when the Committee held its hearing on the nomination of Judge Edith Clement to the Fifth Circuit last fall, it was the first hearing on a Fifth Circuit nominee in seven years. By contrast, Justice Owen is the third nomination to the Fifth Circuit on which this committee has held a hearing in less than one year. In spite of the treatment by the former Republican majority of so many moderate judicial nominees of the previous President, we proceeded this July, as I said that we would, with a hearing on Justice Owen.

Justice Owen is one among 16 Texas nominees who have been considered by this Committee since I became Chairman. So far, five District Court judges, four United State Attorneys, three United States Marshals, and three executive branch appointees from Texas have moved swiftly through the Judiciary Committee.

When Justice Owen was initially nominated, the President changed the confirmation process from that used by Republican and Democratic Presidents for more than 50 years. That resulted in her ABA peer review not being received until later in the summer. As a result of a Republican objection to the Democratic leadership's request to retain all judicial nominations pending before the Senate through the August recess, the initial nomination of Justice Owen was required by Senate rules to be returned to the President without action. The Committee nonetheless took the unprecedented action of proceeding during the August recess to hold two hearings involving judicial nominations, including a nominee to the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

In my efforts to accommodate a number of Republican Senators, including the Republican Leader, this Committee's ranking member, and at least four other Republican members of this Committee, I have scheduled hearings for nominees out of the order in which they were received. This has been a longstanding practice of the Committee.

It is also a fact that less controversial nominations are easier to consider and are, by and large, able to be scheduled sooner than more controversial nominations. This is especially important in the circumstances that existed last summer at the time of the change in majority. At that time we faced what Republicans have now admitted had become a vacancies crisis. From January 1995 when the Republican majority assumed control of the confirmation process in the Senate until the shift in majority last summer, vacancies rose from 65 to 110 and vacancies on the Courts of Appeals more than doubled from 16 to 33. I thought it important to make as much progress as quickly as we could in the time available to us last year, and we did. Evaluating the record of a nominee whose record raises questions as serious as those about Justice Owen simply takes longer.

The responsibility to advise and consent on the President's nominees is one that I take seriously and that this committee takes seriously. Justice Owen's nomination to the Court of Appeals has been given a fair hearing and a fair process before this Committee. I thank all Members of the Committee for their fairness. Those who have had concerns have raised them and have heard the nominee's responses, in private meetings, at her public hearing and in written follow-up questions.

I would particularly like to commend Senator FEINSTEIN for her evenhandedness in chairing the hearing for Justice Owen. It was a long day, in which nearly every Senator who is a member of this Committee came to question Justice Owen, and Senator FEINSTEIN handled it with patience and fairness.

I am proud that Democrats and most Republicans have kept to the merits of this nomination, and have not chosen to vilify, castigate, unfairly characterize and condemn without basis Senators working conscientiously to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities. To those who will take this occasion to engage in name-calling or accusations of political posturing, I can only express my disappointment.

The constitutional responsibility to advise and consent to the President's life tenure judicial nominees is not an occasion to rubber stamp. The nomination of Justice Priscilla Owen presents a number of areas of serious concern to me.

The first area of concern to me is Justice Owen's extremism even among a conservative Supreme Court of Texas. The conservative Republican majority of the Texas Supreme Court has gone out of its way to criticize Justice Owen and the dissents she joined in ways that are highly unusual and that highlight her ends-oriented activism. A number of Texas Supreme Court Justices have pointed out how far from the language of statute she has strayed in her attempts to push the law beyond what the legislature intended.

One example is the majority opinion in Weiner v. Wasson, 900 S.W.2d 316, Tex. 1995. In this case, Justice Owen wrote a dissent advocating a ruling against a medical malpractice plaintiff injured while he was still a minor. The issue was the constitutionality of a State law requiring minors to file medical malpractice actions before reaching the age of majority, or risk being outside the statute of limitations. Of interest is the majority's discussion of the importance of abiding by a prior Texas Supreme Court decision unanimously striking down a previous version of the statute. In what reads as a lecture to the dissent, then-Justice John Cornyn, the current Texas Attorney General and Republican nominee for the U.S. Senate, explains on behalf of the majority:

Generally, we adhere to our precedents for reasons of efficiency, fairness, and legitimacy. First, if we did not follow our own decisions, no issue could ever be considered resolved. The potential volume of speculative relitigation under such circumstances alone ought to persuade us that stare decisis is a sound policy. Secondly, we should give due consideration to the settled expectations of litigants like Emmanuel Wasson, who have justifiably relied on the principles articulated in [the previous case]. . . . Finally, under our form of government, the legitimacy of the judiciary rests in large part upon a stable and predictable decision-making process that differs dramatically from that properly employed by the political branches of government. Id. at 12-13. (Citations omitted.)

According to the conservative majority on the Texas Supreme Court, Justice Owen went out of her way to ignore precedent and would have ruled for the defendants. The conservative Republican majority followed precedent and the doctrine of stare decisis.

In Montgomery Independent School District v. Davis, 34 S.W. 3d 559 (Tex. 2000), Justice Owen wrote another dissent which drew fire from a conservative Republican majority, this time for her disregard for legislative language. In a challenge by a teacher who did not receive reappointment to her position, the majority found that the school board had exceeded its authority when it disregarded the Texas Education Code and tried to overrule a hearing examiner's decision on the matter. Justice Owen's dissent advocated for an interpretation contrary to the language of the applicable statute. The majority, which included Alberto Gonzales and two other appointees of then-Governor Bush, was quite explicit about its view that Justice Owen's position disregarded the law:

The dissenting opinion misconceives the hearing examiner's role in the . . . process by stating that the hearing examiner 'refused' to make findings on the evidence the Board relies on to support its additional findings. As we explained above, nothing in the statute requires the hearing examiner to make findings on matters of which he is unpersuaded. . . . Id. at 25-26.

The majority also noted that:

The dissenting opinion's misconception of the hearing examiner's role stems from its disregard of the procedural elements the Legislature established in subchapter F to ensure that the hearing-examiner process is fair and efficient for both teachers and school boards. The Legislature maintained local control by giving school boards alone the option to choose the hearing-examiner process in nonrenewal proceedings. . . . By resolving conflicts in disputed evidence, ignoring credibility issues, and essentially stepping into the shoes of the factfinder to reach a specific result, the dissenting opinion not only disregards the procedural limitations in the statute but takes a position even more extreme than that argued for by the board. . . . Id. at 28.

Collins v. Ison-Newsome, 73 S.W.3d 178, is yet another case where a dissent, joined by Justice Owen, was roundly criticized by the Republican majority of the Texas Supreme Court. The Court cogently stated the legal basis for its conclusion that it had no jurisdiction to decide the matter before it, and as in other opinions where Justice Owen was in dissent, took time to explicitly criticize the dissent's positions as contrary to the clear letter of the law.

At issue was whether the Supreme Court had the proper "conflicts jurisdiction" to hear the interlocutory appeal of school officials being sued for defamation. The majority explained that it did not because published lower court decisions do not create the necessary conflict between themselves. The arguments put forth by the dissent, in which Justice Owen joined, offended the majority, and they made their views known, writing:

The dissenting opinion agrees that "because this is an interlocutory appeal . . . this Court's jurisdiction is limited," but then argues for the exact opposite proposition . . . This argument defies the Legislature's clear and express limits on our jurisdiction. . . . The author of the dissenting opinion has written previously that we should take a broader approach to the conflicts-jurisdiction standard. But a majority of the Court continues to abide by the Legislature's clear limits on our interlocutory-appeal jurisdiction. Id. at 182.

They continue:

[T]he dissenting opinion's reading of Government Code sec. 22.225(c) conflates conflicts jurisdiction with dissent jurisdiction, thereby erasing any distinction between these two separate bases for jurisdiction. The Legislature identified them as distinct bases for jurisdiction in sections 22.001(a)(1) and (a)(2), and section 22.225(c) refers specifically to the two separate provisions of section 22.001(a) providing for conflicts and dissent jurisdiction. . . . [W]e cannot simply ignore the legislative limits on our jurisdiction, and not even Petitioners argue that we should do so on this basis. Id. at 183.

Again, Justice Owen joined a dissent that the Republican majority described as defiant of legislative intent and in disregard of legislatively drawn limits.

Some of the most striking examples of criticism of Justice Owen's writings, or the dissents and concurrences she joins, come in a series of parental notification cases heard in 2000. They include:

In re Jane Doe 1, where the majority included an extremely unusual section explaining its view of the proper role of judges, admonishing the dissent joined by Justice Owen for going beyond its duty to interpret the law in an attempt to fashion policy.

Giving a pointed critique of the dissenters, the majority explained that, "In reaching the decision to grant Jane Doe's application, we have put aside our personal viewpoints and endeavored to do our job as judges—that is, to interpret and apply the Legislature's will as it has been expressed in the statute." 19 S.W.3d 346.

In a separate concurrence, Justice Alberto Gonzales wrote that to the construe law as the dissent did, "would be an unconscionable act of judicial activism."

In re Jane Doe 3, Justice Enoch writes specifically to rebuke Justice Owen and her fellow dissenters for misconstruing the legislature's definition of the sort of abuse that may occur when parents are notified of a minor's intent to have an abortion, saying, "abuse is abuse; it is neither to be trifled with nor its severity to be second guessed."

In one case that is perhaps the exception that proves the rule, Justice Owen wrote a majority that was bitterly criticized by the dissent for its activism. In In re City of Georgetown, 53 S.W. 3d 328, (Tex. 2001), Justice Owen wrote a majority opinion finding that the city did not have to give the Austin American-Statesman a report prepared by a consulting expert in connection with pending and anticipated litigation because such information was expressly made confidential under other law, namely the Texas Rules of Civil Procedure.

The dissent is extremely critical of Justice Owen's opinion, citing the Texas law's strong preference for disclosure and liberal construction. Accusing her of activism, Justice Abbott, joined by Chief Justice Phillips and Justice Baker, notes that the legislature, "expressly identified eighteen categories of information that are 'public information' and that must be disclosed upon request . . . [sec. (a)] The Legislature attempted to safeguard its policy of open records by adding subsection (b), which limits courts' encroachment on its legislatively established policy decisions." Id. at 338. The dissent further protests:

[b]ut if this Court has the power to broaden by judicial rule the categories of information that are 'confidential under other law,' then subsection (b) is eviscerated from the statute. By determining what information falls outside subsection (a)'s scope, this Court may evade the mandates of subsection (b) and order information withheld whenever it sees fit. This not only contradicts the spirit and language of subsection (b), it guts it. Id.

Finally, the opinion concluded by asserting that Justice Owen's interpretation, "abandons strict construction and rewrites the statute to eliminate subsection (b)'s restrictions." Id. at 343.

These examples, together with the unusually harsh language directed at Justice Owen's position by the majority in the Doe cases, show a judge out of step with the conservative Republican majority of the Texas Supreme Court, a majority not afraid to explain the danger of her activist views.

Ends-Oriented Judicial Activism Showing Bias Against Consumers, Victims, Individuals.—I am also greatly concerned about Justice Owen's record of ends-oriented decision making as a Justice on the Texas Supreme Court. As one reads case after case, particularly those in which she was the sole dissenter or dissented with the extreme right wing of the Court, her pattern of activism becomes clear. Her legal views in so many cases involving statutory interpretation simply cannot be reconciled with the plain meaning of the statute, the legislative intent, or the majority's interpretation, leading to the conclusion that she sets out to justify some pre-conceived idea of what the law ought to mean. This is not an appropriate way for a judge to make decisions. This is a judge whose record reflects that she is willing and sometimes eager to make law from the bench.

Justice Owen's activism and extremism is noteworthy in a variety of cases, including those dealing with business interests, malpractice, access to public information, employment discrimination and Texas Supreme Court jurisdiction, in which she writes against individual plaintiffs time and time again, in seeming contradiction of the law as written.

One of the cases where this trend is evident is FM Properties v. City of Austin, 22 S.W. 3d 868 (Tex. 1998). I asked Justice Owen about this 1998 environmental case at her hearing. In her dissent from a 6-3 ruling, in which Justice Alberto Gonzales was among the majority, Justice Owen showed her willingness to rule in favor of large private landowners against the clear public interest in maintaining a fair regulatory process and clean water. Her dissent, which the majority characterized as, "nothing more than inflammatory rhetoric," was an attempt to favor big landowners.

In this case, the Texas Supreme Court found that a section of the Texas Water Code allowing certain private owners of large tracts of land to create "water quality zones," and write their own water quality regulations and plans, violated the Texas Constitution because it improperly delegated legislative power to private entities. The Court found that the Water Code section gave the private landowners, "legislative duties and powers, the exercise of which may adversely affect public interests, including the constitutionally-protected public interest in water quality." Id. at 876-77. The Court also found that certain aspects of the Code and the factors surrounding its implementation weighed against the delegation of power, including the lack of meaningful government review, the lack of adequate representation of citizens affected by the private owners' actions, the breadth of the delegation, and the big landowners' obvious interest in maximizing their own profits and minimizing their own costs.

The majority offered a strong opinion, detailing its legal reasoning and explaining the dangers of offering too much legislative power to private entities. By contrast, in her dissent, Justice Owen argued that, "[w]hile the Constitution certainly permits the Legislature to enact laws that preserve and conserve the State's natural resources, there is nothing in the Constitution that requires the Legislature to exercise that power in any particular manner," ignoring entirely the possibility of an unconstitutional delegation of power. Id. at 889. Her view strongly favored large business interests to the clear detriment of the public interest, and against the persuasive legal arguments of a majority of the Court.

When I asked her about this case at her hearing, I found her answer perplexing. In a way that she did not argue in her written dissent, at her hearing Justice Owen attempted to cast the FM Properties case not as, "a fight between and City of Austin and big business, but in all honesty, . . . really a fight about . . . the State of Texas versus the City of Austin." Transcript at 69. In the written dissent however, she began by stating the, "importance of this case to private property rights and the separation of powers between the judicial and legislative branches . . .", and went on to decry the Court's decision as one that, "will impair all manner of property rights." 22 S.W. 3d at 889. At the time she wrote her dissent, Justice Owen was certainly clear about the meaning of this case—property rights for corporations.

Another case that concerned me is the case of GTE Southwest, Inc. v. Bruce, 990 S.W.2d 605, where Justice Owen wrote in favor of GTE in a lawsuit by employees for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The rest of the Court held that three employees subjected to what the majority characterized as "constant humiliating and abusive behavior of their supervisor" were entitled to the jury verdict in their favor. Despite the Court's recitation of an exhaustive list of sickening behavior by the supervisor, and its clear application of Texas law to those facts, Justice Owen wrote a concurring opinion to explain her difference of opinion on the key legal issue in the case—whether the behavior in evidence met the legal standard for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Justice Owen contended that the conduct was not, as the standard requires, "so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency . . ." Id. at 621. The majority opinion shows Justice Owen's concurrence advocating an inexplicable point of view that ignores the facts in evidence in order to reach a predetermined outcome in the corporation's favor.

At her hearing, in answer to Senator EDWARDS' questions about this case, Justice Owen again gave an explanation not to be found in her written views. She told him that she agreed with the majority's holding, and wrote separately only to make sure that future litigants would not be confused and think that out of context, any one of the outrages suffered by the plaintiffs would not support a judgment. Looking again at her dissent, I do not see why, if that was what she truly intended, she did not say so in language plain enough to be understood, or why she thought it necessary to write and say it in the first place. It is a somewhat curious distinction to make—to advocate that in a tort case a judge should write a separate concurrence to explain which part of the plaintiff's case, standing alone, would not support a finding of liability. Neither her written concurrence, nor her answers in explanation after the fact, is satisfactory explanation of her position in this case.

In City of Garland v. Dallas Morning News, 22 S.W. 3d 351 (Tex. 2000), Justice Owen dissented from a majority opinion and, again, it is difficult to justify her views other than as based on a desire to reach a particular outcome. The majority upheld a decision giving the newspaper access to a document outlining the reasons why the city's finance director was going to be fired. Justice Owen made two arguments: that because the document was considered a draft it was not subject to disclosure, and that the document was exempt from disclosure because it was part of policy making. Both of these exceptions were so large as to swallow the rule requiring disclosure. The majority rightly points out that if Justice Owen's views prevailed, almost any document could be labeled draft to shield it from public view. Moreover, to call a personnel decision a part of policy making is such an expansive interpretation it would leave little that would not be "policy".

Quantum Chemical v. Toennies, 47 S.W. 3d 473 (Tex. 2001), is another troubling case where Justice Owen joined a dissent advocating an activist interpretation of a clearly written statute. In this age discrimination suit brought under the Texas civil rights statute, the relevant parts of which were modeled on Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act (and its amendments), the appeal to the Texas Supreme Court centered on the standard of causation necessary for a finding for the plaintiff. The plaintiff argued, and the five justices in the majority agreed, that the plain meaning of the statute must be followed, and that the plaintiff could prove an unlawful employment practice by showing that discrimination was "a motivating factor." The employer corporation argued, and Justices Hecht and Owen agreed, that the plain meaning could be discarded in favor of a more tortured and unnecessary reading of the statute, and that the plaintiff must show that discrimination was "the motivating factor," in order to recover damages.

The portion of Title VII on which the majority relies for its interpretation was part of Congress's 1991 fix to the United States Supreme Court's opinion in the Price Waterhouse case, which held that an employer could avoid liability if the plaintiff could not show discrimination was "the" motivating factor. Congress's fix, in Section 107 of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, does not specify whether the motivating factor standard applies to both sorts of discrimination cases, the so-called "mixed motive" cases as well as the "pretext" cases.

The Texas majority concluded that they must rely on the plain language of the statute as amended, which could not be any clearer than under Title VII discrimination can be shown to be "a" motivating factor. Justice Owen joined Justice Hecht in claiming that federal case law is clear (in favor of their view), and opted for a reading of the statute that would turn it into its polar opposite, forcing plaintiffs into just the situation legislators were trying to avoid. This example of Justice Owen's desire to change the law from the bench, instead of interpret it, fits President Bush's definition of activism to a "T".

Justice Owen has also demonstrated her tendency toward ends-oriented decision making quite clearly in a series of dissents and concurrences in cases involving a Texas law providing for a judicial bypass of parental notification requirements for minors seeking abortions.

The most striking example is Justice Owen's expression of disagreement with the majority's decision on key legal issues in Doe 1. She strongly disagreed with the majority's holding on what a minor would have to show in order to establish that she was, as the statute requires, "sufficiently well informed" to make the decision on her own. While the conservative Republican majority laid out a well-reasoned test for this element of the law, based on the plain meaning of the statute and well-cited case law, Justice Owen inserted elements found in neither authority. Specifically, Justice Owen insisted that the majority's requirement that the minor be "aware of the emotional and psychological aspects of undergoing an abortion" was not sufficient and that among other requirements with no basis in the law, she, "would require . . . [that the minor] should . . . indicate to the court that she is aware of and has considered that there are philosophic, social, moral, and religious arguments that can be brought to bear when considering abortion." In re Doe 1, 19 S.W. 3d 249, 256 (Tex. 2000).

In her written concurrence, Justice Owen indicated, through legal citation, that support for this proposition could be found in a particular page of the Supreme Court's opinion in Planned Parenthood v. Casey. However, when one looks at that portion of the Casey decision, one finds no mention of requiring a minor to acknowledge religious or moral arguments. The passage talks instead about the ability of a State to, "enact rules and regulations designed to encourage her to know that there are philosophic and social arguments of great weight that can be brought to bear," Casey at 872. Justice Owen's reliance on this portion of a United States Supreme Court opinion to rewrite Texas law was simply wrong.

As she did in answer to questions about a couple of other cases at her hearing, Justice Owen tried to explain away this problem with an after the fact justification. She told Senator CANTWELL that the reference to religion was not to be found in Casey after all, but in another U.S. Supreme Court case, H.L. v. Matheson. She explained that in, "Matheson they talk about that for some people it raises profound moral and religious concerns, and they're talking about the desirability or the State's interest in these kinds of considerations in making an informed decision." Transcript at 172. But again, on reading Matheson, one sees that the only mention of religion comes in a quotation meant to explain why the parents of the minor are due notification, not about the contours of what the government may require someone to prove to show she was fully well informed. Her reliance on Matheson for her proposed rewrite of the law is just as faulty as her reliance on Casey. Neither one supports her reading of the law. She simply tries a little bit of legal smoke and mirrors to make it appear as if they did. This is the sort of ends-oriented decision making that destroys the belief of a citizen in a fair legal system. And most troubling of all was her indicating to Senator FEINSTEIN that she still views her dissents in the Doe cases as the proper reading and construction of the Texas statute.

Last May, President Bush said that his standard for judging judicial nominees would be that they "share a commitment to follow and apply the law, not to make law from the bench." Priscilla Owen's record, as I have described it today, does not qualify her under that standard for a lifetime appointment to the Federal bench.

The President has often spoken of judicial activism without acknowledging that ends-oriented decision making can come easily to ideological conservative nominees. In the case of Priscilla Owen, we see a perfect example of such an approach to the law, and I cannot support it.

As I said earlier, when the President sends us a nominee who raises concerns over qualifications or integrity or who has a misunderstanding of the appropriate role of a federal judge, I will make my concerns known. This is one of those times. In his selection of Priscilla Owen for the Fifth Circuit, the President and his advisors are trying to do to the Fifth Circuit what they did to the Texas Supreme Court. Plucked from a law firm by political consultant Karl Rove, Justice Owen ran as a conservative, pro-business candidate for the Texas Supreme Court, and she received ample support from the business community. She fulfilled her promise, becoming the most conservative judge on a conservative court, standing out for her ends-oriented, extremist decision making. Now, on a bigger stage, the President and Mr. Rove want a repeat performance: sending Justice Owen to a court one step below the Supreme Court of the United States, attempting to skew its decisions out of step with the mainstream.

Before and after he took office, President Bush said he wanted to be a uniter and not a divider, yet he has sent the Senate several nominees who divide the Senate and the American people. Over the last 14 months, the Judiciary Committee has exceeded the pace of recent years in approving more than six dozen of the President's judicial nominees—most of them, conservative Republicans. The Senate by now has confirmed 73 of them. This committee and the Senate have made the judgment that those nominees will fulfill their duties to act fairly and impartially. I urge the President to choose nominees who fit that profile, not the profile of Justice Owen.

The oath taken by Federal judges affirms their commitment to "administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich." No one who enters a federal courtroom should have to wonder whether he or she will be fairly heard by the judge. Justice Priscilla Owen's record shows me that she has not fulfilled that commitment on the Supreme Court of Texas, and I cannot vote to confirm her for this appointment to one of the highest courts in the land.

IMPROVING THE GENETIC NEWBORN SCREENING PROGRAM

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, on August 1, along with my colleague from Connecticut, Senator DODD, introduced a bill designed to improve the Nation's current genetic newborn screening program. Our legislation would provide education grants for physicians and parents, as well as grants to States to improve follow-up and tracking of those children who receive a heelstick screening and receive a positive result for metabolic, genetic, infectious, and other congenital conditions that threaten their health and life.

Each year, newborn screening identifies an estimated 3,000 babies with conditions that would otherwise have had dire consequences. But despite their clear importance, our newborn screening systems are fragmented. Quite simply, all children do not have access to the same genetic tests. Where a child is born and what tests are offered in that State is what determines the tests a newborn receives. In my home State of Ohio, we test for 12 disorders, while right across the border in Kentucky, they test for only four disorders and in Pennsylvania, they test for five. In Massachusetts, however, newborns are tested for 29 disorders.

Furthermore, parents often are not sufficiently informed of the number of tests available in their state and what those tests can help accomplish. Physicians may not know to educate parents, or physicians may talk to parents too late in the birthing process for it to make a difference. Also, State health departments may not follow-up adequately with the parents of a child who receives a positive test result, and health departments may not have the capacity to effectively record or track a large number of positive results.

The bill we are introducing today would go a long way toward streamlining the current newborn screening system by offering states grants to accomplish the following: build and expand existing procedures and systems to report test results to individuals and families, and primary care physicians and subspecialties; coordinate ongoing follow-up treatment with individuals, families, and primary care physicians after a newborn receives an indication of the presence of a disorder on a screening test; ensure seamless integration of confirmatory testing, tertiary care, genetic services, including counseling, and access to developing therapies by participation in approved clinical trials involving the primary health care of the infant; and analyze collected data to identify populations at high risk, examine and respond to health concerns, recognize and address relevant environmental, behavioral, socioeconomic, demographic, and other factors.

This bill is a good start toward ensuring that all newborns receive equal access to genetic tests and that their follow-up care, if needed, is available and coordinated. The importance of these screenings cannot be overstated. It can mean the difference between life and death for a newborn. And that, is something we must address.

I ask my colleagues for their support.

NORMA EUDORA CRONK

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate Norma Eudora Cronk Dickson. On October 16th, 2002 she will celebrate her 100th birthday. Norma is a resident of Chinook, MT.

Norma Dickson was born October 16, 1902. She was the eldest of four children born to John Colburn Cronk and Anna Rogers Cronk. John and Anna Cronk moved to Montana in 1898, and settled in the Milk River Valley in Coburg, MT. Her parents were ranchers and prominent members of the community. Her father John was elected state representative in Montana in 1923. Her parents raised cattle and prize winning Percheron horses. The livestock pavilion at the Blaine County Fairgrounds was dedicated to her father's memory.

Norma attended college and taught for a few years prior to her marriage in 1928 to Dr. Joseph Robert Dickson, another Montana native who practiced dentistry in Chinook, Montana.

Norma and Dr. Dickson had four children; Joseph Robert Dickson Jr., Marilyn Dickson Gregg, James Cronk Dickson, and George William Hunt Dickson. They also have thirteen grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren.

In addition to Norma's dedication to her family, she has been very active in her community of Chinook, MT. Her involvements include the Eastern Star, Chinook Presbyterian Church, and High School Girl's State. She has also worked at the Chinook Senior Center as a volunteer from its inception until she was 97 years old. Finally, she was named Senior of the Year in Chinook. She is a treasure to her community, her State, and of course, to her family.●

CONGRATULATIONS TO D.C. MURPHY

● Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate D.C. Murphy of Nampa, ID on his recent achievement of driving two million miles without a preventable accident. Put into perspective, that is equivalent to driving around the world eighty times, or driving 275 miles every day for the last twenty years. As I am sure you can imagine, this is an incredible feat. Over the twenty years he has been employed by Yellow Transportation, the roads have become increasingly crowded. To travel as many miles as he has without an avoidable accident is an achievement of which he should be very proud.

Over the last twenty years there has been a 39 percent increase in the number of registered large trucks, and at the same time also a 90 percent increase in the number of miles these trucks traveled. It is a credit to the trucking industry, D.C. Murphy, and other truckers with similar responsible driving habits that even though there are more trucks than ever before on the road, the number of accidents has continued to decrease.

Again, let me commend D.C. Murphy on this accomplishment. I would like to wish him continued safety for as long as he is on the road.●

IN MEMORY OF SAM SIMMONS, SHERIFF OF GREENVILLE, SC

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I received sad news from my home State last week. Sam Simmons, the sheriff of Greenville, SC, was tragically taken from us. Sheriff Simmons was a tremendous public servant and long-time friend to law enforcement. He began his law enforcement career at the age of 20 and served his community and state for nearly 29 years in this field.

During his career, this tenacious, yet soft-spoken man worked his way up through the ranks in the Greenville County Sheriff's Office from dispatcher to the top law enforcement officer for Greenville County. I had the opportunity to work with Sheriff Simmons and his staff over the years and knew him to be an extraordinary example of how law enforcement officials should conduct both themselves and their departments.

Last week, several police officers in Sheriff Simmons' department called him a "lawman's lawman." I echo these sentiments and offer my heartfelt condolences to his wife, Mona, and their family.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Ms. LANDRIEU):

S. 2917. A bill to enhance national efforts to investigate, prosecute, and prevent crimes against children by increasing investigatory tools, criminal penalties, and resources and by extending existing laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this summer we were all devastated by the repeated news flashes reporting violent crimes against children across our Nation. In June, Elizabeth Smart, a 14 year old from my home town of Salt Lake City, UT, was kidnapped at gun point from her home. To date, neither Elizabeth nor her abductor has been found.

In July, five-year-old Samantha Runnion was kidnapped while playing with a neighborhood friend down the street from her home in Stanton, CA. The following day, her body was found along a highway, nearly 50 miles from her home. California authorities have charged a man, who reportedly was acquitted just 2 years ago of molesting two girls under the age of 14, with Runnion's abduction, sexual assault and murder.

Elizabeth Smart and Samantha Runnion are just two, among many, recent child victims. The list of tragic cases goes on and on.

These horrific incidents illustrate the need for comprehensive legislation, at both the State and national level, to protect our children. We need to ensure that our law enforcement officers have all the tools and resources they need to find, prosecute, and punish those who commit crimes against our children.

Earlier this year, with Senators LEAHY, SESSIONS, HUTCHINSON, BROWNBACK, EDWARDS and DEWINE, I introduced S. 2520, the "PROTECT Act of 2002". This bill plugged a loophole that existed as a result of a recent Supreme Court decision which struck down key provisions in the "Child Pornography Prevention Act," which I authored and Congress passed in 1996. Among other things, the PROTECT Act prevents child pornographers from escaping prosecution by claiming that their sexually explicit material did not involve real children. Where child pornography includes persons who appear virtually indistinguishable from actual minors, prosecutions can still occur unless a defendant shows that the pornography did not involve a minor.

Today I rise to introduce with my colleagues, Senators FEINSTEIN, HUTCHINSON, HUTCHISON, SESSIONS, DEWINE, THURMOND and GRASSLEY, the "Comprehensive Child Protection Act of 2002," which enhances child crime prosecutions, investigatory tools, penalties and resources in a variety of ways. For the record, I will submit a section by section summary of the bill, but allow me to comment briefly on some of the bill's specific provisions.

First, and most significantly, the bill creates a National Crimes Against Children Response Center. The recent series of tragic events involving child victims has convinced me that we need to take a more proactive approach to prevent, deter and prosecute child predators of all types, abusers, molesters, pornographers and traffickers. And at the same time, we need to provide our children, the vulnerable victims of such predators, with the support systems they need to recover fully from such horrendous crimes and to assist law enforcement in effectively investigating and prosecuting these crimes.

To this end, our bill directs the Federal Bureau of Investigation to establish a National Response Center whose primary mission will be to develop a comprehensive and rapid response plan to reported crimes involving the victimization of children. While the Center is to be established by the FBI in consultation with the Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the new Department of Justice Crimes Against Children Section created by the bill, it will integrate the resources and expertise of other Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, as well as other child services professionals. By forming and training rapid response teams comprised of Federal, State and local prosecutors, investigators, victim witness specialists, mental health and other child services professionals, the Center will greatly enhance our national response and prevention efforts. The combination of valuable expertise and resources provided by such multi-jurisdictional and multi-disciplinary partnerships will increase the likelihood that law enforcement authorities will successfully identify, prosecute and punish child predators, and that child services professionals will provide child victims with much needed support.

Second, this legislation tasks the new Crimes Against Children Section with creating an Internet site that will consolidate sex offender information which States currently release under the Federal reporting act. The bill also directs States that have not developed Internet sites to do so. The creation of a national Internet site will enable concerned citizens to find in one, easily accessible place, critical information about sexual predators.

Currently, all 50 States have statutes that require sex offenders to register and share information with the United States Attorney General through the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and over 30 States make offender information available to the public on the Internet. A national Internet site will enhance the public's ability to find and access information that is already available in the public record, and will protect citizens in states where sex offenders travel or move, often to avoid detection. In short, the national Internet site will provide parents and other concerned citizens with essential information about the whereabouts and backgrounds of child abusers, so they can take all necessary steps to protect our Nation's children.

Third, the bill enhances the ability of federal prosecutors to bring and successfully prosecute cases involving children predators in several ways:

The legislation extends the statute of limitations period that applies to offenses involving the sexual or physical abuse of children by permitting such cases to be brought up until the date the minor reaches age 35, as opposed to age 25 as the law currently provides. I believe that there should rarely, if ever, be a time when we say to a victim who has suffered as a child at the hands of an abuser: you have identified your abuser; you have proven the crime; yet the abuser will remain free because you, the victim, waited too long to come forward. Our criminal justice system should be ready to adjudicate all meritorious claims of child abuse. Abusers should not benefit from the lasting psychological harms they inflict on innocent children. This provision is meant to recognize that the arm of the law should be long in the prosecution of crimes of this heinous nature.

The bill also amends an existing Federal evidentiary rule, Federal Rule of Evidence 414, to permit the admission into evidence of prior offenses involving child molestation or the possession of sexually explicit materials containing minors. The current evidentiary rule permits such evidence to be admitted only where the victim is under 14 years of age. This amendment extends the rule to apply to any victim who is under 18 years of age at the time of the offense. This amendment also makes clear that even where an individual possesses what may be virtual, as opposed to actual, child pornography, such evidence is admissible under Rule 414.

This legislation limits the scope of the common law marital privileges by making them inapplicable in a criminal case in which a spouse stands accused of abusing a child in the home. Where a spouse is charged with abusing a child of either spouse, or a child under the custody or control of either spouse, neither the abuser nor his or her spouse should be permitted to invoke a marital privilege to avoid providing critical evidence in a criminal proceeding.

Fourth, the bill enhances tools that are used to investigate child crimes. It expands the class of offenses that are included in the Combined DNA Index System, CODIS, by adding to the system all federal felony offenses and other designated federal and state sexual offenses that subject Federal offenders to sex registration requirements. This extension will increase law enforcement's ability to solve crimes where DNA evidence is found.

The bill also extends the Federal wiretap statute by adding additional sex exploitation offenses, as well as sex trafficking and other interstate sex offenses, to the statute's list of predicate offenses. As we all know, the Internet is becoming an increasingly popular means by which sexual predators make contact with child victims. Predators frequently initiate relationships with children online, but later seek to make personal contact with the child, either over the telephone or through face to face meetings. But as the law exists today, law enforcement authorities are restricted in their ability to investigate such predators. This amendment will not only aid investigators in obtaining evidence of such crimes, it will also help stop these crimes before a sexual predator makes contact with a child. To obtain a wiretap, law enforcement authorities will still need to meet the strict statutory guidelines of the wiretap statute and obtain authorization from a court. Thus, the legislation will not undermine the legitimate expectations of privacy of law-abiding Americans.

Fifth, this legislation will strengthen criminal penalties by extending the supervised release period that applies to child and sex offenders, increasing the maximum penalties that apply to offenses involving transportation for illegal sexual activity, and directing the United States Sentencing Commission to consider enhancing the sentencing guidelines that apply to criminal offenses with which child predators are frequently charged.

In particular, the bill grants Federal judges the discretion to impose up to lifetime periods of supervised release for individuals who are convicted of sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, transportation for illegal sexual activity, and sex trafficking offenses. Under current law, a judge can impose no more than 5 years of supervised release for a serious felony, and no more than 3 years for a lesser categorized offense. This amendment does not require the judge to impose a period of supervised release longer than 5 years; it simply authorizes a judge to do so where the nature and circumstances of the case justify a longer supervised release period.

In my view, if there is any class of offenders on which our criminal justice system should keep a close eye, it is sexual predators. It is well documented that sex offenders are more likely than other violent criminals to commit future crimes. And if there is any class of victims we should seek to protect from repeat offenders, it is those who have been sexually assaulted. They suffer tremendous physical, emotional and psychological injuries. By ensuring that egregious sexual offenders are supervised for longer periods of time, we will increase the chance that they will be deterred from and punished for future criminal acts.

In addition to increasing the maximum penalties that apply to certain offenses that involve the trafficking of children or other interstate elements, the bill directs the United States Sentencing commission to review the sentencing guidelines that apply to various federal offenses that are used to prosecute kidnappers, sexual abusers and exploiters to ensure that the sentences for these crimes are sufficiently severe where aggravating circumstances exist, such as where the victim was abducted, injured, killed, or abused by more than one person.

The "Comprehensive Child Protection Act of 2002" will enhance our ability to combat crimes against children, but it is by no means an end. Congress needs to continue to explore additional ways in which we can improve our ability on a national level to protect our children. Our children fall victim to many of the same crimes we face as adults, and they are also subject crimes that are specific to childhood, like child abuse and neglect. The effects of such heinous crimes are devastating and often lead to an intergenerational cycle of violence and abuse.

I want to do all I can to ensure that we devote the same intensity of purpose to crimes committed against children, as we do to other serious criminal offenses, such as those involving terrorism. We have no greater resource than our children. I invite the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other entities and professionals who are charged with protecting our children to work with me to improve our federal laws and to assist States in doing the same.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a section-by-section summary analysis of S. 2917 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"COMPREHENSIVE CHILD PROTECTION ACT OF 2002"

Section 1. Title—The Comprehensive Child Protection Act of 2002.

Section 2. Creates a National Crimes Against Children Response Center—The bill directs the Federal Bureau of Investigation to establish a National Crimes Against Children Response Center whose primary mission will be to develop a comprehensive and rapid response plan to reported crimes involving the victimization of children. While the National Response Center is to be established by the FBI, in consultation with the Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the Crimes Against Children Office, it will integrate the resources and expertise of other Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies, as well as other child services professionals. By creating and training rapid response teams comprised of Federal, State and local prosecutors, investigators, victim witness specialists, mental health and other child services professionals, the Center will greatly enhance our national efforts to protect our children from child predators.

Section 3. Creates a National Internet Site for Sexual Offender Information—The legislation directs the new Department of Justice Crimes Against Children Office to create an Internet site that consolidates sex offender information which States currently release under the federal reporting act. The bill also directs States that have not developed Internet sites to do so.

Currently, all 50 states have registration statutes that require sex offenders to register and to share information with the United States Attorney General through the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and over 30 States make offender information available to the public on the Internet. The creation of a national Internet site will enable concerned citizens to find in one, easily accessible place, critical information about sexual predators.

Section 4. Expands the DNA Analysis and Backlog Elimination Act, 42 U.S.C. 14135a(d), by increasing the categories of offenses that are included in the system of convicted offender DNA profiles, the Combined DNA Index System (CODIS). The bill expands the class of offenses that are included in CODIS by adding to the system all Federal felonies and additional offenses that subject Federal offenders to sex registration requirements.

Currently, the DNA Analysis and Backlog Elimination Act includes only select Federal offenses in CODIS. The successful experience of a large number of States which authorize the collection of DNA samples from all felony offenders illustrated the merit of this extension. In these States, numerous crimes have been solved based on DNA evidence obtained from nonviolent felony offenders. The addition of other offenses that subject Federal offenders to sex registration requirements will further enhance enforcement's ability to solve crimes.

Section 5. Extends the Statute of Limitations Period for Child Abuse Offenses contained in 18 U.S.C. 3283 to allow prosecutions of offenses involving the sexual or physical abuse of a child to be brought until the child reaches the age of 35. Currently, such prosecutions may be brought until the child is 25 years of age.

This amendment is intended to recognize that the arm of the law should be long in the prosecution of child abuse offenses. Too often victims of such crimes do not come forward until years after the abuse because they fear their disclosures will lead to further humiliation, shame, and even ostracism. This amendment will reduce the number of meritorious child abuse cases that are barred from prosecution on statute of limitations grounds.

Section 6. Expands Rule 414 of the Federal Rules of Evidence which allows evidence of a defendant's prior acts of child molestation to be admitted in a criminal child molestation case.

The amendment extends the definition of "child" contained in Rule 414 to include any person below the age of 18—rather than age 14, as the Rule now reads. The amendment also makes clear that where a defendant previously possessed what may have been virtual, as opposed to actual, child pornography, such evidence is admissible under Rule 414. Like the possession of actual child pornography, the possession of virtual child pornography is highly probative evidence that should be admissible in a case of child molestation or exploitation.

Section 7. Precludes the Assertion of a Marital Privilege in a Criminal Child Abuse Case in which a spouse stands accused of abusing a child in the home. In such a case, neither the abuser nor his or her spouse should be permitted to invoke a marital privilege to preclude critical testimony relating to the child abuse.

Section 8. Expands the Federal Wiretap Act, 18 U.S.C. 2516(1)(c), by adding as predicate offenses to the statute, sex trafficking, sex exploitation, and other interstate sex offenses. Currently, the wiretap statute authorizes the interception of wire, oral, or electronic communications in the investigation of just two sexual exploitation of children crimes. This expanded tool will be particularly useful to investigators who track sexual predators and child pornographers.

To obtain a wiretap, law enforcement authorities will still need to meet the strict statutory guidelines of the wiretap statute and obtain authorization from a court. Thus, the legislation will not undermine the legitimate expectations of privacy of law-abiding Americans.

Section 9. Extends the Maximum Supervised Release Period that Applies to Sexual Offenders by granting Federal judges the discretion to impose up to lifetime periods of supervised release for individuals who are convicted of sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, transportation for illegal sexual activity, or sex trafficking offenses.

Currently, under the general supervised release statute, 18 U.S.C. 3583, a judge can impose no more than 5 years of supervised release for a serious felony, and no more than 3 years for a lesser categorized offense. This amendment will not require judges to impose a period of supervised release longer than 5 years; it simply authorizes them to do so where the judge sees fit based on the nature and circumstances of the particular case.

Section 10. Increases the Maximum Penalties that Apply to Certain Sexual Related Offenses by doubling the maximum penalties for sexual related offenses involving the trafficking of children and other interstate elements. Stiffer penalties are needed to punish and deter individuals who commit such offenses.

Section 11. Creates a Crimes Against Children Section at the Department of Justice—The bill also directs the Attorney General to appoint a Deputy Assistant Attorney General to oversee a new section at the Department of Justice designated to focus solely on crimes against children. Among other things, the new section will be tasked with prosecuting crimes against children, providing guidance and assistance to Federal State, and local law enforcement agencies and personnel who handle such cases, coordinating efforts with international law enforcement agencies to combat crimes against children, and acting as a liaison with the legislative and judicial branches of government to ensure that adequate attention and resources are focused on protecting our children from predators of all types.

Section 12. Directs the Sentencing Commission to review the guidelines that apply to child abuse and exploitation offenses to determine whether they are sufficiently severe. In so doing, the Sentencing Commission shall consider whether the guidelines are adequate where aggravated circumstances exist: the victim had not attained the age of twelve years, or had not attained the age of sixteen years; the victim died, sustained permanent, life-threatening, or serious injury as a result of the criminal act; the victim was abducted; the victim was abused by more than one individual; the offense involved more than one victim; the offense involved a large number of visual depictions, including multiple images of the same victim; or the offense involved material that portrays sadistic or masochistic conduct or other depictions of violence.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, to introduce the "Comprehensive Child Protection Act of 2002"—a bill to help protect our nation's children from child molestation and other forms of abuse.

Sexual abuse of children is a pervasive and extremely troubling problem in the United States. I learned that over 25 years ago when I was serving as the Country Prosecutor in Greene County, Ohio. I saw what this kind of abuse does to innocent, helpless children and how pervasive the crimes are in our communities. In fact, according to the Congressional Research Service, one of every three girls and one of every seven boys will be sexually abused before they reach the age of 18.

Our local police and prosecutors are on the front line in the fight against these criminals, and they deserve credit and our thanks for their hard work. For example, in Greene County recently, a number of child pornographers were identified and prosecuted when local law enforcement carried out a successful Internet sting operation.

Despite successes like this, however, the data suggest that law enforcement is fighting an uphill battle. Last year, there were over 5,400 registered sex offenders living in my home state of Ohio—an increase of 319 percent over 1998.

Equally troubling, many child molesters prey upon dozens of victims before they are reported to law enforcement. Some evade detection for so long because many children never report the abuse. According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics, between 60 percent and 80 percent of child molestations and 69 percent of sexual assaults are never reported to the police. Of reported sexual assaults, 71 percent of the victims are children, according to the Congressional Research Service.

For these reasons, it is vitally important that Congress do everything in its power to support law enforcement in its efforts to protect our nation's most vulnerable citizens. Enacting the "Comprehensive Child Protection Act of 2002" would be a step in the right direction. By enacting this measure, we would help protect our children from sexual predators, pornographers, and others who abuse children. Among its major provisions, this legislation would:

1. Direct the FBI to establish a new center that creates and trains "rapid response teams" (composed of prosecutors, investigators, and others) to respond promptly to reported crimes against children;
2. Establish a national Internet site that would make sex offender information available to the public in one, easy to access place. Currently, about 30 states make offender information available to the public online;
3. Authorize the collection of DNA samples from registered sex offenders and the inclusion of these DNA samples in the Combined DNA Index System, or "CODIS;"
4. Permit the prosecution of child abuse offenses until a victim reaches the age of 35 (as opposed to the age of 25 under current law). This provision recognizes that victims of such crimes often do not come forward until years after the abuse, out of shame or a fear of further humiliation;
5. Make it easier for investigators to track sexual predators and child pornographers and make it easier to prosecute criminal child abuse/molestation cases;
6. Create a new section at the Department of Justice to focus solely on crimes against children; and
7. Stiffen penalties for sex-related offenses involving children.

This is a good bill—a bill that would help ensure that our children are protected from some of the most heinous of criminals. It is a bill that would increase the punishment for those criminals. And, it is a bill that, quite simply, is the right thing to do. I encourage my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this important measure.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of an act that I am cosponsoring with Senator HATCH that represents one of the most comprehensive pieces of legislation ever drafted to protect children, the Comprehensive Child Protection Act of 2002. As Ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Crime and Drugs, I have been greatly concerned with the recent increase in reports of child abductions and murders, so I am glad to be a part of this effort to address this growing problem. In my tenure on the Judiciary Committee, I have long fought for our Nation's children, and have ardently supported laws that bring them and their families greater protection. I am also pleased that the President will be hosting a conference on missing and exploited children at the end of this month, and I look forward to that conference and appreciate the President's and First Lady's work on behalf of children.

This legislation comes at a critical time because we are hearing more and more about children being taken from their homes or schools and abused, or worse, murdered. Our children are a gift to us, are our national treasure, and are our future. We must do all that we can to protect these innocents and give law enforcement every tool possible to ferret out the criminals who would do our children harm. With this legislation, we will be ensuring a greater measure of protection for our children.

The bill does many important things. First, it helps law enforcement respond immediately to incidents of child abduction, because, as we've seen with the Amber Alert system, time is critical in any abduction case to thwart further injury or harm. The bill creates a National Crimes Against Children Response Center at the FBI that will integrate the resources and expertise of all Federal, State and local law enforcement sources to provide a rapid response for crimes involving child victims. The bill also helps law enforcement by making it possible to get wire taps for suspected sex trafficking and exploitation offenses, and will require that all Federal child sex crimes offenders have their DNA added to the national DNA registry. So the bill will help to centralize information about criminals and crimes, and makes the job of the criminal investigator easier and more accurate through wiretaps and DNA evidence.

The bill also creates a website registry for convicted child sexual offenders so that parents, neighbors, and police know who in their communities is a convicted child predator. This website will supplement registries in all 50 States. This important tool will help families make better and fully-informed decisions about their children's safety, and will greatly aid law enforcements' response to reports of child abductions and other offenses against children.

The bill also gives new tools to prosecutors and the courts. It extends the statute of limitations for prosecuting child offenders, allows prosecutors to introduce evidence of past child sex crimes in sentencing hearings, removes the so-called "spousal privilege" so that a spouse can't stand silent in the prosecution of the other spouse for child sexual abuse, and increases the maximum sentences and probation periods for child sex offenders. These important tools will make our communities safer by helping to rid them of child predators, and by keeping a tight leash on predators when they get released from prison.

So this bill helps the public know about sexual predators in their communities, improves the nation's ability to respond to child abduction reports, and aids criminal investigators and prosecutors in their efforts to protect the public by identifying and locking-up child predators. I ask my fellow Senators to support this important bill.

By Mrs. CLINTON (for herself and Mr. SCHUMER):

By Mr. CAMPBELL (for himself and Mr. INOUE):

S. 2921. A bill to encourage Native contracting over the management of Federal lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today I am pleased to be joined by Senator INOUE to introduce the "Native American Contracting and Federal Lands Management Demonstration Project Act" to expand the highly-successful Indian Self Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 and to bring Native knowledge and sensitivity to the management of Federal lands.

Next week is the 140th anniversary of the bloodiest day in U.S. military history—the Battle at Antietam Creek in Sharpsburg, Maryland. Many Civil War historians see Antietam as the turning point in the Union's victory over the Confederacy and as the victory President Lincoln needed to issue the Emancipation Proclamation.

Americans have a visceral impulse to restrict development of the lands like those at Antietam, not because we are sons of the Union or daughters of the Confederacy, but because we are Americans.

We know that Antietam, like Omaha Beach and Little Bighorn and other places, is a sacred place.

In 1978, Congress passed the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, AIRFA, which declared that it is "the policy of the United States to protect and preserve for American Indians their inherent right of freedom to believe, express and exercise the traditional religions of the American Indian, Eskimo, Aleut, and Native Hawaiians, including but not limited to access to sites, use and possession of sacred objects, and the freedom to worship through ceremonials and traditional rites."

It is clear that twenty-five years after the enactment of the AIRFA, the tools available to protect Native sacred places and religious beliefs are insufficient.

At the same time, as our need for economic activities, such as logging, energy and mining, increases, the clashes between economic and cultural interests also increase.

In 1970, President Nixon's Special Message to Congress on Indian Affairs changed forever Federal Indian law and policy. The President also signed into law legislation transferring the sacred Blue Lake lands back to the Pueblo of Taos. These two events set the stage for both the Indian Self Determination and Education Assistance Act, 1975, as well as the AIRFA, 1978.

The legislation I am introducing builds on these precedents by setting up a demonstration project to expand opportunities for Native contracting on Federal lands. One goal of this bill is to bring to bear the knowledge and sensitivity of Native people to activities that are currently being carried out by Federal agencies.

Under the bill, the Secretary of Interior would select up to 12 tribes or tribal organizations per year to provide archaeological, anthropological, ethnographic and cultural surveys and analysis; land management planning; and activities related to the identification, maintenance, or protection of lands considered to have religious, ceremonial or cultural significance to Indian tribes.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2921

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

For purposes of this subsection, the contracting tribe shall enjoy no less than the same rights and privileges under this Act as would the beneficiary tribe if the beneficiary tribe exercised its rights to contract under section 102 of this Act. If at any time the beneficiary tribe (or tribes) seeks to contract services being provided by the contracting tribe, the beneficiary tribe (or tribes) shall give the contracting tribe and the Secretary of the Interior no less than 180 days' notice.”

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself, Mr. BURNS, Mr. LOTT, Mr. GREGG, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. DODD):

S. 2922. A bill to facilitate the deployment of wireless telecommunications networks in order to further the availability of the Emergency Alert System, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce the Emergency Communications and Competition Act, ECCA, along with my colleague from Montana, Senator BURNS. I am pleased that this legislation has also been co-sponsored by Senators LOTT, GREGG, MIKULSKI, LEAHY, and BAUCUS.

This bill will ensure that consumers will soon be able to avail themselves of an innovative new wireless technology, recently approved by the Federal Communications Commission. It is called the Multichannel Video Distribution and Data Service, MVDDS, a title which accurately describes what this new service will provide consumers: cable competition and a high speed access to the Internet.

Unless Congress Acts, however, it may be years before service is actually deployed to the public. That would be a lost opportunity for consumers, we would lose the opportunity to improve our communications infrastructure, not only for our citizens' access to cable and the Internet, but also for public safety purposes. MVDDS technology can address all of these needs, and we should remove unnecessary and counterproductive regulatory obstacles that prevent its swift deployment.

This bill is supported by consumer groups. The Consumers Union has endorsed this legislation, because it will help ensure that competition rapidly emerges for video programming as well as high speed Internet services. The Consumers Union notes that cable rates have risen 45 percent since cable was deregulated in 1996, an increase that is almost three times faster than inflation. According to the FCC, just one percent of cable communities enjoy “effective competition.” MVDDS can go head-to-head with incumbent cable systems everywhere, and I believe that this good old fashioned competition will result in lower prices and better service for consumers even for those who don't choose to subscribe to MVDDS.

This legislation has also been endorsed by the National Grange, America's oldest general farm and rural public interest organization. The National Grange recognizes the extraordinary opportunity this new wireless technology can offer rural Americans, but it fears that the FCC Order authorizing MVDDS failed to ensure that it will indeed adequately serve rural America. At this time I would ask that these two letters, and other letters of support, be published in the RECORD following my statement.

The bill Senator BURNS and I are introducing today will restore fairness in the FCC licensing process, and in so doing, speed the deployment of MVDDS to applicants that are ready to launch service to the public now.

The ECCA provides that MVDDS applicants will be licensed in the same manner as satellite companies who applied on the same day to share the same spectrum. Currently, the FCC plans to subject only MVDDS applicants to an auction process. This would impose a discriminatory tax on an innovative new technology. Unfortunately, this is more of the same burdensome regulation that I believe has contributed to the collapse of the telecommunications sector. Government regulation is necessary, certainly; but we must be smart in how we regulate business. We must ensure that our laws and regulations are technologically neutral so that government policies don't replace the role of the marketplace in determining the fate of consumer products and services.

Furthermore, an auction would drastically delay the introduction of service to the public. Mr. President, this is quite the opposite of what spectrum auctions are supposed to do. In this case, industry incumbents can use the auction to block the introduction of new competition. A company with vast resources available could easily trounce a small startup in an auction—and then, under the terms of the FCC's Order, it would not have to deploy service for 10 years. Consumers cannot wait for spectrum to be “shelved” for an entire decade.

The ECCA solves this problem by ensuring that only qualified applicants will be licensed. That is, within six months of enactment, the FCC would issue licenses to any applicant that can demonstrate through independent testing that it will employ a technology that won't cause harmful interference to DBS operators with whom they would share spectrum. Then, to be sure that service is in fact deployed, the ECCA requires licensees to provide service to consumers within five rather than ten years.

This legislation also requires that parties who apply for licenses under this provision must assume specific public interest obligations in exchange for their prompt licensing. The bill requires full must-carry of local television stations, and an additional set aside of 4 percent of system capacity for other public interest purposes such as tele-medicine and distance learning. I can assure my colleagues that these are issues particularly important in rural areas in states like Louisiana.

The ECCA will also promote public safety, in two ways. First, it will require MVDDS licensees to air Emergency Alert System warnings. These alerts are presently carried by cable systems and over-the-air broadcasters. However, they are not seen by those who get their programming from DBS unless the viewer happens to be watching a local channel. In states like Louisiana, where DBS operators do not carry local stations, this is particularly important. Unfortunately, my state is not alone—local stations are also not carried in Alaska, Arkansas, Idaho, Iowa, Maine, Montana, Mississippi, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, West Virginia, and Wyoming. In total, over 1,100 TV stations are not carried by DBS.

Second, this legislation requires MVDDS licensees to make their transmission systems available to national security and emergency preparedness personnel on a top-priority basis in times of need. We all know that when emergencies strike, the need for public safety personnel to communicate with one another skyrockets. MVDDS wireless networks, which will be deployed ubiquitously throughout the country, can help alleviate this thirst for spectrum.

For these reasons, I believe that Congress should act on this matter as soon as possible. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and vote for enactment this year. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2922

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are as follows:

(1) To facilitate the deployment of new wireless telecommunications networks in order to extend the reach of the Emergency Alert System (EAS) to viewers of multichannel video programming who may not receive Emergency Alert System warnings from other communications technologies.

(2) To ensure that emergency personnel have priority access to communications facilities in times of emergency.

(3) To promote the rapid deployment of low cost multi-channel video programming and broadband Internet services to the public, without causing harmful interference to existing telecommunications services.

(4) To ensure the universal carriage of local television stations, including any Emergency Alert System warnings, by multichannel video programming distributors in all markets, regardless of population.

(5) To advance the public interest by making available new high speed data and video services to unserved and underserved populations, including schools, libraries, tribal lands, community centers, senior centers, and low-income housing.

(6) To ensure that new technologies capable of fulfilling the purposes set forth in paragraphs (1) through (5) are licensed and deployed promptly after such technologies have been determined to be technologically feasible.

SEC. 3. LICENSING.

(a) GRANT OF CERTAIN LICENSES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Federal Communications Commission shall assign licenses in the 12.2–12.7 GHz band for the provision of fixed terrestrial services using the rules, policies, and procedures used by the Commission to assign licenses in the 12.2–12.7 GHz band for the provision of international or global satellite communications services in accordance with section 647 of the Open-market Reorganization for the Betterment of International Telecommunications Act (47 U.S.C. 765f).

(2) DEADLINE.—The Commission shall accept for filing and grant licenses under paragraph (1) to any applicant that is qualified pursuant to subsection (b) not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act. The preceding sentence shall not be construed to preclude the Commission from granting licenses under paragraph (1) after the deadline specified in that sentence to applicants that qualify after that deadline.

(b) QUALIFICATIONS.—

(1) NON-INTERFERENCE WITH DIRECT BROADCAST SATELLITE SERVICE.—A license may be granted under this section only if operations under the license will not cause harmful interference to direct broadcast satellite service.

(2) ACCEPTANCE OF APPLICATIONS.—The Commission shall accept an application for a license to operate a fixed terrestrial service in the 12.2–12.7 GHz band if the applicant—

(A) successfully demonstrates the terrestrial technology it will employ under the license with operational equipment that it furnishes, or has furnished, for independent testing pursuant to section 1012 of the Launching Our Communities' Access to Local Television Act of 2000 (47 U.S.C. 1110); and

(B) certifies in its application that it has authority to use such terrestrial service technology under the license.

(3) CLARIFICATION.—Section 1012(a) of the Launching Our Communities' Access to Local Television Act of 2000 (47 U.S.C. 1110(a); 114 Stat. 2762A–141) is amended by inserting ", or files," after "has filed".

(4) PCS OR CELLULAR SERVICES.—A license granted under this section may not be used for the provision of Personal Communications Service or terrestrial cellular telephone service.

(c) PROMPT COMMENCEMENT OF SERVICE.—In order to facilitate and ensure the prompt deployment of service to unserved and underserved areas and to prevent stockpiling or warehousing of spectrum by licensees, the Commission shall require that any licensee under this section commence service to consumers within five years of the grant of the license under this section.

(d) EXPANSION OF EMERGENCY ALERT SYSTEM.—Each licensee under this section shall disseminate Federal, State, and local Emergency Alert System warnings to all subscribers of the licensee under the license under this section.

(e) ACCESS FOR EMERGENCY PERSONNEL.—

(1) REQUIREMENT.—Each licensee under this section shall provide immediate access for national security and emergency preparedness personnel to the terrestrial services covered by the license under this section as follows:

(A) Whenever the Emergency Alert System is activated.

(B) Otherwise at the request of the Secretary of Homeland Security.

(2) NATURE OF ACCESS.—Access under paragraph (1) shall ensure that emergency data is transmitted to the public, or between emergency personnel, at a higher priority than any other data transmitted by the service concerned.

(f) ADDITIONAL PUBLIC INTEREST OBLIGATIONS.—

(1) ADDITIONAL OBLIGATIONS.—Each licensee under this section shall—

(A) adhere to rules governing carriage of local television station signals and rules concerning obscenity and indecency consistent with sections 614, 615, 616, 624(d)(2), 639, 640, and 641 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 534, 535, 536, 544(d)(2), 559, 560, and 561);

(B) make its facilities available for candidates for public office consistent with sections 312(a)(7) and 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 312(a)(7) and 315); and

(C) allocate 4 percent of its capacity for services that promote the public interest, in addition to the capacity utilized to fulfill the obligations required of subparagraphs (A) and (B), such as—

(i) telemedicine;

(ii) educational programming, including distance learning;

(iii) high speed Internet access to unserved and underserved populations; and

(iv) specialized local data and video services intended to facilitate public participation in local government and community life.

(2) LICENSE BOUNDARIES.—In order to ensure compliance with paragraph (1), the Commission shall establish boundaries for licenses under this section that conform to existing television markets, as determined by the Commission for purposes of section 652(h)(1)(C)(i) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 534(h)(1)(C)(i)).

(g) REDESIGNATION OF MULTICHANNEL VIDEO DISTRIBUTION AND DATA SERVICE.—The Commission shall redesignate the Multichannel Video Distribution and Data Service (MVDDS) as the Terrestrial Direct Broadcast Service (TDBS).

CONSUMERS UNION,

Washington, DC, August 29, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of Consumers Union, we are writing to seek your support for the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002, sponsored by Senators Landrieu and Burns. This legislation would benefit consumers by ensuring that quality wireless spectrum is available for video programming and a wide range of public services, including emergency warnings.

Consumers Union has long advocated for policies that will increase competition to cable television and encourage deployment of advanced Internet services to rural and underserved communities, and we support policies that encourage efficient use of wireless spectrum. We believe that multichannel video and data distribution service (MVDDS) could provide an extraordinary opportunity for consumers to receive video programming, local broadcast, and broadband Internet access at affordable prices, by efficiently reusing satellite spectrum. However, a recent FCC order authorizing MVDDS fails to ensure that this spectrum will be used for the purpose of competition for video programming.

Nationwide, consumers have seen their cable television rates rise 45 percent since cable was deregulated in 1996, an increase almost three times faster than inflation. In the few areas where there is robust competition among cable providers, rate increases have been less draconian; consumers receive more channels for less money. Direct competition for video services should be a high public policy priority because it results in lower prices and better service for consumers.

Instead, the FCC's decision seems to better serve the interests of companies who want to provide wireless data services to businesses, by defining markets in a way that it will be difficult to provide video services. By basing MVDDS licenses on an entirely different geographic system than what is currently used for television markets, the FCC order would render local television carriage all but impossible, perpetuating artificial scarcity for video spectrum. This virtually forecloses the possibility that MVDDS could be a robust competitor to cable.

At a time when the FCC has also eliminated the 45 MHz spectrum cap, inviting more wireless consolidation, it is far less critical to put additional spectrum on the market for non-video services. Accordingly, we support the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 as a sound approach to ensure that MVDDS is a vehicle for real competition to cable television, especially in rural and underserved areas.

First, the bill would facilitate licensing of companies in the 12.2-12.7 GHz band that are committed to providing these needed consumer services. Moreover, this bill requires that licensees build out these services within five years, compared with the FCC's order which allows license holders to warehouse MVDDS spectrum as long as ten years before providing services. Second, the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 would ensure access to local broadcast signals by including full must carry requirements and retransmission consent requirements in all television markets. Third, this bill fixes the market boundary definition problem by setting license boundaries that conform to existing television market boundaries.

Importantly, the bill would also require each licensee to disseminate Federal, State and local Emergency Alert System warnings to all subscribers. Currently, subscribers to Digital Broadcast Satellite (DBS) programming only receive alerts if they happen to live in an area where local programming is carried by DBS providers. This possibility is denied to subscribers in the 13 states in which DBS provides no local channels (AK, AR, ID, IA, LA, ME, MT, MS, NE, ND, SD, WV, and WY). Given the heightened need for effective local security and emergency management plans, consumers must be able to receive Emergency Alerts regardless of where they live and how they access video programming services.

Finally, the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 includes a number of specific public interest obligations of tremendous benefit to consumers. The bill requires a licensee to make its facilities available for candidates for public office and to provide at least 4% of its capacity for services that promote the public interest, including telemedicine services, educational programming, including distance learning, high speed Internet access to unserved and underserved populations, or local data and video services intended to facilitate public participation in local government and community life.

Consumers Union has long argued that American consumers must have competitive alternatives for video programming as well as for high speed Internet services. The Emergency Communications and Competition Act 2002 will help ensure such competition rapidly emerges. For all of these reasons, we ask you to support the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002.

Respectfully,

CHRIS MURRAY,

Counsel.*

NATIONAL GRANGE, OF THE ORDER OF PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY,
Washington, DC, August 16, 2002.

Hon. MARY L. LANDRIEU,
*U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR LANDRIEU: On behalf of the National Grange, I am writing to thank you for introducing the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 (ECCA) sponsored by Sen. Mary Landrieu (LA) which would assure that multichannel video and data distribution services (MVDDS) will be available and affordable in every rural community across the nation.

The National Grange is America's oldest general farm and rural public interest organization. Founded in 1867, today the Grange represents nearly 300,000 Grange members affiliated with 3200 local, county and state Grange chapters. The Grange members are families and individuals who share a common interest in community involvement, agricultural and rural issues. The Grange is a genuine grassroots, bipartisan, political advocacy organization. The goal of Grange advocacy is the well being and prosperity of rural America.

Rural telecommunication service deployment is a top priority for the National Grange. In our priority issues document Blueprint for Rural America 2002, we described the vital need for telecommunications services in rural areas:

"Adequate access to telecommunications services such as telephone, Internet, satellite and cable is important to rural America. The Internet delivers services and products efficiently, irrespective of geographic location. Today, workers who telecommute can enjoy a rewarding career and a rural life style. Satellite technology can bring new information to every farm in America. We must assure that advanced telecommunications technologies are available in every rural community at affordable costs."

We believe that multichannel video and data distribution services (MVDDS), as set forth in the ECCA, provide an extraordinary opportunity for rural Americans to receive video programming, local broadcast, and broadband Internet access at affordable prices. However, the FCC order authorizing MVDDS failed to ensure that rural America will be adequately served by this new technology. By contrast, the ECCA would assure that MVDDS is available and affordable in every rural community.

First, the ECCA would facilitate licensing of services in the 12.2-12.7 GHz band. It requires that licensees build out services within five years. The FCC rule allows license holders to warehouse MVDDS spectrum for as long as ten years before providing services. Rural Americans cannot afford to wait another ten years for access to advanced telecommunications technologies such as MVDDS. The National Grange believes that license holders should be held to a strict "use or lose" standard if they fail to deploy services within the statutory five-year time frame.

Second, the ECCA would reverse the FCC's inappropriate decision to auction licenses in this band. Historically, auctions have failed to foster competition, particularly in rural markets. Only 31% of spectrum licenses offered for sale in 2001 were actually sold. Rural areas remain grossly underserved by spectrum licensing programs.

Third, it would include full "must carry" requirements for all local broadcast signals in all television markets served by MVDDS providers. Consumers in rural areas depend on local programming for news, information about local events, and other important interests. However, in many states, rural consumers are unable to receive those signals over Direct Broadcast Satellite (DBS) services or even, in some cases, by means of over-the-air free broadcasting.

Fourth, the ECCA would require each licensee to disseminate Federal, State and local Emergency Alert System warnings to all subscribers. Currently, subscribers to DBS programming may or may not receive alerts. DBS provides no local channels in 13 states (AK, AR, ID, IA, LA, ME, MT, MS, NE, ND, SD, WV, and WY). DBS subscribers in these states receive no emergency or local broadcasts at all. Given the heightened need for effective local security and emergency management plans, rural Americans must receive Emergency Alerts regardless of where they live and how they access video programming services.

Finally, the ECCA includes a number of specific public interest obligations that will benefit rural consumers. The bill requires a licensee to provide at least 4% of its capacity for services that promote the public interest, including telemedicine services, distance learning, high speed Internet access to unserved and underserved populations, or local data and video services intended to facilitate public participation in local government and community life. If implemented effectively, these provisions could dramatically change the way that rural Americans engage in civic life, experience education, and find necessary medical services.

The National Grange has a suggestion for improving this bill. We support adding language to the ECCA to protect the property interests of rural Americans with a provision forbidding MVDDS licenses from being used as evidence of public good for private property condemnation proceedings, other than in the cases of existing utility or railroad rights of way. We understand that MVDDS transmission technology is very small, and should not require building new towers or other projects that would require condemnation of private property. Because of this we do not believe there will be any technical justification for license holders to ask local governments to exercise eminent domain authority on private property in order to meet build out requirements.

The National Grange has long argued that rural Americans must have competitive alternatives to cable and Direct Broadcast Satellite services, both for video and high speed Internet services. The Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 will ensure that competitive service is deployed in a timely manner along with critical local and emergency broadcast signals in rural underserved areas. For all of these reasons, we strongly support the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002.

Sincerely,
KERMIT W. RICHARDSON, President.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS,
Washington, DC, September 9, 2002.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights (LCCR), the nation's oldest, largest, and most diverse coalition of organizations committed to the protection of civil and human rights in the United States, writes to express our support for the Electronic Communications and Competition Act of 2002, sponsored by Senators Landrieu and Burns. We believe that the legislation will help bridge the digital divide by encouraging rapid deployment of a new wireless multi-channel video and data technology (MVDDS). This new technology will bring low-cost broadband Internet and video services to rural and underserved areas and increase the prospects for media ownership by minorities and women.

While LCCR was pleased that the Federal Communications Commission approved the creation of MVDDS, the order failed to ensure that MVDDS would provide local broadcast television, video programming, and broadband Internet services throughout the country. There is no question that auctions favor incumbents and are a major impediment to minority media ownership. The Electronic Communications and Competition Act will ensure that MVDDS fulfills, among other things, its potential to increase minority ownership and bridge the digital divide.

Notwithstanding the decades of civil rights community advocacy, minority broadcast ownership is declining. Although minorities represent more than one quarter of the nation's population, they are just 23, or 1.9% of the 1288 owners of licensed, full-power commercial broadcast television stations in the United States.

The Electronic Communications and Competition Act will eliminate the auction requirement and compel immediate licensing of all conforming MVDDS technologies. In addition, it will require license-holders to build out services within five years, significantly narrowing the digital divide. The act will also require that a percentage of each license-holder's capacity be used for public interest purposes such as distance education, telemedicine, or other important local purposes.

In sum, I urge you to support the Electronic Communications and Competition Act. It provides a rare opportunity to increase media diversity and to narrow the digital divide.

Sincerely,
WADE J. HENDERSON,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF LA RAZA,
Washington, DC, September 4, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: As you know, the National Council of La Raza (NCLR) has long advocated on behalf of the nation's growing Hispanic community on a number of economic, education, and other social policy issues. You may not be aware, however, that NCLR has also had a long-standing interest in policy affecting telecommunications, access to the Internet, and the growing concentration of the media industry. That is why I am writing today to seek your support for the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002, sponsored by Senators Mary Landrieu (D-LA) and Conrad Burns (R-MT).

NCLR has been a strong supporter in the past for policies that will increase competition in the cable industry and encourage deployment of advanced Internet services to rural and underserved communities. We have also urged "must carry" rules for all video programming competitors, regardless of platform, to ensure that communities, especially rural ones, have full access to local and emergency broadcast signals. That is why earlier this summer we wrote to a number of lawmakers expressing our support for new technology that will provide multi-channel video and data distribution services ("MVDDS") (a copy of that earlier communication is attached). MVDDS provides a significant opportunity for consumers to receive video programming, local broadcasts and broadband Internet access at affordable prices. As noted in that earlier correspondence, the FCC order authorizing MVDDS failed in many significant respects to serve the interests of consumers and underserved communities.

We urge Congress to enact the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 to ensure that MVDDS benefits are available to all consumers, especially in rural and underserved areas, for a range of reasons.

First, the bill would facilitate licensing of companies in the 12.2-12.7 GHz band who are committed to providing these needed consumer services. Additionally, this bill requires licensees to build out these services within five years, compared with the current FCC rule which allows license holders to warehouse MVDDS spectrum for as long as ten years before providing services.

Second, the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 would include full "must carry" requirements and retransmission consent requirements in all television markets, thereby ensuring access to local broadcast signals. Moreover, this bill sets license boundaries that conform to existing television market boundaries. Local access is critical as consumers depend on local programming for news, information about local events, language appropriate programming, and other critical interests. Current FCC rules for the MVDDS licenses call for entirely different geographic boundaries, which would render local television carriage almost impossible.

Third, the bill would require each licensee to disseminate federal, state and local Emergency Alert System warnings to all subscribers. Today, subscribers to Digital Broadcast Satellite ("DBS") programming only receive alerts if they happen to live in areas where local programming is carried by DBS providers. This possibility does not even exist in the 14 states in which DBS provides no local channels (AK, AR, ID, IA, LA, ME, MT, MS, NE, ND, SD, VT, WV, and WY). Given the heightened need for effective local security and emergency management plans, consumers should be able to receive Emergency Alerts regardless of where they live and how they access video programming services.

Fourth, the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 provides other important benefits to consumers by requiring a licensee to provide at least 4% of its capacity for services that promote the public interest, including telemedicine services, educational and long distance learning programming, high-speed Internet access to unserved and underserved populations, and/or local data and video services intended to facilitate public participation in local governments and community life, and also requires a licensee to make its facilities available for candidates for public office.

Finally, as noted in our earlier correspondence, MVDDS is likely to increase for minority broadcasting ownership opportunities and Latino content over the airwaves, a critically important consideration for NCLR.

NCLR believes that all American consumers are entitled to have access to competitive alternatives to cable and DBS services, for both video and high-speed data services. For the reasons set forth above, we ask you to support the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002.

Sincerely,
RAUL YZAGUIRRE,
President.

AVOYEL-TAENSA TRIBE OF LOUISIANA,
Simmesport, LA, August 28, 2002.

Hon. MARY L. LANDRIEU,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LANDRIEU: I am writing on behalf of the Avoysel-Taensa Indian Organization. We are a rural people by nature and have an obvious concern about the development of rural areas in Louisiana. The Emergency Communications and Compensation Act of 2002 is critical for further development in this legislation and hope that you decide to sponsor it.

This legislation provides benefits for rural areas previously not available. Schoolchildren will have access to the internet—a significant advancement in education for rural communities. Also, this legislation will provide access to a wide-range of television stations for an entire rural area at an affordable cost. Having telemedicine capabilities in community health centers is becoming essential. This new Bill would bring this technology to the rural communities.

This new Bill will also require full "must carry" requirements for all local broadcast signals in all television markets. Consumers in rural areas depend on local programming for news, information about local events, and other important interests. Subscribers to Direct Broadcast Satellite (DBS) do not have access to local broadcast signals in the State of Louisiana.

Most importantly, however, the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002 brings a new level of security to our rural communities. DBS does not distribute Federal, State, and Local emergency alerts to its subscribers. This Act will ensure that emergency alerts will reach the rural communities. Given the heightened need for local security and emergency management, it is imperative that rural Americans receive emergency alerts.

There is a new technology, led by Northpoint Technology that can effectively bring the luxury of satellite television and the necessity of local programming and emergency alerts at an affordable cost to the rural areas of Louisiana. We are pleased you have taken an interest in this legislation and stand by you if you decide to sponsor it.

Sincerely Yours:
ROMES ANTOINE,
Tribal Chief

WILMA MANKILLER,
ROUTE 1, BOX 945,
Stilwell, OK, August 16, 2002.

Hon. MARY LANDRIEU,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LANDRIEU: Thank you for drafting the "Emergency Communications and Competition Act." Passage of your legislation will help facilitate the rapid deployment of the Multichannel Video Distribution and Data Service (MVDDS), a new wireless service that the Federal Communications Commission recently authorized.

This innovative wireless technology can provide affordable video programming (including all local channels) and broadband Internet access to consumers throughout the entire country, and it will be particularly important to Native Americans who live in rural areas where competition all too often is lacking or non-existent.

Your legislation will ensure that the FCC promptly issues licenses to qualified applicants. As you know, the FCC has decided to issue MVDDS licenses through an auction process. Auctions have yet to facilitate the deployment of video service or broadband to Native American communities. I'm particularly worried that in this case an auction may prevent the deployment of actual service for at least a decade.

Unless Congress enacts your legislation, well-heeled opponents of new completion could outbid small startups. Auction participants aren't required to have a proven technology and they don't have to deploy any service for ten years. Your bill corrects this by requiring all applicants to demonstrate they are capable of deploying MVDDS and requiring them to do so in five years.

The National Congress of American Indians (NCAI), the nation's oldest, largest and most representative tribal government, as well as the National Indian Telecommunications Institute (NITI), a tribally-owned and operated not-for-profit organization dedicated to ensuring that Native Americans have the same opportunity to participate in, and benefit from, the digital revolution as other Americans have urged the FCC to license to qualified applicants without an auction process.

As the NCAI wrote to the FCC on March 22, 2002, "The difficulty in finding service providers willing and able to provide telecommunications to Native American communities is well documented. As the FCC's own records show auctions do nothing to narrow that gap and indeed may exacerbate the problem.... If the FCC auctions use of the 12.2-12.7 GHz band, the potential to bring video and broadband services to our communities in that spectrum will remain unfulfilled."

I heartily share these concerns and thus I am very grateful that you have crafted legislation that will ensure the promise of MVDDS in rural America and tribal communities can be fulfilled through prompt licensing of companies that are ready, willing and able to offer new competitive service.

I and several other Native Americans are local affiliates of Northpoint Technology, the only company that has demonstrated its technology through independent testing. We clearly lack the resources to compete at an auction against giant communications companies. I find it remarkable that they are eligible to seek a license when they have no MVDDS technology.

It's also grossly unfair to subject us to MVDDS applicants to an auction when the FCC is issuing licenses—without auction—to several satellite companies that applied to share the same spectrum on the same day I filed my license application. Your legislation will ensure that terrestrial and satellite applicants for the same spectrum are treated in a like manner. While I believe that Northpoint is currently the only qualified terrestrial applicant because it alone submitted equipment for the independent testing conducted by the MITRE Corporation last year, your legislation clearly offers an opportunity for other companies to similarly become qualified by subjecting their own technology to independent testing this year.

Sincerely,

WILMA MANKILLER,
Principal Chief, Cherokee Nation.

MARZULLA & MARZULLA,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
Washington, DC, August 30, 2002.

Re the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002.

Hon. MARY LANDRIEU,
Senate Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LANDRIEU: I am writing to thank you for sponsoring the Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002.

This measure will promote the deployment of the Multi-channel Video Distribution and Data Service ("MVDDS"), an innovative ground-based wireless digital technology that will share spectrum with satellites in the 12.2-12.7 GHz spectrum band. Sharing this spectrum will dramatically increase the capacity of radio spectrum, and promises consumers new and competitive choices for multi-channel video programming and internet broadband services.

Because of its affordability, this technology will also make possible provision of broadband services to underserved populations such as students, library users, Indians on reservations, community center users, seniors, and residents in low-income housing.

However, this bill does more than benefit the consumer. This bill also protects the intellectual property rights of the inventors of this new technology, and thus is consistent with the constitutional framers' intent that creators and owners of intellectual property rights enjoy the fruits of their labor.

As you know, rather than permitting the inventors to utilize their new technology, the FCC instead chose to dismiss the inventors' licensing applications (after allowing their application to languish for over three years), and called for a nationwide spectrum auction. The FCC's refusal to process the inventors' permit application for over three years itself raises serious due process concerns. See, e.g., MCI Telecommunications Corp. v. FCC, 627 F.2d 322, 341 (1980) ("[D]elay in the resolution administrative proceedings can also deprive regulated entities, their competitors or the public of rights and economic opportunities without the due process the Constitution requires.").

The FCC's decision to auction off the right to use the inventors' technology, the only technology currently proven able to allow terrestrial service to reuse the same spectrum currently used by satellite systems, to the highest bidder also smacks of a taking of private property without payment of just compensation. See Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co., 467 U.S. 986, 1003 (1984) ("[I]ntangible property rights ... are deserving of the protection of the Taking Clause has long been implicit in the thing of [the Supreme] Court. . . ."); Webb's Fabulous Pharmacies, Inc. v. Beckwith, 449 U.S. 155, 164 (1980) (holding that government may not "by ipse dixit, ... transform private [property into public property without just compensation.").

Thus, this bill should be enacted not only because it protects the property rights of the inventors, but because it also benefits consumers. This bill will require the FCC to accept an application for a license to operate a fixed terrestrial service in the 12.2-2.7 GHz band only from an applicant that "will employ terrestrial service technology under the license that has been successfully demonstrated with operational equipment that the application has furnished for testing pursuant to section 1012 of the Launching Our Communities' Access to Local Television Act of 2000 (47 U.S.C. §1110) and certifies in its application that it has authority to use such terrestrial service technology under the license." See proposed bill at §3 (b)(1)(B)(i). This bill will also require a license to build out the system covered by the license within five years of the grant of the license. See proposed bill at §3 (c).

These requirements will ensure that the FCC issues licenses promptly and in a fair and constitutional manner to qualified applicants (i.e., any party that demonstrates its own technology can share spectrum with satellites would be eligible for a license). This bill will finally enable consumers to enjoy an important new competitive service that is so long overdue.

Seldom does one bill protect private property rights, increase competition, and provide more service options for the public. I am happy to report that this bill accomplishes all three. I commend you for authoring this important legislation and ask that you call upon me if any can be of any assistance to help secure its passage.

Yours truly,

NANCIE G. MARZULLA.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, today I rise with my colleague from Louisiana, Sen. LANDRIEU, to introduce the "Emergency Communications and Competition Act of 2002" or "ECCA."

This bill will build upon previous legislation I authored, the LOCAL TV Act, to help ensure that all local TV stations, not just those in the largest markets are available to consumers. As a former broadcaster, I know Montana has some of the smallest of the Nations' 210 television markets, from 169th-ranked Missoula all the way down to 210th-ranked Glendive.

Today, the satellite operators provide local channels in 52 markets. I'm not crossing my fingers that they will get to Glendive anytime soon. That's why we need this legislation. It will enable the rapid deployment of the new Multichannel Video Programming and Data Distribution Service, MVDDS, which the Federal Communications Commission authorized earlier this year.

I commend the FCC for authorizing this new service, it not only promises to bring local channels to all markets, regardless of size, but it will also provide broadband Internet access to rural Americans who have no such access today. I expect that the low cost of this wireless technology will translate into low prices for consumers. This is precisely the kind of innovative new technology we should encourage and promote.

I am most concerned, however, that unless we pass this legislation, we may never see the deployment of this new service. The FCC has determined that licenses for this new service should be auctioned. I appreciate the FCC's effort to help generate new revenues for the Federal Treasury, but we must never let that consideration override good public policy judgments. The public interest is best served when the spectrum is licensed promptly to applicants that are ready to deploy service.

While auctions make sense in many instances, this is not always the case. Two years ago, Congress passed the ORBIT Act, legislation I authored which, in part, exempted from auctions "spectrum used for the provision of international or global satellite communications services."

We are now confronted with a case of first impression in which the FCC has determined to issue licenses to both terrestrial and satellite applicants that share the same spectrum. Previously this was thought to be technologically impossible, as I mentioned, the FCC has now determined that the terrestrial-based MVDDS can share with satellites. In my judgment, the same Federal resource must be licensed in the same manner to all applicants, regardless of the technology they will employ. To do otherwise is to pick industry winners and losers. This bill corrects this problem.

Whereas the United States reaffirms its support for the sovereignty, legal continuity, and territorial integrity of Bosnia and Herzegovina within its internationally recognized borders and also reaffirms its support for the equality of the three constituent peoples and others in Bosnia and Herzegovina in a united multiethnic country, according to the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina;

Whereas, during the 10 years since its recognition, Bosnia and Herzegovina has made significant progress in overcoming the legacy of the internecine conflict of 1992-1995 instigated by ultranationalist forces hostile to a multiethnic society, and has persevered in building a multiethnic democracy based on the rule of law, respect for human rights, and a free market economy, as shown by the results of the elections held in November 2000;

Whereas most citizens and the national authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina share the democratic values of the international community and feel the responsibility to uphold them;

Whereas the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina is committed to international security and democratic stability and in that spirit has begun discussions to initiate the process of qualifying for membership in the Partnership for Peace; and

Whereas, after the attacks of September 11, 2001 on the United States, Bosnia and Herzegovina, as a reliable friend of the United States, immediately positioned itself within the anti-terrorism coalition of nations, sharing the common interests and values of the free and democratic world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) commends Bosnia and Herzegovina for the significant progress it has made during the past decade on the implementation of the Dayton Peace Agreement and on the implementation of the Constituent Peoples' Decision of the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina;

(2) applauds the democratic orientation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and urges the further strengthening by its government and people of respect for human rights, of the rule of law, and of its free market economy;

(3) urges Bosnia and Herzegovina as rapidly as possible to make fully operational all national institutions and state-level governmental bodies mandated by the Dayton Peace Agreement;

(4) welcomes and supports the aspiration of Bosnia and Herzegovina to become a member of the Partnership for Peace and, pursuant thereto, underscores the importance of creating a joint military command as soon as possible;

(5) urges the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina to accelerate the return of refugees and displaced persons and to intensify its cooperation with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia at The Hague, in particular with regard to surrendering to the Court individuals indicted for war crimes;

(6) reaffirms the importance for the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina of that country's participation in the European integration process and, in that context, welcomes the notable improvement in mutual cooperation among the successor states of the former

Yugoslavia and the strengthening of cooperation within the region as a whole, developments which are essential for long-lasting peace and stability in Southeastern Europe; and

(7) recognizes the important role of the Bosnian-Herzegovinian-American community in the further improving of bilateral relations between the United States and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the amendment to the preamble be agreed to, the preamble, as amended, be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 309) was agreed to.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

LIEUTENANT BILLY JILES

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a true American hero. As violent crime rips through America's homes and neighborhoods, leaving ruined lives in their wake, a group of brave men and women fight this scourge. These men and women are our law enforcement professionals.

Lt. Billy Jiles of the Carroll County Sheriff Department was one such man. Every day he risked his life to keep our community safe. He was willing to pay the ultimate price for this battle, as he did on September 3, 2002. Going about his daily duties, Lt. Jiles responded to a routine 911 arson call at the residential home. As the arsonist fled the scene he was confronted by Lt. Jiles, the criminal then murdered Lt. Jiles.

As a result of this crime, Lt. Billy Jiles has left behind a wife and two young children. While nothing can ease the pain for Lt. Jiles' family and friends, we are able to take some comfort in knowing his sacrifice saved the lives of so many others.

I commend the dedication and selflessness of Lt. Jiles, a 20-year veteran of the Carroll County Sheriff's Department. I hope his life and legacy will serve as an incentive for all to continue to fight the war against crime in America.

IN HONOR OF THE OUTSTANDING SERVICE PROVIDED BY THE DELAWARE CHAPTER OF THE NATIONAL MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, during my service as a Member of the House of Representatives, it has been my honor and privilege to rise and pay tribute to organizations and people who really make a difference in the Delaware community. Today, I rise to recognize the Delaware Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society and its over 1,000 dedicated volunteers.

The Delaware Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis (MS) Society has been serving Delawareans coping with MS for over 25 years. The information, support, and funding the Delaware Chapter provides is paramount in the fight to find a cure for this devastating disease currently afflicting over 1,100 people in Delaware, and over one-third of a million people across the Nation.

As many of my Colleagues may know, MS is a chronic, often disabling disease of the nervous system. Symptoms may be mild, such as numbness in the limbs, or severe, such as paralysis or loss of vision. Most people with MS are diagnosed between the ages of 20 and 40, but the unpredictable physical and emotional effects can be lifelong. The progress, severity and specific symptoms of MS in any one person cannot yet be predicted, but advances in research and treatment are giving hope to those affected by the disease.

This hope comes in the form of increased funding for research into the causes of MS, the development of new treatments, and the possibilities of a cure. Since the chapter was founded nearly 25 years ago, The Delaware Chapter has been instrumental in raising funds through events such as the MS 150 Bike to the Bay and the Delaware MS walk, which combined raised nearly $1.25 million in the past two years. And over its 25 year existence, the Delaware Chapter of the National MS Society has raised over $16.8 million for local and National MS research projects and estimates its 2002 totals to reach nearly $2 million.

These astounding numbers exemplify the dedication and hard work that have been the hallmark of volunteerism in the State of Delaware. Without the more than 1,000 volunteers and over 3,000 event participants, the mission of the National MS Society, ending the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis, would be that much farther away. Delaware volunteers, like Bianca Fraser, who this year alone raised over $45,000 in the MS walk for the Delaware Chapter, and will be inducted into the National MS Society National Fund-raising Hall of Fame, have proven themselves to be some of the best in the Nation—a fact that many of us in Delaware have known for quite some time now.

The Delaware Chapter also developed and maintains many beneficial programs for those living with MS and their families, including self-help groups, peer support systems, and counseling services. Through its educational programs, Moving Forward; Information Seminars; and Knowledge is Power, and through its Lending Library, the Delaware Chapter has become the premier source of information for Delawareans seeking to better understand this potentially debilitating disease, its causes and symptoms, available treatments and breakthroughs in research, and most importantly, the Chapter offers individuals the solace that they are not alone and that there are those who are dedicated to finding a cure.

The Delaware Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society and its volunteers have shown themselves to be exemplary models of dedication and caring within the Delaware community. I commend them for their quarter century of service and continued efforts in improving the lives of their fellow Delawareans.

MAGEE RIETER HONORED FOR 10TH YEAR IN A ROW

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the attention of the House of Representatives to the continuing outstanding achievement of the employees of Magee Rieter Automotive Systems of Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, which has won General Motors' prestigious "Supplier of the Year Award" for the tenth consecutive year.

Of GM's 30,000 suppliers, Magee Rieter Automotive Systems is the only ten-time winner in North America. This is truly a tremendous achievement and one of which the company and all of its employees should be proud.

Magee Rieter, the leading supplier of carpets to General Motors in America, will celebrate this accomplishment on September 10, 2002. The company has been in business in Bloomsburg since 1889 and has been supplying General Motors for more than 90 years, first with hand-draped tapestries of Fisher Body carriages, through today's production of fully molded carpet floors and integrated acoustical systems.

Through the past 113 years, the company has endured and overcome numerous challenges, including floods, fires and the rapidly changing business environment. The company received the Army/Navy "E" Award for Excellence after World War II in recognition of its production of high-quality materials for the war effort.

As demonstrated by the more recent awards, the current employees have carried on the tradition of pride and success handed down by their parents, grandparents and great-grandparents who worked at Magee Rieter. Under the leadership of President and Chief Executive Officer Mike Katerman, Magee Rieter continues to be a cornerstone of the Bloomsburg community.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to call to the attention of the House of Representatives the hard work and impressive achievement of the people of Magee Rieter, and I wish them all the best.

INDIAN PRIME MINISTER TO SPEAK TO UNITED NATIONS—U.N. SHOULD PRESS HIM ON HUMAN RIGHTS, TERRORISM

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on September 13, the Prime Minister of India,

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Atal Bihari Vajpayee, will speak to the United Nations in New York. There are several issues that should be brought up while Mr. Vajpayee is there.

I am sure that Prime Minister Vajpayee will denounce terrorism. India claims to be democratic, after all. But India continues to sponsor cross-border terrorism in the Pakistani province of Sindh, according to the Washington Times. It continues to engage in terrorist activity against the minorities within its own borders. Recently, India admitted that its troops were responsible for the massacre of 35 Sikhs in the village of Chithisinghpura in March 2000. The Council of Khalistan issued an excellent press release on this, which I will introduce later. In November 1994, the Indian newspaper Hitavada reported that the late governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, was paid $1.5 billion by the Indian government to foment terrorism in Punjab and Kashmir. The book Soft Target alleged that India blew up its own airliner in 1985 to blame Sikhs and justify further repression. These are just a few examples.

India continues to practice repression against its minorities. Its ongoing repression of Christians is well-documented. Recently, The Hindu reported that the death toll for this spring's violence in Gujarat is as high as 5,000. That is more people than were killed in the World Trade Center attack. The newspaper also reported that police officers were ordered not to intervene to stop the violence, in a scary echo of the Delhi massacre of Sikhs in 1984. Recently, in Malout, a peaceful demonstration of Sikh activists was fired upon by Indian police. In 1997, police gunfire broke up a Christian religious festival. The pattern continues.

America cannot and must not permit this to go unchallenged. When Prime Minister Vajpayee is in the country, he must be pressed on the issues of terrorism, democracy, and human rights. We should halt aid to India until it corrects these patterns of behavior, and we should support self-determination for all of the 17 freedom movements within India's borders. These measures will help to end terrorism in South Asia and promote real democracy and stability there. Mr. Speaker, I would like to place the Council of Khalistan's press release on India's admission that it was responsible for the Chithisinghpura massacre into the RECORD at this time.

INDIAN GOVERNMENT ADMITS ITS RESPONSIBILITY FOR MASSACRE IN CHITHISINGHPORA—EVIDENCE A FRAUD, INDIAN SOLDIERS IMPLICATED

WASHINGTON, DC, AUG. 2, 2002.—According to today's Washington Times, the Indian government has admitted that its forces were responsible for the massacre of 35 Sikhs in the village of Chithisinghpura, Kashmir on March 20, 2000. India finally admitted that the evidence it used to implicate alleged Kashmiri "militants" in the murders was faked.

This is a victory for Sikhs, including the Council of Khalistan, who have maintained that the Indian government is responsible for this atrocity. However, it is only after India's case against the alleged "militants" was exposed that it took responsibility.

The massacre was timed to occur at the time of former President Clinton's visit to India. Recent attacks on minorities also blamed on alleged "militants", took place just before Secretary of State Colin Powell visited. At the time of the Chithisinghpura massacre, Dr. Gurmit Singh Aulakh, President of the Council of Khalistan, strongly condemned the murders. "What motive would Kashmiri freedom fighters have to kill Sikhs? This would be especially stupid when President Clinton is visiting. The freedom movements in Kashmir, Khalistan, Nagaland, and throughout India need the support of the United States," he said. Khalistan is the Sikh homeland declared independent on October 7, 1987.

The massacres continued a pattern of repression and terrorism against minorities by the Indian government, which it attempts to blame on other minorities to divide and rule the minority peoples within its artificial borders. In November 1994, the Indian newspaper Hitavada reported that the Indian government paid the late governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, $1.5 billion to organize and support covert terrorist activity in Punjab, Khalistan, and in neighboring Kashmir. The book Soft Target, written by Canadian journalists Brian McAndrew and Zuhair Kashmeri, shows that the Indian government blew up its own airliner in 1985 to blame Sikhs and justify further repression. It quotes an agent of the Canadian Security Investigation Service (CSIS) as saying, "If you really want to clear up the incidents quickly, take vans down to the Indian High Commission and the consulates in Toronto and Vancouver. We know it and they know it that they are involved." On January 2, the Washington Times reported that India sponsors cross-border terrorism in the Pakistani province of Sindh.

A report issued last year by the Movement Against State Repression (MASR) shows that India admitted that it held 51,268 political prisoners under the repressive "Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act" (TADA) even though it expired in 1995. Many have been in illegal custody since 1984. There has been no list published of those who were acquitted under TADA and those who are still rotting in Indian jails. Additionally, according to Amnesty International, there are tens of thousands of other minorities being held as political prisoners. On February 28, 42 Members of the U.S. Congress from both parties wrote to President Bush to urge him to work for the release of Sikh political prisoners. The MASR report quotes the Punjab Civil Magistracy as writing "if we add up the figures of the last few years the number of innocent persons killed would run into lakhs [hundreds of thousands]."

Indian security forces have murdered over 250,000 Sikhs since 1984, according to figures compiled by the Punjab State Magistracy and human-rights organizations. These figures were published in the book The Politics of Genocide by Inderjit Singh Jaijee. India has also killed over 200,000 Christians in Nagaland since 1947, over 80,000 Kashmiris since 1988, and tens of thousands of other minorities. Christians have been victims of a campaign of terror that has been going on since Christmas 1998. Churches have been burned, Christian schools and prayer halls have been attacked, nuns have been raped, and priests have been killed. Missionary Graham Staines and his two sons were burned alive while they slept in their jeep by militant Hindu members of the RSS, the parent organization of the ruling BJP.

"It is good that India has finally admitted its responsibility for the massacre at Chithisinghpura," Dr. Aulakh said. "Now I urge the U.S. government to place sanctions on India as a country and practices and promotes terrorism. The Chithisinghpura massacre proves that India is not a democracy, but a repressive, terrorist state which murders its minorities."

ABOLISHING THE FEDERAL RESERVE

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce legislation to restore financial stability to America's economy by abolishing the Federal Reserve. I also ask unanimous consent to insert the attached article by Lew Rockwell, president of the Ludwig Von Mises Institute, which explains the benefits of abolishing the Fed and restoring the gold standard, into the RECORD.

Since the creation of the Federal Reserve, middle and working-class Americans have been victimized by a boom-and-bust monetary policy. In addition, most Americans have suffered a steadily eroding purchasing power because of the Federal Reserve's inflationary policies. This represents a real, if hidden, tax imposed on the American people.

From the Great Depression, to the stagflation of the seventies, to the burst of the dotcom bubble last year, every economic downturn suffered by the country over the last 80 years can be traced to Federal Reserve policy. The Fed has followed a consistent policy of flooding the economy with easy money, leading to a misallocation of resources and an artificial "boom" followed by a recession or depression when the Fed-created bubble bursts.

With a stable currency, American exporters will no longer be held hostage to an erratic monetary policy. Stabilizing the currency will also give Americans new incentives to save as they will no longer have to fear inflation eroding their savings. Those members concerned about increasing America's exports or the low rate of savings should be enthusiastic supporters of this legislation.

Though the Federal Reserve policy harms the average American, it benefits those in a position to take advantage of the cycles in monetary policy. The main beneficiaries are those who receive access to artificially inflated money and/or credit before the inflationary effects of the policy impact the entire economy. Federal Reserve policies also benefit big spending politicians who use the inflated currency created by the Fed to hide the true costs of the welfare-warfare state. It is time for Congress to put the interests of the American people ahead of the special interests and their own appetite for big government.

Abolishing the Federal Reserve will allow Congress to reassert its constitutional authority over monetary policy. The United States Constitution grants to Congress the authority to coin money and regulate the value of the currency. The Constitution does not give Congress the authority to delegate control over monetary policy to a central bank. Furthermore, the Constitution certainly does not empower the Federal Government to erode Americans' living standard via an inflationary monetary policy.

In fact, Congress' constitutional mandate regarding monetary policy should only permit currency backed by stable commodities such as silver and gold to be used as legal tender. Therefore, abolishing the Federal Reserve and returning to a constitutional system will enable America to return to the type of monetary system envisioned by our Nation's founders: one where the value of money is consistent because it is tied to a commodity such as gold. Such a monetary system is the basis of a true free-market economy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to stand up for working Americans by putting an end to the manipulation of the money supply which erodes Americans' standard of living, enlarges big government, and enriches well-connected elites, by cosponsoring my legislation to abolish the Federal Reserve.

WHY GOLD?

(By Llewellyn H. Rockwell, Jr.)

As with all matters of investment, everything is clear in hindsight. Had you bought gold mutual funds earlier this year, they might have appreciated more than 100 percent. Gold has risen $60 since March 2001 to the latest spot price of $326.

Why wasn't it obvious? The Fed has been inflating the dollar as never before, driving interest rates down to absurdly low levels, even as the federal government has been pushing a mercantile trade policy, and New York City, the hub of the world economy, continues to be threatened by terrorism. The government is failing to prevent more successful attacks by not backing down from foreign policy disasters and by not allowing planes to arm themselves.

These are all conditions that make gold particularly attractive.

Or perhaps it is not so obvious why this is true. It's been three decades since the dollar's tie to gold was completely severed, to the hosannas of mainstream economists. There is no stash of gold held by the Fed or the Treasury that backs our currency system. The government owns gold but not as a monetary asset. It owns it the same way it owns national parks and fighter planes. It's just another asset the government keeps to itself.

The dollar, and all our money, is nothing more and nothing less than what it looks like: a cut piece of linen paper with fancy printing on it. You can exchange it for other currency at a fixed rate and for any good or service at a flexible rate. But there is no established exchange rate between the dollar and gold, either at home or internationally.

The supply of money is not limited by the amount of gold. Gold is just another good for which the dollar can be exchanged, and in that sense is legally no different from a gallon of milk, a tank of gas, or an hour of babysitting services.

Why, then, do people turn to gold in times like these? What is gold used for? Yes, there are industrial uses and there are consumer uses in jewelry and the like. But recessions and inflations don't cause people to want to wear more jewelry or stock up on industrial metal. The investor demand ultimately reflects consumer demand for gold. But that still leaves us with the question of why the consumer demand exists in the first place. Why gold and not sugar or wheat or something else?

There is no getting away from it: investor markets have memories of the days when gold was money. In fact, in the whole history of civilization, gold has served as the basic money of all people wherever it's been available. Other precious metals have been valued and coined, but gold always emerged on top in the great competition for what constitutes the most valuable commodity of all.

There is nothing intrinsic about gold that makes it money. It has certain properties that lend itself to monetary use, like portability, divisibility, scarcity, durability, and uniformity. But these are just descriptors of certain qualities of the metal, not explanations as to why it became money. Gold became money for only one reason: because that's what the markets chose.

Why isn't gold money now? Because governments destroyed the gold standard. Why? Because they regarded it as too inflexible. To be sure, monetary inflexibility is the friend of free markets. Without the ability to create money out of nothing, governments tend to run tight financial ships. Banks are more careful about the lending when they can't rely on a lender of last resort with access to a money-creation machine like the Fed.

A fixed money stock means that overall prices are generally more stable. The problems of inflation and business cycles disappear entirely. Under the gold standard, in fact, increased market productivity causes prices to generally decline over time as the purchasing power of money increases.

In 1967, Alan Greenspan once wrote an article called Gold and Economic Freedom. He wrote that:

"An almost hysterical antagonism toward the gold standard is one issue which unites statisticians of all persuasions. They seem to sense—perhaps more clearly and subtly than many consistent defenders of laissez-faire—that gold and economic freedom are inseparable, that the gold standard is an instrument of laissez-faire and that each implies and requires the other. . . . This is the shabby secret of the welfare statisticians' tirades against gold. Deficit spending is simply a scheme for the confiscation of wealth. Gold stands in the way of this insidious process. It stands as a protector of property rights."

He was right. Gold and freedom go together. Gold money is both the result of freedom and its leading protector. When money is as good as gold, the government cannot manipulate the supply for its own purposes. Just as the rule of law puts limits on the despotic use of police power, a gold standard puts extreme limits on the government's ability to spend, borrow, and otherwise create crazy unworkable programs. It is forced to raise its revenue through taxation, not inflation, and generally keep its house in order.

Without the gold standard, government is free to work with the Fed to inflate the currency without limit. Even in our own times, we've seen governments do that and thereby spread mass misery.

Now, all governments are stupid but not all are so stupid as to pull stunts like this. Most of the time, governments are pleased to inflate their currencies so long as they don't have to pay the price in the form of mass bankruptcies, falling exchange rates, and inflation.

In the real world, of course, there is a lag time between cause and effect. The Fed has been inflating the currency at very high levels for longer than a year. The consequences of this disastrous policy are showing up only recently in the form of a falling dollar and higher gold prices. And so what does the Fed do? It is pulling back now. For the first time in nearly ten years, some measures of money (M2 and MZM) are showing a falling money stock, which is likely to prompt a second dip in the continuing recession.

Greenspan now finds himself on the horns of a very serious dilemma. If he continues to pull back on money, the economy could tip into a serious recession. This is especially a danger given rising protectionism, which mirrors the events of the early 1930s. On the other hand, a continuation of the loose policy he has pursued for a year endangers the value of the dollar overseas.

How much easier matters were when we didn't have to rely on the wisdom of exalted monetary central planners like Greenspan. Under the gold standard, the supply of money regulated itself. The government kept within limits. Banks were more cautious. Savings were high because credit was tight and saving was rewarded. This approach to economics is the foundation of a sustainable prosperity.

We don't have that system now for the country or the world, but individuals are showing their preferences once again. By driving up the price of gold, prompting gold producers to become profitable again, the people are expressing their lack of confidence in their leaders. They have decided to protect themselves and not trust the state. That is the hidden message behind the new luster of gold.

Is a gold standard feasible again? Of course. The dollar could be redefined in terms of gold. Interest rates would reflect the real supply and demand for credit. We could shut down the Fed and we would never need to worry again what the chairman of the Fed wanted. There was a time when Greenspan was nostalgic for such a system. Investors of the world have come to embrace this view even as Greenspan has completely abandoned it.

What keeps the gold standard from becoming a reality again is the love of big government and war. If we ever fall in love with freedom again, the gold standard will once more become a hot issue in public debate.

IN RECOGNITION OF JOHN J. BIONDI

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and congratulate an outstanding member of our community and northern New Jersey—John J. Biondi, who at the end of this month will conclude more than thirty years of service to the New Jersey Education Association, and four decades of contribution to the students and education community of northern New Jersey.

As a former teacher myself, I take especial pleasure in congratulating John on the occasion of his retirement, and applauding him for his valuable leadership in and contribution to the NJEA and Bergen County's education community. John is an outstanding example of the type of person who makes Bergen County, our State, and our Nation such a wonderful place. He exemplifies the American values that have made our country great.

During the course of his distinguished career, John's contribution to education in New Jersey has been as both a dedicated teacher and a dogged advocate for issues central to education.

Educated at Newark's Barringer High School, John earned his bachelor's degree from Rutgers University in 1964, majoring in history and science. In the years following his graduation, John brought science alive to the students in New Jersey, first as a science teacher at Belleville Junior High School, and later as a teacher of chemistry and biology at Lakewood High School. John's graduate work in personnel and guidance came at Fairleigh Dickinson University and my own alma mater, Montclair State College.

In 1969, John began what would become a lifelong career of advocacy for education issues as Vice President of the Lakewood Education Association. The following year, John served as President of the LEA and the chairman of its negotiation committee. At the county level, John was a representative to the Ocean County Council of Education Associations.

For the past thirty-one years, John has served New Jersey's education community as a UniServe Representative for the New Jersey Education Association. As a vital member of the NJEA's staff, John's career has been characterized by unswerving dedication, professionalism, and enthusiasm for educating both NJEA members and New Jersey's elected leaders. John's resourcefulness, creativity, and integrity mark him a role model for his colleagues and, indeed, for us all.

In recognition of all that John has given, the education community of Bergen County has proclaimed September 29, 2002 as "John Biondi Day." John's justified pride in this proclamation is shared by his wife Marilyn, his three sons, John Jr., Andrew, and Tom, and his grandchildren, Christopher and Joseph.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in congratulating John Biondi on his retirement, and commending him for his tremendous dedication and contribution to the students and education community of New Jersey.

JOHNNIE ROSEBORO, LOS ANGELES DODGERS ALL-STAR CATCHER

HON. DIANE E. WATSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Ms. WATSON of California. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I announce the passing of Johnnie Roseboro, an All-Star catcher for the Los Angeles Dodgers. John passed away on August 16 at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. He was 69.

Johnnie Roseboro played in the major leagues from 1957 to 1970 with the Dodgers, Minnesota Twins, and Washington Senators (now the Texas Rangers). He was named to All-Star teams in 1958, 1961, 1962 and 1969, and won Gold Gloves for his defensive play in 1961 and 1966. Roseboro became the Dodgers' starting catcher in the team's first season in Los Angeles, replacing the legendary Roy Campanella who had been paralyzed in an auto accident.

Roseboro was nicknamed "Gabby" by his teammates because he went about his business quietly and without fanfare. He always carried himself with dignity and class. These attributes are exemplified in the aftermath of the famous bat swinging incident in which San Francisco Giants pitcher Juan Marichal inflicted a two inch gash on Roseboro's forehead. The incident tarnished Marichal's reputation, who was only voted into baseball's Hall of Fame after Roseboro publicly stated that he thought Marichal was being unfairly kept out of the Hall of Fame.

Roseboro's nobility of mind and heart defined him in his life both on and off the baseball diamond. He is survived by his beloved wife, Barbara Fouch-Roseboro and daughter, Morgan Nicole Fouch-Roseboro and his children by a former marriage, daughters Shelley Roseboro, Staci-Roseboro-Shoals, and Jaime Roseboro.

In closing, I would like to enter into the RECORD the following eulogy to Mr. Roseboro, written by Morgan Nicole Fouch-Roseboro.

[From the Eulogy for Johnnie Roseboro (By Morgan Nicole Fouch-Roseboro)]

"A MAN IS KNOWN BY THE SILENCE HE KEEPS"
(By Oliver Herford)

Some men walk through life making all a big ado. Puffing up their chests when reminiscing on unremarkable past accomplishments and feats. Opening wide their mouths to expel dubious wisdom and conspiracies, tendering words upon words upon words, but no meat.

But other men forgo words and express their abilities in deed. They do so simply, without fuss nor fanfare, dancing nor prancing. They just step up to the plate, eye the ball and swing. Sometimes, the ball grazes the tree tips and is going . . . going . . . gone, or it may foul backward into the stands. Regardless. For these few exceptional men, each gesture—win or lose—is always authentic and with the full weight of their being, forcing witnesses to pause, slack-jawed, in awe-inspired amazement.

There is little wonder into which camp John Roseboro fell. Ask anyone to describe him in two words and they would say succinctly: No Bull. He was unapologetically comfortable in his skin, to the core: you either got him or you didn't. For him, there was little worthy of sweat. He would simply throw up his hands and say, "No big deal," and move on. He left it to the critics to assess the long-term merit of his accomplishments—for him, it was all in a day's work, nothing more. He considered suggestions but, in the end, his instinct would always trump any outside counsel.

In spite of this characteristic, he made it utterly impossible to be angry at him. But, thankfully, the same worked in reverse. If you looked down to discover your feet on the wrong side of his line, a simple apology would always be followed by "That's okay, Babe," and any trace of the dispute would be immediately expunged.

Although his turtle-like mien caused some strangers to hesitate, his inner circle of friends and family knew the hard outer shell merely served as protection for its precious cargo—a tender and easily broken heart. This vulnerability might uncover why it was this particular organ's weakness that sparked his fifteen-year downward health spiral. Although, admittedly, he did nothing to impede the descent.

Even after enduring countless (okay, 54) hospital stays, surgeries and treatments at Cedars Sinai alone, he maintained an unyieldingly laissez-faire attitude toward improving his condition. Yet it is the rare man whose friends and family cannot utter a single negativity after fruitlessly imploring him—for decades—to set down the Coke can, exercise, and consider the fish section of the menu. But he would likely have undergone a thousand colonoscopies of bypasses if it meant any reprieve from the constant barrage of heart-health suggestions, books, pills and tonics he received on a daily basis. His food motto remained intact until the end: "I'll die with a full stomach and that's that."

Replacing words with such mottoes was just his way, each comment whittled down to its essence and punctuated with a saying for good measure. Favorites included "Ain't nothin' shakin' but the leaves," . . . "God willin' and the creek don't rise" . . . and "Is the Pope Catholic?"

Sayings aside, John was definitely a laconic spirit—the irony in his nickname, Gabby, was well-earned. But, as they say, silence is a text easy to misread. Just ask anyone brave enough to venture toward the back of the room and take a seat next to him. His bulbous eyes voyeuristically scanning the crowd, extracting vital bits of data to launch into an anecdote or a unique observation. Between tales of the Glory Days, life insights and off-colored jokes, they would discover—as we already had—a man of infinite, yet simplistic, wisdom blended with an understated hilarity. He was the anti-thesis of the "dumb jock." A voracious reader, he would complete several books a month. In his later years, he took countless adult education courses, honed his considerable culinary talents and taught himself to use his new computer to surf the internet.

Although John was undeniably great on the ball field, his greatest accomplishments lie in his legacy off the field. He was generous in his purchases for loved ones, but his best gifts were always of the non-monetary persuasion: unparalleled insight, laughs, great stories and lots of love. Any time spent with him was guaranteed to be an unforgettable treat and its own reward.

In short, John Roseboro was one of the best—and easiest—men you'd ever befriend. He was a loving husband, father, brother, son, uncle and friend. His life force beats strongly in the hearts of all who were blessed enough to share their lives with him.

John was born in Ashland, Ohio in 1933 to Cecil Geraldine Lowery Roseboro and John Henry Roseboro. His only sibling was James Alexander Roseboro.

John Roseboro is survived by his beloved wife, Barbara Fouch-Roseboro and daughter, Morgan Nicole Fouch-Roseboro and his children by a former marriage, daughters Shelley Roseboro and Staci Roseboro-Shoals (John), and son Jaime Roseboro (Karen).

Additional family members include grandchildren Ashley Shoals, Amber Shoals, Kaitlyn Roseboro, Sydney Roseboro, April Roseboro; brothers-in-law James Walker, Kenneth Walker, Jackie Millines; sisters-in-law Ifeoma Kwesi, Annie Roseboro, Michelle Hollie, Andrea Frye and Yolanda Leary; nephews Anthony M. Roseboro (Tia), Pearl Daniel White, Sinclair Saunders; nieces Gayle Mitchell (Charles), Sabrina Phillips, Latrice Westbury; great-nephews Alexander Roseboro, Jermaine Mitchell, Orlando Mitchell, Kenyon Saunders, Ronaldo Walker, Antonio Walker, Rico Walker, Norris Bray; great-nieces Shelbi Roseboro, Crystal Phillips, Summer Rain Phillips; god-daughters Kaiyanna Frye, Alexandra Josephine Richardson Jackson, and a host of other relatives and friends.

HONORING CHARLES PALERMO ON HIS RECEIVING NEW JERSEY DISTINGUISHED SERVICE MEDAL

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a South Jerseyman who has been honored for his brave service in World War II. Charles Palermo of Ocean City, New Jersey, a World War II veteran, was presented with the New Jersey Distinguished Service Medal on December 17, 2001 at the Cumberland County College. The New Jersey Distinguished Service Medal is the State's top military award and was given to Mr. Palermo in honor of the sacrifices he made for his country as a combat soldier.

Sergeant Palermo enlisted in the Marine Corps and was shipped out to the Pacific Theater where he spent nearly three years in combat, coming face to face with death several times. In the South Pacific, Sgt. Palermo escaped death more than once, when Japanese bombs hit the amphibious tank he was aboard. He recalled this harrowing escape later saying, "The worst experience was on August 11th and 12th at Guadalcanal. We had 13 men and four tanks. All the lights went out and we were stranded in the ocean. There was a big battle (during which Palermo's tank got hit by a bomb seconds after he and his crew jumped out). The next morning, there were a lot of dead bodies in the water—both Americans and Japanese," he said. Another time, Palermo did not escape the tank before an enemy bomb hit struck the vehicle. This time he was injured, suffering burns from the waist up. "It wasn't that bad," Palermo commented. On the island of Peleliu, he witnessed two of his friends enter a cave to seek out the enemy. But they never came out, he said.

The New Jersey Distinguished Service Medal was authorized by the State of New Jersey to honor all of the returning combat veterans and acknowledge the debt the State owed them for their service. "The New Jersey veterans receiving the Distinguished Service Medal are a credit to our State and our Nation. Their sacrifice and their bravery in combat is truly deserving of New Jersey's highest military award," said Acting Governor Donald DiFrancesco, of the honorees. Mr. Speaker, I concur with that sentiment and extend my thanks and appreciation to Mr. Charles Palermo who, like so many of his fellow World War II veterans, came forward to defend America and freedom.

HONORING AND REMEMBERING BOSTON CITY COUNCILOR BRIAN HONAN

HON. MICHAEL E. CAPUANO

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor and remember Boston City Councilor Brian Honan, an effective, passionate and admired public servant who was taken from us far too soon. I had the privilege of working with Brian and witnessed firsthand his dedication to the Allston-Brighton neighborhoods he represented.

Whether it was fighting to preserve affordable housing or working to enhance the quality of life for his constituents, Brian approached every issue with a determination to lend a helping hand. His interest was never getting a headline, only that his constituents benefited from his efforts.

Brian loved public service, something quite evident to anyone who watched him perform the duties of a Boston City Councilor. Every person, and every issue, was important and he worked tirelessly to represent the men and women who elected him. No issue was too trivial and no concern was too small.

Brian's devotion to the community extended beyond his official responsibilities. In particular, he was especially interested in creating opportunities for youth. You need look no further than the number of local institutions with which he had a powerful, positive relationship—the West End House Boys and Girls Club, the Oak Square YMCA, St. Columbkille's School, the Gardner School—the list could go on. Each serves young people and each enjoyed Brian's unswerving support.

We lost a bright light and a powerful voice this summer, but Brian's legacy of hard work will live on. The impact he had on the neighborhoods of Allston-Brighton is evident in countless ways and the City of Boston is a better place because of him. My thoughts and prayers are with Brian's family and friends.

I am honored to have known and worked with such a compassionate and effective public servant.

COMMEMORATION OF ARTBA'S 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GARY G. MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative of California, I appreciate the importance transportation plays in the daily lives of Americans. Whether it be the movement of goods and services or one's personal utilization of our expansive transportation network, America's transportation infrastructure has continued to thrive and evolve at unprecedented levels. The knowledge and efforts dedicated by groups such as America Road & Transportation Builders Association (ARTBA) have played a vital role in ensuring America's roadways, airports and waterways continue to effectively and efficiently meet our transportation needs.

This country has become the prosperous and efficacious nation that we live in today, due largely to the ingenuity and persistence demonstrated by so many Americans. Horatio Sawyer Earle, one of ARTBA's founding fathers, set out in 1902 to materialize a vision he had of connecting all the states' capitals through a network of highways. What ensued was an organization and set of ideas that has, for 100 years and counting, been at the vanguard of envisioning and implementing improvements to our nation's transportation infrastructure.

In areas of commerce, as well as personal commute, transportation has incorporated itself as an indispensable aspect of America's growth. America's transportation network enables us to partake in a tremendous $6 trillion worth of freight. The transportation construction industry itself is worth $160 billion a year and employs 1.6 million people. America has seen the successful implementation of these transportation endeavors in large part due to ARTBA's fielded expertise and fruitful consultations.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to personally express both my admiration for ARTBA in reaching this 100-year milestone, and my gratitude for their unparalleled contributions to America's transportation infrastructure.

RECOGNITION OF LARRY T. WILSON, NEWLY ELECTED DIRECTOR ON THE BOARD OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FEDERAL CREDIT UNIONS (NAFCU)

HON. DAVID E. PRICE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize Larry Wilson, the President and CEO of Coastal Federal Credit Union, for his recent election to the Board of the National Association of Federal Credit Unions (NAFCU).

Larry has been President and CEO of Coastal Federal Credit Union, located in the Fourth District North Carolina, since 1974. During his tenure, Coastal Federal Credit Union has grown in assets from $2.7 million to $1.245 billion; it now serves over 100,000 members from the great State of North Carolina.

Larry Wilson's accomplishments are impressive indeed. He was named NAFCU's Professional of the Year in 1985, and in 1992, Larry was crowned Executive of the Year by the Credit Union Executive Society. His illustrious career further includes leadership in the North Carolina Credit Union League, the North Carolina Credit Union Network, the Eastern North Carolina Better Business Bureau, and the Triangle Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Larry's contributions also shine through in Coastal Federal Credit Union's track record. In 1991, Coastal Federal Credit Union was recognized as Credit Union of the Year by NAFCU. Earlier this year, at NAFCU's Annual Conference, Small Business Administration Administrator Hector Barreto singled out Coastal Federal Credit Union for its significant contribution to improving the lives of the underserved.

Coastal Federal Credit Union participates in and sponsors an array of programs that benefit the local community, as well as communities throughout the State. During the holidays, Coastal Federal Credit Union sponsors and sells a Christmas card designed by a child who is a patient at Duke Children's Hospital, with all proceeds going to the hospital. Coastal Federal Credit Union has also helped to raise more than $400,000 to establish the bone marrow transplant unit at Duke Children's Hospital.

Coastal Federal Credit Union, in participation with credit unions throughout North Carolina, joined together to raise $265,000 to purchase and staff a motor home that travels to various cities in North Carolina to educate the public about child abuse prevention. This training unit is the first of its kind in the Nation. Through Larry and his employees, Coastal Federal Credit Union's motto of "people helping people" is put into practice every day.

As a highly respected voice for credit unions in our Nation's Capitol, NAFCU will be well served by Larry's membership on the Board. There is no question that Larry's 28 years of dedicated work, personal knowledge and expertise in the credit union industry will help to keep Congress connected with issues that are vital to credit unions both in North Carolina and across America. I congratulate Larry Wilson on his recent election to the NAFCU Board and look forward to continuing to work with him and our Nation's Federal credit unions.

Mr. BONILLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of An Extravaganza in Old Uvalde (AEIOU), which was held in Uvalde, Texas on September 6th and 7th. This annual event is a fundraiser for the West Main Library Museum Archives Project.

The West Main Project will provide the people of Uvalde and the surrounding area access to a myriad of printed information. In addition, through its archives and museum, the project will play a critical role in preserving the culture of this beautiful region. This facility will provide the room and the resources to meet the needs of the community.

South Texas is home to a unique crossroads of cultures. This facility will remind area children of our heritage and provide a forum through which to share this heritage with neighbors and visitors alike. The library will chronicle the unique experiences of residents of the area, preserving their experiences on videotape for generations to come. It will showcase area geological, cultural, social and other historical artifacts. With archaeological and written documentation, the museum will tell the story of what Uvalde is and what it has been.

El Progreso will provide a place for local children to conduct research and be tutored, for migrant families to learn English, and for seniors to learn to use the Internet. It will provide a place for partnerships between educational, governmental, civic and social service organizations to flourish. It will allow residents to give back to the community through volunteering in a variety of capacities.

Education, history and culture are important parts of our past. I commend Uvalde for its leadership in preserving the past while building towards the future. It is my sincere hope that thanks to the West Main Project, Uvalde will soon be home to the best library and archives in all of West Texas.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF POLIO SURVIVORS

HON. JOHN R. THUNE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the many survivors of polio. Paralytic poliomyelitis, or polio as it is commonly referred to, often seems to be remembered as a disease of the past—a disease that afflicted millions of Americans during the Great Depression. Americans no longer experience the fear that seized our parents and grandparents during the summer months, when polio epidemics thrived. Polio hit quickly, no cure was available, and its victims were left crippled for life.

For many years, controlling polio's transmission was vigorously debated. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, one of America's most famous polio survivors, declared war on polio with the creation of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, now known as the March of Dimes, in 1937. Through federal funding, researchers Joseph Salk and Albert Sabin developed two different polio vaccines in the 1950s. Shortly after, polio was eradicated in much of the industrialized world, providing a vast number of economic and social benefits.

The World Health Organization has taken great strides to eliminate polio throughout the world, and polio now only exists in ten countries worldwide. However, as long as polio exists, no man, woman, or child is completely safe from the disease.

September 2002 marks the 50th Anniversary of North America's most devastating polio epidemic. This epidemic touched the lives of nearly 60,000 people, leaving many with lifelong physical disabilities.

There are approximately 16,000,000 polio survivors in the United States today. Many of these survivors suffer from Post-Polio Sequelae, or PPS, symptoms, such as overwhelming fatigue, muscle and joint pain, sleeping disorders, and difficulty swallowing and breathing.

Every American should be aware of this once devastating disease as well as the affects still felt by survivors of polio. While remembering these people, we will aim to educate both polio survivors and doctors about the symptoms of PPS. By raising awareness, we will be able to inform polio survivors on the simple and effective therapies available to treat PPS and to make their lives easier.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in declaring September "Polio Survivors' Month," and honoring these brave survivors of polio.

HONORING CORTRANS LOGISTICS, LLC

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the past year has been marked by tough economic conditions and the thought of succeeding in the market as a new competitor would be considered almost impossible. However, through hard work and determination, CorTrans Logistics, LLC of Norcross, Georgia, has beat the odds and proved itself one of the most eminent businesses in the market. In fact, it was recently ranked as number 42 in Entrepreneur magazine's "Hot 100" fastest growing businesses for 2002. CorTrans Logistics, LLC was also recognized in the Atlanta Journal Constitution for their advances in the marketplace.

CorTrans Logistics was founded in February 1999 by William R. Cortez, current president and CEO. He began the company with two employees and an initial investment of $100,000. The company has since expanded, yielding sales of $7.2 million in 2001; and now employees 12 individuals.

This group of individuals, specifically Bill Cortez, should be commended for not only the exemplary service they provide through their business, but also for overcoming the challenges presented to them in a tough economy. Their accomplishments are proof that through hard work, vision, integrity, and day-to-day perseverance, companies can survive and even thrive in today's fluctuating market.

IN HONOR OF THE 2002 VFW VOICE OF DEMOCRACY AWARD WINNER
MEGHAN PASRICHA OF VFW
POST 2863

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to Meghan Pasricha, a Delawarean and winner of the Veterans of Foreign Wars' 2002 Voice Of Democracy Scholarship Contest. Each year the VFW and its Ladies Auxiliary give high school students an opportunity to vocalize their duty and patriotism for the United States by drafting broadcast scripts addressing their view of a citizen's duties to America.

Out of the 84,000 students who submitted scripts on the theme of "Reaching Out to America's Future," Meghan was one of 58 winners throughout the United States, and the First Place winner for Delaware's Local VFW Post 2863.

In a year when many citizens' faith was shaken and so many Americans are in search of a voice of hope for our Nation's future, Meghan's essay touched the highest aspirations of the American spirit and called for increased patriotism, activism and unity. This excerpt from her winning essay is a testament to her role as a future leader:

"Although the hearts of Americans are saddened by the recent tragedy, the American Spirit soars higher. The pace of change is suddenly accelerated. Even war has changed. In the future, our military will not only wage war against the terrorists and enemies, but will also wage campaigns to win the hearts of unknown victims in foreign countries. I strongly believe that Americans will see this time as an opportunity to reinvent ourselves and move forward."

I would like to acknowledge the dedication and resolve that Meghan has shown toward her own future and the future of her country. Through the generous outreach of the United States VFW and Ladies Auxiliary, young people like Meghan around the our Nation are able to vocalize their dedication to America and find within themselves how they will shape the future for themselves and their fellow citizens.

I would like to join my colleagues in congratulating Meghan and all of the 2002 VFW Voice of Democracy Scholarship Contest award winners.

HONORING THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF BOSNIAN INDEPENDENCE H. RES. 520

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to note that earlier today I introduced H. Res. 520, which congratulates Bosnia and Herzegovina on the 10th anniversary of its independence.

The stability of the Balkans remains important to the stability of Europe as a whole, and the 10th anniversary of Bosnian independence serves as an important benchmark for United States efforts to foster stability in that region. It also serves as a reminder that we must continue our joint efforts to foment military security, improve public security and law enforcement, foster democratic governance, promote economic development and refugee assistance, bring war criminals to justice, and continue to provide the security umbrella under which democracy and free-market capitalism is able to develop and flourish.

Our goal is to help transform the Balkans into a region of stable democracies that fully participate in Euro-Atlantic institutions. Yet, the emergence of a stable Bosnia—whole, free and integrated into Europe—will require further support of all types from the United States. The three constituent peoples and others in Bosnia have realized that their political future lies in strengthening an independent fully functioning multiethnic Bosnia and Herzegovina. They deserve our commendation and support.

RECOGNIZING LOCAL HEROES ON SEPTEMBER 11

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, as our nation approaches the one-year anniversary of the unspeakable acts of terror against America on September 11, 2001, I join with my colleagues Representative TOM DAVIS and Representative JIM MORAN to recognize some of the people in the northern Virginia area who were among the first health care responders to the attack on the Pentagon.

We attended on September 3 an event recognizing those associated with the Inova Health System for their heroic efforts on September 11 and I share today the remarks of Jolene Tornabeni, executive vice president and chief operating officer for Inova Health System, as well as a copy of a resolution adopted by the Virginia General Assembly commending Inova Health System.

RECOGNIZING INOVA'S HEROES

(By Jolene Tornabeni)

As we approach the anniversary of September 11, no doubt every one of us can remember where we were and what we were doing when the planes crashed in New York, Pennsylvania and the Pentagon. Throughout Inova Health System, the memories of that day remain fresh in our memories as well. At a time when most people wanted to be home with their families and loved ones, our staff showed its true strength of character. Hundreds of employees, nurses and physicians dropped what they were doing and volunteered to help. It was an immediate response that came from the heart.

Today, I'd like to recognize just some of those people who are Inova's heroes.

From Inova Alexandria Hospital.—Shortly after the American Airlines plane hit the Pentagon, hospital staff swung into gear readying beds, operating rooms and supplies. Inova Alexandria Hospital treated more patients from the Pentagon that day than any other Inova facility, caring for 24 people who were injured at the scene.

Among the many heroes that day are Emergency Department Chairman Dr. Marty Brown, vice chairman Dr. Tom Clark and the ER staff who were at the front end of caring for the patients as they arrived at the hospital. Dr. Clark cared for Virginia State Police Trooper Michael Middleton who sustained severe smoke inhalation while trying to rescue injured Pentagon workers. In addition, emergency nurse Sherry Hemby is also with us today.

I'd like to recognize pulmonologist Dr. Tom Smirniotopolous and nurse Ellen Smith. They both cared for Trooper Middleton during his long recovery at Inova Alexandria Hospital.

Also, emergency physician Dr. James Vafier. On September 11, he was working in his role as medical director for the Alexandria Fire Department at the Pentagon. On site, he was appointed the physician in charge of civilian medical response at the Pentagon.

Keeping order that day at Inova Alexandria Hospital were Steve Fuoco, the director of engineering, who served the hospital's command center, and Greg Brison, director of security. I'd also like to recognize hospital administrator Ken Kozloff for all of his efforts and a job well done by his entire staff.

All told, Inova treated 27 patients on September 11. Inova Mount Vernon Hospital treated one injured civilian. Our thanks go out to hospital Emergency Department chairman Dr. Michael Shuster and hospital administrator Susan Herbert.

Many thanks also go to the emergency department staffs at Inova HealthPlex in Springfield where two patients were treated, and the staff of Inova Fairfax Hospital. As the area's Level I trauma center, Inova Fairfax Hospital freed up dozens of hospital beds and readied itself to handle many, many patients that day. Sadly, their services were not needed.

Next, I'd like to recognize Dr. Dan Hanfling, the director of Emergency Management and Disaster Medicine for Inova Health System. On September 11, Dan was called to the Pentagon to assist in the search and rescue in his role as medical team manager of the Fairfax County Urban Search and Rescue team—which falls under the auspices of FEMA—the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Dan spent a week at the Pentagon helping coordinate the federal response to the disaster. Since 9-11, Dan has helped spearhead and focus Inova's disaster preparations across our system of hospitals and emergency care centers.

Dan also serves as the medical director of Inova AirCare, our medevac helicopter program which played a critical role at the Pentagon on September 11th. Minutes after the Pentagon was hit, the helicopter flight crew of nurse Margie Roche, paramedic Chuck Crocker and pilot Pete Russet flew to the Pentagon to fly out the injured patients. That initial flight is memorialized forever in a well-publicized Reuters photo seen around the world in magazines and now a book. The photo depicts Inova AirCare against the backdrop of a burning Pentagon.

The helicopter shuttled much needed supplies to the scene that day, and, at the request of military leaders on the scene, remained at the Pentagon throughout the night.

As that day unfolded, the community's goodwill became abundantly evident as hundreds of people showed up at Inova Blood Donor Services offices ready to roll up their sleeves and donate. Thanks to the leadership of medical director Dr. Jeanne Lumadue and administrative director Terri Craddock, Inova Blood Donor Services pulled in volunteers to help handle the onslaught and keep the offices open well past normal business hours. They collected more than 700 units of blood that day, which is just amazing. In all, they handled more than two thousand donors and returned more than 5,000 calls from interested donors in the initial days after the attack.

It was not long after September 11 that our country faced a second threat to our sense of security in the anthrax-laced letters mailed around the country. Inova Fairfax Hospital took center-stage in this national drama after diagnosing two patients from the Brentwood Postal Facility in Washington, DC with inhalation anthrax.

Emergency physicians Cecele Murphy and Denis Pauze relied on their instinct and medical training to make a diagnosis most doctors could not imagine making in their lifetimes. Thanks to them, and to physician assistant Ashna Nayyar and the entire ER staff, both men are alive today.

All of these people mentioned today and, in fact, all of the physicians, employees and volunteers throughout Inova Health System, are our heroes for the work they did on September 11 and its aftermath.

We also have heroes outside of our organization in the men and women of our community's police, fire and EMS agencies, particularly in Fairfax County and the City of Alexandria. Over the past year, we have been grateful for their continual support and advice on preparedness.

2002 SESSION

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 275—ENROLLED

Commending Inova Health System

Agreed to by the Senate, March 6, 2002

Agreed to by the House of Delegates, March 8, 2002

Whereas, Inova Health System in Northern Virginia was deeply involved in the response to the attacks on September 11, 2001, and in the diagnosis and treatment of those exposed to anthrax in October of 2001; and

TRIBUTE TO HART AND MARK HASTEN

HON. MIKE PENCE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Hart and Mark Hasten, two brothers born in the small town of Bohorodczany, Poland and currently living in my home state of Indiana. In 1942, acting on horrifying rumors that Nazis were murdering Jews everywhere, their father placed young Hart and Mark in a horse drawn carriage and the family fled town in the middle of night.

Shortly after the Hastens left Bohorodczany, twelve hundred Jews were gathered by the Nazis and murdered in a nearby town. Hart and Mark, and their parents, were the only surviving Jews from the area.

Recently, the two brothers traveled back to their boyhood town to erect a monument in the memory of the martyrs. Rabbi Kasriel Shemtov from Israel and Rabbi Moseh Kolesnik from Ukraine as well as fifty Jewish people from neighboring villages joined Hart and Mark to observe the dedication.

The story of those who perished is etched in Hebrew and English on a granite stone in a small cemetery where they may rest in peace.

Mr. Speaker, I praise Hart and Mark Hasten for erecting this monument in the name of their fellow townspeople. This is a special memorial for a deserving community of heroes.

TRIBUTE TO AMBASSADOR PERANGER OF SWEDEN

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of my colleagues to the passing during the August recess of Ambassador Per Anger of Sweden. He died Sunday August 25 in Stockholm at the age of 88. I invite my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to him.

Mr. Speaker, Per Anger was a distinguished career diplomat of his native Sweden. He was ambassador to Australia, Canada and the Bahamas, Consul General in San Francisco, an advocate and activist within the Swedish Foreign Ministry for humanitarian assistance, and an effective voice of conscience in Swedish diplomacy. But most of all, he will be long remembered for his active and effective collaboration with Raoul Wallenberg in the saving of Hungarian Jewish lives during the Holocaust, and then for his advocacy on behalf of Wallenberg after the Soviet Army took him prisoner at the end of World War II.

Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Anger was born in Goteborg on December 7, 1913, and studied law at Stockholm and Uppsala universities. He began his diplomatic career in Berlin, but he was posted to Budapest in late 1942. During his early days in Budapest, he passed on a historic piece of intelligence—the plans, location and operations of Nazi concentration camps that he had gleaned from refugees to Hungary.

He was still in Budapest in March 1944 when Nazi Germany occupied Hungary. Shortly after the German Wehrmacht arrived, Adolf Eichmann and his henchmen appeared in Budapest with the assignment to exterminate the Jewish population of Hungary. Per Anger began issuing temporary Swedish passports and identity cards to Hungarian Jews in an effort to protect them against deportation to Nazi extermination camps.

In July of 1944, Raoul Wallenberg arrived at the Swedish Legation Budapest. He came at the request of the United States and with the support of the Swedish government in an effort to do what he could to save the lives of Hungarian Jews. Wallenberg expanded the use of these protective passports, issuing tens of thousands of them to Jews facing shipment to extermination camps, and with American financial assistance he leased apartment buildings where Jews driven from their homes stayed nominally under Swedish diplomatic protection. Together Wallenberg and Anger saved tens of thousands of children, women, and men from the forced marches and from the trains bound for death camps at Auschwitz and elsewhere in Nazi-occupied Europe.

Mr. Speaker, while Per Anger's diplomatic career is distinguished, it is his efforts with Raoul Wallenberg that set him apart, that raise him above the many eminent Swedes who have served their country with honor and integrity. Ambassador Anger's association with Raoul Wallenberg gave him a cause that he continued to pursue with commitment and intelligence throughout his life. Because of that association, he will be honored around the world for generations.

A great deal of what we know about Raoul Wallenberg's efforts in Budapest in 1944 is the result of the work of Per Anger. His memoir, With Raoul Wallenberg in Budapest, provides essential documentation of many of the events during that tempestuous time. Without this published recollection, our knowledge of Wallenberg's incredible struggle against the Nazi terror would be considerably diminished.

Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Anger was also a champion within the Swedish Foreign Ministry, urging bolder and more aggressive action by the Swedish government to secure the release of Raoul Wallenberg after he was seized and imprisoned in the Soviet Union in January of 1945. Because Sweden was reluctant to take any action that might antagonize its huge neighbor to the east, it officially pursued a cautious and pusillanimous policy in seeking the release of Wallenberg. Within the Swedish Foreign Ministry, Ambassador Anger was a strong voice for bolder action.

After his retirement from the diplomatic service, Per has continued his efforts. Following the collapse of the Soviet Union, he was in Moscow on a number of occasions, at times with members of Raoul Wallenberg's family, in the continuing effort to determine the truth of what really happened after Wallenberg was seized by Red Army troops in Eastern Hungary.

Ambassador Anger has been one of the leaders in keeping alive the memory of Raoul Wallenberg during the fifty years since Raoul Wallenberg disappeared. I remember well many occasions when Anger paid eloquent tribute to the heroism of Raoul Wallenberg. One of his most memorable and moving tributes was given at the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of Wallenberg's disappearance which was held at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C., on January 17, 1995.

Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Anger was honored appropriately for his humanitarian contribution to saving the lives of Hungarian Jews. In 1982 he was named one of the "Righteous Among Nations" by Israel's Yad Vashem memorial and museum. The government of Hungary awarded him the Order of Merit in 1995, and in 2000 he was granted honorary Israeli citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, as we reflect on the unspeakable horrors that were unleashed upon the world by the Nazi regime a half-century ago, it is important that we not only remember the atrocities and violence and murder and terror of that time, but that we also consider the sparks of humanity that glowed in the midst of that darkest of midnights. Per Anger was one of those radiant sparks of light. Per Anger had the decency, dedication, courage and the motivation to do great good against incredible odds.

TRIBUTE TO MR. CLAUDE BURPEE

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, very few people alive today can say they knew someone who met President Abraham Lincoln. However, Mr. Claude Burpee of Maryville, Tennessee can. In fact, he can even say he shook the same hand that shook the hand of President Lincoln.

When Mr. Burpee was in elementary school, he had the opportunity to meet a Civil War veteran who was honored by Mr. Lincoln during the war.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Mr. Burpee for his unique connection to arguably our Nation's most admired President.

I have included a copy of a story written in the Maryville Daily Times that further explains Mr. Burpee's story that I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues and other readers of the RECORD.

[From the Maryville Daily Times, Feb. 13, 1991]

MARYVILLE MAN RECALLS HANDY LINK TO LINCOLN

(By Adele McKenzie)

An event of 53 years ago is alive today in the memory of Claude Burpee of Maryville. The happening was a reward as a student for making good grades and the privilege of shaking a hand that had many years earlier shaken the hand of President Abraham Lincoln.

Elijah Sanborn, who was then in his early 90's, had served in the Union Army as a youth of 16 or 17 during the Civil War. For a heroic deed, he received a citation which was presented by President Lincoln, who also shook his hand.

Sanborn lived in Acton, Maine, where Burpee was one of 25 to 30 students, grades 1 through 8, attending a one-room school taught by one male teacher. "One of our incentives for making good grades was the great honor of being able to shake the hand of this hero—Elijah Sanborn," remembers Burpee.

As far as Burpee knows, he is the last person living who attended Acton School and had this honor.

Children of today probably would not consider this event of any significance, but 53 years ago it was something to be proud of says Burpee.

He also remembers the old soldier quoting Lincoln as having said: "Don't let your schooling get in the way of your learning."

Two years ago, Burpee visited Maine and was delighted to find his old school, well taken care of and serving another role. Built in 1814, it is now the town library.

After serving in the Pacific Theater with the U.S. Marine Corps in World War II, Burpee spent 25 years in California following his career as a locksmith.

Advancing years and declining health of the parents of his wife, Wanda Joy, brought the Burpees to Tennessee 14 years ago to assist with their care. Burpee said he learned that Blount County was in need of a locksmith and so they chose Maryville as their home to be near their relatives who live at Mascot.

"Maryville has treated me well, and I've made a good living here. One couldn't find a nicer place to live," he said.

Selling his business two years ago, Burpee has devoted much of his time to work with Disabled American Veterans (DAV) serving presently as commander of Blount County DAV Chapter 76 and as alternate commander of the East Tennessee Division of DAV. Burpee is also a member of Blount County Memorial Post 5154 Veterans of Foreign Wars and Capt. Emerson J. Lones Post 13 American Legion.

SENATE—Wednesday, September 11, 2002

The Senate met at 11 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable TIM JOHNSON, a Senator from the State of South Dakota.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, on this day of remembrance and resolve, we praise You for the way You brought us through those dark hours of September 11 a year ago. You were our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. We relive the anxious memories of that infamous day of attacks of terrorism on the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and the airliner crashed in Pennsylvania. Today, as a Nation, we mourn for those who lost their lives as a result of these violent acts of treachery against our Nation. We deepen our ongoing intercession for their loved ones. Continue to comfort them, help them to endure the loneliness of grief, and grant them Your peace. Particularly, we pray for the families of the firefighters, police officers, and military personnel who died seeking to save others. Care for the thousands of children who lost a parent in these catastrophes.

When we turned over to You our anger, dismay, and grief, you gave us the courage to press on. Thank You for the strong, unified leadership of the President and this Senate in the aftermath of 9/11 and for the decisive engagement of the insidious enemy of terrorism throughout the world. May this be a day of renewed resolve to press on. Protect us from further attacks. Quiet our fears as we reaffirm our trust in You. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable TIM JOHNSON led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,

Washington, DC, September 11, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable TIM JOHNSON, a Senator from the State of South Dakota, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. JOHNSON thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, there will be, as the Chair has announced, morning business basically all day. At noon, there will be a moment of silence in recognition of the events of September 11. Both leaders have asked that those Senators who are here and have not gone home to their States try to be in the Chamber for the moment of silence. I hope all Senators will be here.

I also announce that the two leaders are going to speak prior to the noon moment of silence. The minority leader is going to speak at 20 till the hour, and the majority leader will speak at 10 till the hour.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we all have been touched by the events at the Pentagon this morning. As I walked in, there was a woman whom I do not know, but she is symbolic of the sacrifices that people have made. Her face had been burned very badly, she had no hands, and her arms had been burned. This is what the terrorist activity is all about.

This innocent woman, who never did anything to anyone, has been subjected to this physical torture. It goes without saying that she has gone through and will go through many skin grafts and other such procedures so that she can learn to use her prosthetic hands, which she does not have yet.

It used to be when a building was constructed, they had a ceremony, on every major construction, called the laying of the chief cornerstone. What does that mean? It means that the final stone in the foundation of that building will be laid.

Why did people celebrate that event? They celebrated because they knew if that building had a strong foundation, it would be fine.

In our life in America, that foundation, that chief cornerstone is the Constitution of the United States. That little document that people speak about in this Chamber—led by, more than anyone else, Senator BYRD—is the chief cornerstone of this great democracy.

As we are forced to remember these events of September 11—because it is easy not to put unpleasant thoughts in our minds—as we are forced to remember these events, and rightfully so, we have to remember that this country has a firm foundation because the chief cornerstone of the foundation of this country is our Constitution.

Today, of course, is the first anniversary of the September 11 terrorist attacks on America. On this day we remember, as we will do every year on September 11, those tragic events that our Nation experienced on September 11, 2001.

What happened in New York, at the Pentagon, and in Pennsylvania has left many of us—in fact, all of us—with memories and strong emotions. I know that Nevadans were deeply affected by the terrorist attacks in the aftermath, and I feel good about how people in Nevada have reacted.

We were hurt very badly. Our No. 1 business is tourism, and tourism took a terrible blow. But those business entrepreneurs, people who worked for those large corporations, and the people who worked for the small businesses recognized that time would solve the problems, that time would heal a lot of the tourism problems, and it has. We are not back to where we were, but we are OK. I am proud of how the people of the State of Nevada have reacted.

We also have had from the State of Nevada a pouring out of sympathy, comfort, and consolation for those who were killed and hurt. We lost a teacher in the terrorism attacks, a teacher at Palo Verde High School. We lost two soldiers who were killed in action. So we will always remember what happened.

As individuals and in private, we will often reflect on this national tragedy.

We cannot confine our memories to a single day or be guided by the calendar, but September 11 will forever be the day that we collectively, as a nation, as a people, as America remember. We remember those whose lives were ended so suddenly and violently, not knowing what happened.

We remember the firefighters. We remember the police officers—the firefighters are New York's bravest, the police officers are New York's finest—and all other emergency and rescue workers who accepted the risks in rushing into burning buildings giving their lives, suffering physical and mental injury to help save the lives of people they did not know.

We remember the sacrifice, the selflessness, the heroism, and the courage of all of those who offered aid. We must remember those who survived and the thousands who did not. We must remember the parents, grandparents, children, sisters, brothers, wives, husbands, partners, and friends who have been robbed of not a weekend, not a week, not a month, not a year, but they have been robbed of their loved ones forever.

From the stories they have shared, we remember not only the deaths but the lives of their loved ones, remember their loss, and their struggle to heal. We remember our personal losses, our pain, even our anger, and, of course, our tears.

We remember the shock of seeing massive metal towers collapse as if they were Erector Sets that our grandchildren constructed. We have seen these massive metal towers reduced to rubble. We all remember the fire and the smoke.

I will never forget leaving room 219, after Senator DASCHLE told us we had to evacuate the building, looking out the window and seeing the smoke billowing out of the Pentagon where we were this morning. We remember, though, the effort to rebuild the Pentagon. We remember the generosity and spirit of Americans coming together to offer kindness, money, compassion, and consolation. We remember the sympathy expressed by foreign governments. As the President expressed this morning, some 90 foreign governments—I think it was the President; maybe it was Secretary Rumsfeld—are helping us in our battle in Afghanistan.

We remember that individuals all over the world opened their arms and their hearts to America. We remember the gruesome images so vivid that they are etched in our minds, and we remember how the spirit of our Nation was awakened, how Americans demonstrated resilience and resolve. We remember how the country united to support the war on terrorism. We remember the soldiers who were killed as part of our military efforts in Afghanistan. We remember, and we must always remember, the firm foundation of our country. We are a country guided by the Constitution of the United States, which separates us from the rest of the world. That is why we have remained a strong, vibrant democracy for more than 200 years.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to speak on this matter for as much time as I may consume.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my thoughts on this very solemn day of remembrance as we all return from a magnificent ceremony at the Pentagon observing all that is strong and good and awesome about our country.

I thank the Senator from Nevada for his very poignant words of empathy, as well as his understanding of the foundations of our country. Nevada, as all States, was hit hard.

We saw the outpouring of compassion all over this country, and I will share some of those stories. I recall in August driving across a lonely two-lane road in South Dakota, which would eventually get to the Badlands. There was a big bale of hay on the side of the road which had painted on it the American flag. It showed the spirit of that farm. We did not see any people, but we knew the sentiment of the folks who lived on that farm and in that region.

September 11, 9/11, just those words evoke sentiments and memories of where we were and what we did on that day of tragedy. As we remember those vile terrorist attacks of one year ago, for many of us the emotions and shock, the disbelief and horror that we experienced individually and as a people and a nation are still fresh. Those memories, however, continue to strengthen our resolve in the same way that our Nation was forged together after those vile attacks a year ago.

Today, we view our Nation in a fundamentally new light. We have a greater understanding of the freedoms we enjoy and how vital it is that they be guarded, preserved, and even fought for, if necessary. We have a greater appreciation for a country that respects people of diverse backgrounds, cultures, and religious beliefs. We have poured out our hearts and our assistance to those who were injured and the families of those who lost a dear one. We view firefighters, police officers, first responders, with much greater appreciation, whether they are the brave men and women of the battalions in New York City or northern Virginia or in communities large and small all across our United States of America. These men and women were transformed on that day into our heroes. We will forever remember the thousands of innocent men, women, and children who were killed at the World Trade Center and in a field in Somerset County, PA.

This Senator will remember the 184 patriots at the Pentagon and on American Airlines flight 77 who lost their lives on Virginia soil. It is indeed the heroes and the innocent patriotic victims we will remember the most. The images of flags raised, the solemn salute of rescuers to their fallen comrades, and people who were rushing into burning buildings on the verge of collapsing hoping to just save one more life.

They and the freedom-loving patriots across our great Nation stand in stark contrast to those who only know hate, destruction, and oppression.

We also see that in a time of trial, ordinary people of all walks of life perform with extraordinary courage and dignity. We remember people such as LTC Ted Anderson, who carried two of the injured from the burning Pentagon and reentered through a broken window to drag out two more, one whose clothes were on fire; 1SG Rick Keeyill and Virginia State Troopers Mike Middleton and Myrlin Wimbish, who entered the Pentagon three separate times looking for victims; LCDR David Tarantino, who moved a pile of rubble enough to pull a man from the Pentagon just before the roof collapsed; other Pentagon heroes such as SSG Christopher Braman; LTC Victor Correa; SGT Roxane Cruz-Cortes; MAJ John Grote; LTC Robert Grunewald; COL Philip McNair; CPT Darrell Oliver; SP Michael Petrovich; SGM Tony Rose; LTC Marilyn Wills; and CPT David Thomas.

The Senator from Nevada, Mr. REID, mentioned a woman who I think was Mrs. Kurtz at the Pentagon. Mrs. Louise Kurtz, though severely burned herself, valiantly tended to the needs of others around her. I am introducing legislation that will change current law so that individuals—such as Mrs. Kurtz, and those in her situation—can contribute to her retirement and so they will be able to afford to return to work after a very lengthy period of recuperation.

We also remember people such as Barbara Olson, a passenger on flight 77 who had the presence of mind to call loved ones on the ground to alert them of the hijacking.

We remember CPT “Chic” Burlingame of flight 77 who died fighting off hijackers who commandeered his plane and who is now properly buried at Arlington National Cemetery. These people have all touched our lives.

In talking to Mr. Burlingame's brothers and sister and wife, I find it noteworthy that at the Arlington National Cemetery his grave is on the tour and people in the tradition of those of the Jewish faith will put rocks on his headstone. That is very touching to the family and shows the unity and appreciation of a grateful nation.

We also remember the survivors, survivors such as Stephen Push, whose wife Lisa Raines perished in the Pentagon and who has become a forceful and articulate spokesman for victims and families.

I will always remember, and thought of it last night while driving home, a young boy, a neighbor, a friend of my children whose name is Nick Jacoby. He lost his father on flight 77.

There are stories all over our communities and Nation. We also, of course, remember the quiet dignity of people such as Lisa Beamer who helped keep their loved ones very much alive for all of us. Her husband Todd, who said, "Let's roll," led an uprising with several other patriots against the hijackers of flight 93 and saved hundreds, if not thousands, of lives at the Capitol and in the Washington, DC, area. Recent reports recognize their likely target was this building.

We will remember countless others whose courageous efforts saved lives and provided comfort. We will remember and we will thank them for their extraordinary, inspirational dignity and their character. We will also remember the construction workers, the hard-hat patriots of the Phoenix project who worked around the clock in their inspiring efforts to rebuild the Pentagon in plenty of time for employees to move in before the 1-year anniversary.

We will remember folks from a church that made quilts, the Christ Baptist Church from Prince William in Manassas, a magnificent quilt with the names of all who died. Also, we will remember the International House of Pancakes in Bristol, VA, an IHOP owned by an American who came here from Lebanon. I asked him a few months later how his business was. He said right after the attacks, for a few weeks, there were hardly any customers. But then a Methodist Church in Bristol, on the Virginia-Tennessee line, brought up the situation, and everyone from that church on that Sunday went in with their families and filled up the IHOP. Since then, others were coming back. That is a sign of the decency and the care of communities across the Nation.

Five days ago, in New York City, I had the opportunity to speak to a group of 70 mothers who were pregnant last September 11, and who were made widows on that terrible day. It has been said that suffering makes kinship of us all. While those mothers no longer have the physical and emotional support of their husbands, and the fathers of their children, they are now a part of our greater American family. In those babies, all under 1 year, the spirit and blood of their fathers live on. We want the babies to grow up with the optimism of liberty and opportunity and hope that is the spirit of America. These young children represent not just a birth but a rebirth, a rebirth and a rededication of the strength and unity of our Nation and her great, caring people as we move forward. Indeed, our Nation will be changed for generations by the tragic events of a single day and all those that followed September 11. We pray for the souls of all that we lost that day and their surviving families as well.

As a Senator from Virginia, for the permanent RECORD of our Republic, I ask unanimous consent to have printed the names of all the men, women, and children who perished in that attack on Virginia soil.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ALLEN. I add in closing, the Burlingame family, wife and surviving brother and sister, gave me a replica of one of the few things found from Captain Burlingame, other than his wedding ring. He had a picture of his mother and a prayer. They gave this to me a couple hours ago at the ceremony at the Pentagon.

I share it with my colleagues and Americans. It is entitled: "I Did Not Die," by Mary Frye.

Do not stand at my grave and weep;
 I am not there, I do not sleep.
 I am a thousand winds that blow.
 I am the diamond glints on snow.
 I am the sunlight on ripened grain.
 I am the gentle autumn rain.
 When you awaken in the morning's hush
 I am the swift uplifting rush
 Of quiet birds in circled flight.
 I'm the soft stars that shine at night.
 Do not stand at my grave and cry;
 I am not there, I did not die.

Never forget. We will never forget. We will always remember this day that forged America together. These horrific events have strengthened our unity of purpose and resolve as Americans, that we stand strong together for liberty. I hope and pray that as long as God continues to bless our United States and indeed blesses the entire world with people of such courage, integrity, and character, that liberty and justice will endure and prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I come to the floor to remember, to reflect, to try to somehow do justice to the memory of those lost to us on September 11. The tremendous grief we felt then, and still feel so sharply today, makes this anniversary a painful one for all of us as a nation, and as a people.

The anguish of that day will always be with us, but those of us who witnessed those acts of terror on our television screens know that we cannot imagine the suffering of those who perished in the attacks, or those who survived them.

The families and friends of those who died must live with terrible loss, and those who survived must live with searing memories.

No passage of time can ever erase the emotions of that day. But 1 year later, we also know that no passage of time can diminish the legacy left behind by those who perished. They will always be with us, living on in the family and friends who loved them.

No passage of time will allow us to regain what was so tragically lost on that morning. But one year later, with the passage of time, we see so clearly what was briefly obscured by smoke and fear and disbelief. We see the strength of the people around us—their everyday heroism, their generosity, and their humanity.

No passage of time can change what happened on September 11. But the last year has shown us that when our Nation was tested by terror, we did not falter, and most of all we did not fail each other. We rose together to meet the challenges before us, and we found that together we were capable of more than we ever imagined.

So today we find strength in each other. We find strength in the acts of heroism, and the acts of simple humanity, that took place on September 11 and in the aftermath of the attacks: the bravery of the first responders at the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, and the acts of kindness of Americans all over the country who donated blood, observed moments of silence, or flew the flag in a show of patriotism and support.

Each of these acts, however large or small, contributed to our growing faith in the Nation's recovery, and in each other.

I was deeply proud of the many Wisconsinites who reached out to the victims of September 11 and their families. Volunteers from around the state flocked to disaster relief organizations to donate money and donate their time to support the victims of the attacks.

A number of Wisconsin volunteers also traveled to the World Trade Center to support the rescue workers. That desire all of us felt to do something, anything we could to help the victims of the attacks ran deep in my state, as it did everywhere across the country.

Just as the firefighters and police on 9/11 redefined bravery and heroism, in the uncertain days that followed, the Americans who reached out to help the victims and their families redefined generosity and patriotism.

A number of companies in Wisconsin, as so many businesses nationwide, also donated to the rescue efforts. Fire truck manufacturers such as Pierce Manufacturing of Appleton, WI, and Marion Body Works of Marion, WI, donated critical replacement equipment to the New York City Fire Department. Seagrave Fire Apparatus of Clintonville, WI, rallied to complete previously ordered equipment for the New York City Fire Department in the wake of the attacks, and sent staff to New York to help the Department repair damaged equipment.

These efforts reaffirmed our faith that Americans would rise to this challenge, as we have so many times throughout our Nation's history. And we are rising to that challenge.

It has not been easy, and I frankly don't believe that all the choices we have made have been the right ones. But that has never affected the pride I feel to be an American during this extraordinary time in our history. I couldn't be more proud of the way Americans have come together in the wake of this tragedy, and I have been privileged to serve in the Senate during this last year.

What we as a nation have accomplished over the last year, and what we will accomplish in the years to come to meet the challenge of terrorism, will be our mark on history, not just as a Congress but as a generation.

It is of course impossible to summarize what happened on 9/11 and what it means. There were so many moments—public and private, captured on film and also lost to history—that make up our collective memory of that day.

The New York Times section "Portraits of Grief," however, is one laudable effort to pay tribute to the victims as individuals by remembering and celebrating each of their lives. These brief stories of the victims' lives remind us that the people who died that day were from every walk of life, from all over the country, and from all over the world. They remind us of what America truly is—a sea of nationalities and ethnicities never before seen in human history. The bitter irony of al-Qaida's desire to kill Americans is that people from every corner of the world have become citizens of this Nation.

Like places all across America, the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and the hijacked planes were filled with people with roots in Africa, Europe, the Middle East, Asia, and Central and South America.

These people and their families came here for different reasons, and they likely lived vastly different lives. But all of them had the chance to be a part of this great and free Nation. And all of them were senselessly struck down on September 11.

One such man was Ramzi Doany. I would like to read the story published in the "Portraits of Grief" section of the New York Times about this man, who lived for many years in my home state of Wisconsin.

Ramzi Doany amassed friends. He amassed them with acts of kindness, like tutoring a woman with lupus, two children and no husband, to get her through college, or letting his college roommate and the roommate's wife live in his condo for two years so they could save money for a down payment on a house.

He amassed friends with his sense of humor, which filled a room and flourished at an early age. As a boy of 9 or 10, young Ramzi dug a hole in the backyard for a terrible report card and put a stone on top. "He said it was dead and buried," said his sister, Dina Doany Azzam.

Mr. Doany was born to Palestinian parents in Amman, Jordan, and lived for many years in Milwaukee. At 35, he devoured the novels of Dickens, cooked Thanksgiving turkeys with great pride (even if they were just a bit dry) and had just bought a Harley-Davidson motorcycle. He chose to work as a forensic accountant last March for Marsh & McLennan, the insurance brokerage company, because it would bring him to New York, a city he loved. The job also brought him to the World Trade Center.

It was a funny sort of journey, his sister said.

This man's journey, like so many others, was tragically cut short on September 11.

On this day, the passage of time is bittersweet. Whatever the healing powers of time, no passage of years can change what happened on September 11. But the passage of time brings other gifts.

This last year has brought us resolve—the firm resolve to stop terror, to preserve our liberty, and to do justice to the memory of those who died.

It has also shown us our own resilience—how Americans, even in the initial moments of shock and horror of the attacks, showed so much bravery, so much compassion, and so much generosity.

Finally, time has brought renewal. It has renewed our strength, our hope, and our faith in each other.

So it is with this resolve, this resilience, and this sense of renewal that we move forward, in the name of those who perished, dedicated to fighting terror, and united by our faith in this great and free Nation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, in the morning hours of September 11 our nation endured a terrible tragedy. Though thousands of miles from the crash sites, the response from our "Last Frontier" was overwhelming. Alaskans rushed to aid the victims of the terrorist attacks. They volunteered rescue dogs and handlers. They waited in line for three hours to donate blood. Some boarded planes and traveled to Ground Zero to aid in the search and rescue efforts. In December, those Alaskans were still there clearing debris.

Alaskans who could not travel to the crash sites offered support in other ways. Over 10,000 Alaskans signed two fifty-foot banners bearing the phrase "Love and Prayers, from the People of Alaska." One banner was presented in New York City by Alaskan firefighters. The other now hangs in the Pentagon. Countless Alaskans donated funds to help victims through the economic hardships brought on by the attacks. In Kenai, the Firefighters Association petitioned our state to name a mountain after St. Florian, the patron saint of firefighters, as a tribute to firefighters killed in the World Trade Center.

This year, Alaskans once again join the nation in mourning and remembrance. Today, I attended the Pentagon's memorial service, but in my home State. Alaskans will pay tribute to our heroes in their own unique way. Anchorage residents will observe a moment of silence at 8:46 a.m. Emergency responders from across Alaska will gather on Barrow Street in Anchorage and join firefighters and police in a procession. A memorial wall will be erected at Town Square. In Homer, Mozart's "Requiem" will be performed as part of a worldwide sequence of performances beginning at the hour of the attack and moving from one time zone to the next. I hope all Alaskans who cannot participate in these events will attend a memorial and prominently display American flags.

I am proud of Alaska's efforts to honor and remember the victims of this tragedy. On that fateful morning they gave what Lincoln called the "last full measure of devotion." We honor their memory and their sacrifice.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming. The Senator is advised that under the previous order at the hour of 11:40 the Republican leader will be recognized to speak.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to share some thoughts about this day.

We all have memories, of course, of a year ago. They are so clear after a year. Nothing like that has ever happened in this country. We remember it as we see it again on TV today.

We have had a year to react, to recognize and accept the fact that it did happen. The unbelievable thing, shocking as it was, did happen. But we have also had the time to change from the immediate anger that we had, and the disbelief, to a commitment and resolution to do all that is necessary to make certain that it does not happen again.

We have had this year to increase our loyalty to our country and to our flag, to increase our understanding of the values of freedom and democracy, to commit our resolve to help and support those who have lost loved ones, family members, and friends, to accept the reality that here in the Congress we can disagree and have different views on normal, daily issues, but when it comes to protecting our country and to preserving freedom, we all come together.

The events of September 11 have clearly changed the way Americans view the world. We watched the events unfold. No one will ever forget. Everyone around the world has been touched, and we see some of that now. We are embroiled in a struggle against people who do not care about their lives and have set out to ruin ours. Sadly, we lost lives, but we regained a strong commitment to preserving our freedom and our integrity.

So all and all, it has been a year of shock, disbelief, anger, followed by commitment, caring, sharing, patriotism, and determination. I think we should be very proud of our fellow Americans for their commitment, their willingness to sacrifice and to give—whether it be on the battlegrounds overseas, whether it be in rescue missions or law enforcement, in charity to the needy, leadership in our country both at the community and national level, or just caring for our friends and neighbors and loving our families. This year has put an emphasis in all these values.

The United States will survive and will strengthen. Freedom will endure, and we thank God for the opportunity to be able to ensure that for our future.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, my time was to begin at 11:40 and we are a couple of minutes before that time. If I can take a moment before I begin with that, I will seek recognition now.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. I acknowledge the fine statement that was made by Senator THOMAS and thank him for his efforts today to make sure that Senators are aware of the opportunity to come to the floor of the Senate and pay appropriate tribute and recognition, and express the condolences that are so appropriate for that occasion. I want to make sure he was aware of our appreciation.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Republican leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, this day, September 11, is its own memorial. A year ago I got a call from my daughter, expressing her horror and her sorrow on this, her birthday—and only 2 weeks after her new daughter was born. She talked about how “I will just change my birth date. I will celebrate it a day earlier.” She asked me, “What exactly is this situation in this world I have brought my daughter into?”

It struck me that she would have those questions and those concerns, and what she had seen that day. She worried about what it means for the future.

I talked to her this morning on her birthday. She celebrates her birthday today, as she should—not just because it was the day she was born but because she now realizes that in some ways, in spite of her horror, this is an even more special day—this is Patriots Day.

So my special pen from the Pentagon service will go to my daughter on this day because I think in a way how she felt a year ago and how she feels today reflects what we have all gone through and what we have experienced.

The truth is that this day doesn't really require any speeches or ceremonies, though we certainly will have them all day long. We really need no monument to remind us of the suffering and sorrow that befell our country 1 year ago today.

As we sat there next to the wall of the Pentagon, I kept thinking about the innocent men, women, and children who lost their lives so inexplicably and so mercilessly on that day. But I also think about those who tried so hard that day to save people's lives with danger to themselves. Some of them probably were injured, and some of them maybe were killed—and all that has gone into the work at that building to symbolize the importance of us showing that we are mending our wounds and we are going to be stronger from what we have experienced.

The wound that we had last year hasn't healed, nor should we expect it to be healed so quickly, nor many of the scars. The scars will be there. As a nation, we lost a great deal—not only these innocent lives in Virginia, Pennsylvania, and New York, but also that sense of security, and perhaps even naivety that we have experienced thinking that this is America, we are free and we are accessible, and we go and do what we want without being better in any way.

Well, that has changed. I believe we have been hurt deeply—not just those who were directly involved, but all of us who watched it—all Americans and all freedom-loving people all over the world.

I continue to be so pleased and, frankly, thrilled with the reaction I get when I meet with leaders from countries all over the world—and just average people on the streets of other countries. They come up and express their condolences and their support.

Yesterday I met with the President of Bulgaria and the Prime Minister of Portugal. Their comments were so reassuring and satisfying. They have done their part. Bulgaria—yes. Bulgaria has had troops in Afghanistan and, fortunately, has stood with us and will stay with us in the future.

We have been hurt deeply. But our observance of this day is about more than grief, it is about more than anger, and it is about more than appreciation. It is about valor and courage beyond words adequate to describe what has happened and how we feel. It is about compassion and it is about a unity of spirit.

I have felt that I have seen it as I have gone across this country. I do not know how many States I have been in over the past year—but a lot of them, and there is a different feeling. When people sing “God Bless America” and start taking the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag, they sing and speak differently—with a little more gusto. But it is not about a flag, although that is what becomes so much a symbol of what we are experiencing internally. And it is not solely even about individuals. It is about ideas and principles—the values that have made this country what it is.

In this body, we don't take an oath to people or an oath to a person. We take an oath to the Constitution. So that unity of spirit has really been so obvious since I have gone into States in New England and the South and the West and the far West. It is about faith that looks through death and a consolation beyond all human assurance.

This morning, when we joined President Bush at the Pentagon to formally reopen that section of the building destroyed in the terrorist attack, we all again felt those emotions of a year ago. I was sitting next to Senator DASCHLE, and we couldn't help but remember a year ago when we flew in a helicopter, along with Senator REID and Senator NICKLES, right over that area. We looked down and saw what was going on—the smoke, the confusion, and the activities in trying to save people's lives, put out the fire, and deal with all that was going on. It is a site that has been burned into my memory forever.

Needless to say, there couldn't be a better symbol than the restoration of the Pentagon for the way America's Armed Forces have responded to the assault on our country. God bless them for what they have done and for what they are doing today.

But those who were responsible for that horror—and all those who shelter them, finance them, abet them, encourage them, or reward them—should understand this: America's most important rebuilding is not the shattered wall of the Pentagon, nor the scar in the earth in New York City. For what we have restored in the past year cannot be measured in granite and steel, nor even grassy knolls, as in the case of Pennsylvania. We have rebuilt a wall of resolve, of determination, and of steady purpose.

We have renewed trust in our leadership, and in one another, yes. We will disagree on this floor and we will argue about the best way to do the homeland security part and what should be the limitations on terror insurance. That is what democracy is all about. But in the end we have been able to find a way over the past year to come together and get a result. That is through determination and a steady purpose.

We have renewed trust in ways that I hope will stay with us for a long time. We have rediscovered in our shared sorrow the power of a truly free society to overcome the enemies of freedom.

These are our battlements and these are our armaments, and their might is going to be felt both here at home and in lands far away—until the hand of terror is crushed and the work of justice is done.

Again, we extend our heartfelt condolences to those family members who lost loved ones last year. We remind ourselves of how heroes were born on that date out of that horror, and we rededicate ourselves to the purpose of preserving this great young Republic and all the freedoms for which it stands.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I begin by complimenting the distinguished Republican leader on his eloquence and his message this morning.

It was 1 year ago today that many of us turned on our television and saw what we could only imagine at the time was a horrible, horrible accident. Soon we realized that it was no accident. Instead, it was the worst terrorist attack on American soil.

Later this morning the wing of the Pentagon that was destroyed is being rededicated. That field in Shanksville is once again green. The debris from the site of the World Trade Center has been removed. The heavy equipment and the workers are now engaged in the act of building—not removing.

Through the physical scars of that day, we see a nation beginning to be healed. The emotional ones are still raw with our memory. Thousands of families are approaching their second Thanksgiving without a loved one. Children are approaching their second holiday season without a mother—or a father. Empty lockers in firehouses still bear witness to the brave men who are no longer there.

And so, the Pentagon can be restored. New grass can cover the churned earth of a rural field. New towers can begin to rise where others fell. Seasons and years can pass. Through it all, we will never forget.

This day will forever be a part of our national memory. Nine/even will forever be our national shorthand for all that we witnessed, all that we have experienced—on that day and the days following.

That is what we remember all across America today.

In my home State of South Dakota, there will be a number of small services, including a memorial ceremony at Mount Rushmore.

In Seattle, WA, citizens will march to a downtown fountain that became the city's unofficial memorial after September 11. Thousands of flowers had been left there. Those flowers were gathered by the city and composted. Each marcher will receive a bulb, in mulch generated by the original memorial flowers, to plant.

Birmingham, AL, is dedicating a new memorial walk. San Francisco is unfurling a 5-mile long banner along the city's coastline.

From Portland, ME, to Portland, OR, people are pausing, and paying tribute. All tolled, more than 200 communities are holding events of some kind. In one way or another, all Americans have the opportunity to commemorate our Nation's loss.

And, of course, some people will simply go about their business—and that in itself is a powerful testimonial to our ability to go on.

Today is also a day to remember that our national tragedy is the combination of thousands of individual tragedies.

I think that sentiment was best stated by Janny Scott, a reporter on the Metro desk of the New York Times, who was responsible for assembling a number of the "Portraits of Grief" that sought to capture the essence of each of the victims.

She wrote about "the individual humanity swallowed up by the dehumanizing vastness of the toll," and what she called "the preciousness of each life's path."

This morning, in New York, former Mayor Giuliani began the process of reading the names of everyone who perished on that day. If one name is read every 5 seconds, it will take over 4 hours to list every loss.

We also remember the individual acts of heroism: Firefighters who rushed up to help others get down; the passengers and flight attendants on flight 93, who showed us that we don't ever have to surrender to evil.

Seeing their selflessness inspired something similar in all of us. In South Dakota, one ranch couple—themselves struggling—sold $40,000 worth of cattle and donated the proceeds to the victims. Similar acts of selflessness took place all over the country. Millions of hands reached out to those who had lost so much, until, by the act of reaching out and grieving, and remembering, we all came shoulder to shoulder as we understood the extraordinary nature of the loss.

The terrorists who brought down the World Trade Center thought they could shake the foundation of this country. They didn't understand that the foundation isn't concrete and steel; it is our people, it is our commitment—our commitment—to freedom and democracy, and to each other.

So today, we remember those we lost, and we rededicate ourselves to preserving the memory of their lives, and to defeating the terror that took them.

Our military men and women in Afghanistan and those fighting terror around the globe carry with them our pride, and our hopes.

In the most fateful struggles in human history, freedom has triumphed over the worst forms of tyranny, and we will defeat the tyranny of terror as well.

On March 11, 6 months after the attack, Valerie Webb, a 12-year-old who had lost her only living parent in the World Trade Center, flipped a switch, sending two towers of light rising into the darkness over Lower Manhattan.

Someone compared that memorial to a national votive candle. Others compared it to the lives that were lost: beautiful, powerful, and fleeting. On April 14, as planned, that temporary memorial was extinguished.

At sunset tonight, in Battery Park, New York's mayor will light a flame to commemorate the victims of that day. Unlike the towers of light, that flame will not be extinguished—it will be eternal.

That flame will burn within sight of another eternal flame—the symbolic flame from the torch held by the Statue of Liberty.

Those two eternal flames carry with them two eternal promises.

The torch held by the Statue of Liberty is our Nation's promise that we will never yield in our determination to be a light to all those who seek freedom.

And the flame that will be lit tonight is our promise that though we may be slowly, steadily walking the path from remembrance to recovery—we will never forget.

MOMENT OF SILENCE IN RECOGNITION OF THE EVENTS OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the hour of 12 noon having arrived, the Senate will now observe a moment of silence in recognition of the events of September 11, 2001.

(Thereupon, the Senate observed a moment of silence.)

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, I was very proud of the efforts of Alaskans in response to the disaster on September 11 of last year. Although we are thousands of miles from New York, they immediately reacted.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, later this afternoon in my home State of Vermont, the chief judge of the Federal district court, Judge William Sessions, will have an immigration ceremony, and I might say that I can't think of anything more fitting. We will have memorials and other events throughout the State of Vermont today, just as we will in other States.

Many of us had been at the Pentagon earlier this morning, heard the moving statements, and saw the resolve of the men and women who protect this Nation. We heard our President and Secretary of Defense and others.

It is right that throughout the country we have different events to mark this occasion.

I want to especially compliment Judge Sessions for what he is doing in Vermont. If there is anything that speaks to the resiliency of this Nation, the greatness of this Nation, it is welcoming immigrants, saying our borders are not sealed, our borders are open.

We want to welcome people who will continue to make this country great, just as did my paternal great-grandparents and my maternal great-grandparents who came to this country not speaking any English but who sought employment and a new life. My grandfathers were stone cutters in Vermont, immigrant stock. My wife was the first generation of her family to be born here in the United States. It is immigrants who have made this Nation strong.

What Judge Sessions is doing is telling us that our borders and our country and our arms are still open to the mix of people from throughout the world who will continue to give us the diversity we need, just as our Constitution gives us diversity and guarantees that diversity in the first amendment. We now have new Americans who will be here with the same rights and privileges the rest of us have, and the Nation will be a better place for it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I know a lot of Senators wish to be heard. While I won't ask unanimous consent that this be done, I would urge that the Chair recognize members of both parties in alternating fashion to accommodate both sides equally. That might be the best way to accommodate everybody. That way we can get through the afternoon in the most appropriate way.

I urge and ask the Chair to recognize Senators on either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, we have just returned from a most historic and moving ceremony at the Department of Defense. That building will always occupy in my heart a very special place for I was privileged to serve there during 5 years and 4 months of the period of the war in Vietnam in the Navy Secretariat, including my service as Secretary of the Navy.

On 9/11, of course, I joined colleagues briefly here in the Chamber and then we exited and with other colleagues who were gathered in the park, we chatted a little bit about what we should do. I returned to my office and conducted a brief prayer meeting and recommended to my staff that they proceed to their homes and their loved ones.

In about an hour or two, however, I decided I would like to go to the Department of Defense again because of my very special high regard for the men and women of the Armed Forces and that dastardly act committed by terrorists. I called the Secretary of Defense, whom I had known for many years. We both served in the administration of President Nixon and President Ford. He said: Come right over.

I called my good friend and colleague, CARL LEVIN, at his home, and CARL immediately said, yes, he would join us, and the two of us then proceeded to the Department of Defense where we joined Secretary Rumsfeld and then-Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, General Shelton. It was a memorable afternoon there at the command post watching the magnificence of our command structure dealing with the many unknowns, and yet taking the proper actions.

The President called in. Both Senator LEVIN and I spoke with him briefly. Then we went back with the Secretary to where the plane had struck the building and visited with all those who were performing heroic acts right before our eyes in hopes of saving other lives and doing what they could to comfort those wounded.

We then returned with the Secretary. And Secretary Rumsfeld asked Senator LEVIN and I to accompany him to a press conference. We stood behind the Secretary and the Chairman while they spoke. And then unexpectedly, Secretary Rumsfeld turned to both of us and asked us to make a few remarks.

I have here this morning the remarks I made, with no preparation, just speaking from the heart. And they are as true today, 1 year later, as they were at about 6:30 on the afternoon or the evening of 9/11 when Senator LEVIN and I joined the Secretary. I will just repeat these remarks.

I stated that I was joined by my distinguished chairman, CARL LEVIN, and I said, speaking to the Nation:

I can assure you that the Congress stands behind our President and the President speaks with one voice for this entire Nation. This is, indeed, the most tragic hour in America's history, and yet I think it can be its finest hour, as our President and those with him, most notably our Secretary of Defense, our chairman [of the Joint Chiefs] and the men and women of the armed forces all over this world stand ready not only to defend this nation and our allies against further attack, but to take such actions as are directed in the future in retaliation for this terrorist act—one of the most unprecedented in the history of the world.

We call upon the entire world to step up and help, because terrorism is a common enemy to all, and we're in this together. The United States has borne the brunt, but [which nation] can be next? Step forward and let us hold accountable and punish those that have perpetrated this attack.

Under the leadership of our President and the courage of the men and women of the Armed Forces and the strength of the citizens of this Nation, that has been done, is being done, and will be done.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, under the order now in effect, Senators have up to 10 minutes to speak, and we would ask that everyone would do their best to confine themselves to that 10 minutes.

I ask unanimous consent that the list of speakers be as I am going to outline them. These names have been given to our staff. The staff has given these to me: Senator FEINSTEIN, Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON, Senator LEVIN, Senator SNOWE, Senator DORGAN, Senator SHELBY, Senator DODD, Senator BENNETT, Senator DURBIN, and Senator BROWNBACK. If everyone uses their 10 minutes, that is going to take some time. What I would suggest is that staff be notified of those who wish to speak this afternoon, and we will be happy to do that to make it so that people have to wait not a very long period of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I rise today to share some of my thoughts on this very special day, a day that commemorates one of the darkest days in our Nation's history.

Those of us who listened this morning to the recitation of the names of those killed in the World Trade Center and the Pentagon found in those names both a message of grief and one deep in sorrow. Also in those names was a profound message of how deeply the world is interwoven. The reading of these names was, for me, an unforgettable message of our diversity.

My sorrow, my sympathy, my condolences go to those who have lost so much. For many, they have lost everything; yet they still have their spirit, their hope, and their determination, and they still have the love of a very sympathetic Nation.

On September 11, we all felt as if the loss was too much to bear, as if it would be impossible to go on. But out of the ashes of the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, we in Congress returned to work. We tried in our legislative ways to address the terrorist threat. Within a week of the attack, we approved a resolution authorizing the President to use force against those who would perpetuate or harbor the terrorists.

Within a month, we approved the USA Patriot Act, which authorized our law enforcement and intelligence agencies to take the necessary steps to root out the terrorist threat and to protect the Nation.

In May of this year, we approved the border security and visa reform legislation, which overhauled the way this Nation allows immigrants and visitors into the country.

In June, we approved a bioterrorism bill that included strict certification requirements for laboratories that handle anthrax, smallpox, and more than 30 other deadly pathogens.

At the same time, the United States launched a war against terror. In Afghanistan, the U.S. forces, working with the Northern Alliance, ousted the Taliban, fought al-Qaida troops, and made it possible for Hamid Karzai to be elected President—Afghanistan's first democratic election.

U.S. special forces were also sent to the Philippines, to Yemen, and Georgia to train local troops on how to fight the war against terror. We have broken up al-Qaida cells in Spain, France, Morocco, and Singapore, preventing planned attacks.

In the financial world, the Treasury Department began examining the financing of terrorist organizations, freezing more than $34 million in terrorist assets.

Now the Senate is considering two additional steps to defend our Nation: a bill to create a new Department of Homeland Defense and a comprehensive review of the intelligence failures that led to 9/11.

I would expect the Senate to approve the homeland defense bill in the coming weeks, and, hopefully, it will be signed into law by the end of the year.

On September 17, the Intelligence Committees of both the House and the Senate will open their first hearings on our intelligence review, which has been going on now for 6 months.

One year has now passed. The Nation has shown its resolve and resiliency. Now we must show our staying power.

For me, what emerged from 9/11 were four specific points:

First, we must stay the course on the war on terror. We must ferret out, bring to justice, one by one, group by group, those al-Qaida, or others, who would simply kill because they hate.

Secondly, we must make this country as safe as possible: eliminate loopholes in laws, prevent fraudulent entry into our country, ensure that deadly chemicals and biological agents are properly handled, and see that the national security is protected, wherever possible.

Thirdly, we have to reinforce the hallmarks of America: liberty, justice, freedom. Despite this crisis, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights remain strong and central to our way of life.

Finally, we need to celebrate our democracy, and the way we do that is simple: We make it work. We produce for our people. We pass good legislation. We administer the programs. We show that democracy offers solutions to the real problems of our society.

Let me say one thing about remaining vigilant in the war against terror. Much of the al-Qaida organization remains intact, including two-thirds of the leadership, and possibly Osama bin Laden himself. Afghanistan is our beachhead in the war on terror. We cannot lose it or we lose the war on terror. Yet Afghanistan's leadership is fragile. Just last week there was an attack on President Karzai's life.

We have an obligation to provide for the security of Afghanistan and its leaders and ensure that the nation does not fall under the control of regional warlords. We must ensure that the Afghan economy becomes upwardly mobile.

We have work to do to find those in hiding, whether in Pakistan, Yemen, Saudi Arabia, the Sudan, Southeast Asia, and, yes, in our own country. Al-Qaida remains poised to do their dirty deeds.

America learned on September 11 a very simple and sobering lesson—that there are people in the world who would destroy us if they could. We must remember this fact and do all we can to stop them. This means staying the course and winning the war against terror. This means keeping focused on the immediate threat from al-Qaida, and this means looking for new ways to strengthen our Nation's homeland defense.

As we all consider the past year, let us remember all of those who perished in the attacks and in their memory rededicate ourselves to doing all we can to making our Nation strong and preventing a similar attack in the future.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Madam President, I would like to split my time with my colleague from Texas, so I wish to be notified when I have used 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be notified.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Madam President, 1 year ago today, 3,000 people woke up, kissed their loved ones goodbye, went to work, and never returned. In the blink of an eye, their lives were brutally taken by the violent acts of terrorists.

Together, we grieved and mourned for those who lost their lives. We marveled at the heroism and bravery of the first responders—the firefighters, emergency personnel, and police officers—who rushed into the devastation to help others, many sacrificing their own lives in the process.

But the American spirit of resilience rose from the ashes of Ground Zero, the Pentagon, and that quiet field in Pennsylvania. Our collective anguish became our national resolve. We focused our energies on destroying the cowardly instigators of this tragedy so they could not do it again to us or any other nation on Earth.

We will forever recall this day, but we are not a vengeful people. As Americans, we value peace, freedom, and liberty. We know our diversity and tolerance of other views, religions, and ways of life are what make our Nation great. We do not perpetuate hatred or violence. We teach our children to love one another and treat others with respect.

America was born out of a great struggle. The words of our Founding Fathers ring as true today as they did more than 200 years ago. In 1771, Samuel Adams said:

The liberties of our country, the freedom of our civil constitution, are worth defending at all hazards; and it is our duty to defend them against all attacks. We have received them as a fair inheritance from our worthy ancestors: they purchased them for us with toil and danger and expense of treasure and blood, and transmitted to us with care and diligence.

It is our duty to carry on the crusade for freedom that generations of Americans have fought and died to keep. The heroes of September 11 did not lose their lives in vain. The protection of our liberty and freedom remains resolute.

It is the words of a civilian hero that remain with us, a young man with a pregnant wife at home. He saw the horrors on his airplane that morning on September 11 as they were flying over Pennsylvania. He realized from telephone reports that this airplane, too, was part of a terrible plan headed for one of our treasured symbols of freedom in Washington, DC. Though he had little time to prepare, he and other brave passengers decided to fight. And Todd Beamer's last words in his valiant effort are our battle cry in this war on terrorism: "Let's roll."

America is ready to roll, Madam President, and we will never forget those who gave their lives for our freedom on September 11, 2001.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I thank my dear colleague and tell her I am very happy to have my remarks appear next to hers.

A year ago today, terrorism struck at the very symbols of American democracy and capitalism, as if by destroying those symbols, as if by destroying the buildings, as if by killing innocent people, they could destroy those institutions.

They failed.

Like millions of Americans, a year ago today I watched the horror of the terrorist attacks. But then I watched the triumph of the human spirit. I watched ordinary Americans, people pretty much like us, who on that day did extraordinary things.

A year ago today, our Nation's leaders watched, and we were helpless, like everybody else, to do anything about the problem. I am proud to say today that we are not helpless, that we have started to fight back.

Our homeland is more secure today than it was a year ago, but it is not as secure as it has to be. We are fighting a war, but the Congress has to give to our military and to our law enforcement officials the tools they need to finish the job.

When in doubt, I believe we must act. What is at issue is the safety of the American people, and I am not willing to turn that safety over to our allies, to the United Nations, or to anybody else. Where terror hides, it must be rooted out and it must be destroyed, and if we have to do that alone, then America is willing and capable of doing that alone.

In my 24 years of public service in Congress, I have always been proud of my country and my countrymen, but I have never been prouder than I have been in the last 12 months. It has always been a privilege to serve, but in the last 12 months it has been my great privilege to serve the greatest country in the history of the world.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, 1 year ago today, the openness and freedom of American society were used against us when terrorists hijacked civilian passenger jets and used them as missiles to demolish the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center and destroy a large section of the Pentagon. The fourth jet hijacked that infamous morning, United Flight 93, may well have been headed for this Capitol Building before brave crew members and passengers fought back against their captors.

One year ago today, over 3,000 people had their lives snatched away from them. The emotional trauma of those losses has affected each and every American. No State, no town, no community, no person has been left untouched.

The despicable actions of the terrorists last September 11 have changed the world, not only because of what they have destroyed, but also because of what they have kindled in the American people.

In New York City, at the Pentagon, in the skies over Pennsylvania and across America, 1 year ago today and in the days since then, we have seen the bravery, compassion, determination, and shared sense of purpose of Americans from all walks of life. As one writer put it, "September 11 did not alter the American character, it merely revealed it."

I would add that it did not weaken our spirit, it strengthened it immeasurably.

We have, astoundingly, already rebuilt the mangled section of the Pentagon, and we have cleared Ground Zero in New York City. We have consecrated time and place and commemorated the heroic individuals who faced 9/11 head on.

We are now engaged in a war on terrorism. It is unlike any war we have ever fought. It has no boundaries. It has no clear end. Our enemies target civilians. They are not soldiers. They are not warriors. They are murderers.

We have taken the battle to our enemy. We have destroyed the Taliban and disrupted the al-Qaida network. Those who have not been killed or captured we have driven into hiding. We have liberated Afghanistan from the clutches of terrorists, and we have put the rest of the world on notice that to harbor terrorists is to invite disaster.

In these sterner times, we have rediscovered that we are made of sterner stuff.

Yesterday, I had the honor of helping to plant a memorial Red Ash tree at the Pentagon. That tree, and eight others like it planted at the site over the weekend, were propagated from parts of a champion Red Ash tree in Dowagiac, MI, named as such because it is the largest example known of its species. That champion is 450 years old and 21 feet around at its trunk. It spans the history of America. And, like the American spirit, it is indomitable.

At yesterday's ceremony, I remarked that we Americans are as well-rooted as that champion Red Ash in Dowagiac, and like its crown, our Nation's aspirations reach high into the skies above. The tendrils of democracy root us; our aspiration is an unquenchable desire for freedom—for ourselves and for all people everywhere.

Archibald MacLeish wrote, "There are those who will say that the liberation of humanity, the freedom of man and mind, is nothing but a dream. They are right. It is the American dream."

We have shared that dream with the rest of the world.

For the better part of the last century, the United States and our allies fought a successful battle against the genocidal forces of fascism and totalitarianism. We defeated the Nazis. We won the Cold War. In the bloody struggle between ideologies, democratic governments triumphed over repressive regimes.

This democracy of ours and our allies will prevail against the likes of al-Qaida because the overwhelming majority of people in the world want freedom and justice and dignity and opportunity. America remains a beacon of hope to the oppressed everywhere. Our current generation of service men and women, and the American people generally, will meet the new challenges and threats that we face as a nation as successfully as we met the challenges and threats of the last century.

The people who perished 1 year ago did not do so in vain. We will always remember them and, most importantly, we will honor them by carrying on that noble struggle for what has been called the American dream but what is actually humankind's dream.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the Detroit Free Press titled "Michigan's 16 Legacies" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Detroit Free Press, Sept. 5, 2002]

MICHIGAN'S 16 LEGACIES

(By Sheryl James)

They were among America's best, brightest and happiest.

Many had attended some of the finest schools—Cranbrook, Detroit Country Day, the University of Michigan, Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Vanderbilt.

As teens, they walked the halls of schools from Cass Tech in Detroit to Traverse City High, all of them contributing, achieving, giving back. They were young scholars and financial wizards, technology gurus, National Honor Society members, athletes, musicians, champions of theater, contributors to their communities.

Most of them were well traveled—and well on their way to the kind of success that defines the American Dream. A few already had achieved that dream, with homes in Manhattan, book credits, TV appearances.

One of them survived the 1993 terrorist bombing of the World Trade Center.

They are gone now, these 16 terrorism victims who had significant Michigan ties. But their legacies live on—in their accomplishments and through their loved ones left behind.

FINANCIAL WHIZ KID ON FAST TRACK TO SUCCESS

Terence Adderley Jr., 22, had a head and a heart for finance by the time he was a teenager. Before even graduating from Detroit Country Day in 1997, he had started an investment club. His grandfather, William Russell Kelly, founded Kelly Services of Troy in 1946, and his father, Terence E. Adderley, is its president and chief executive officer.

Adderley, who grew up in Bloomfield Hills, took his love of finance to Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., where he earned a bachelor's degree in economics in May 2001. Soon after, he landed a job with Fred Alger Management Inc., which had offices on the 93rd floor of the trade center's north tower.

Joseph White, a University of Michigan business professor and former interim president, said Adderley had tremendous potential.

White knew Adderley through U-M alumnus David Alger, president of Fred Alger Management. As a young analyst for the company, "Ted was thriving," White said. "He loved what he was doing."

Besides his father, survivors include his mother, Mary Elizabeth; five sisters, and a grandmother.

EXECUTIVE HAD EYE FOR BEST, BRIGHTEST

David Alger, 57, president of Fred Alger Management Inc., was a familiar fixture on CNN, MSNBC and CNBC—and at many U-M events. He was a prominent alumnus and supporter of the U-M business school, where, White said, he was the spring commencement speaker in 1997 and served on the school's senior advisory board.

Alger loved grooming young people for business and often returned to his alma mater.

"David was a terrifically talented man," White said. "A colleague of mine said, 'I loved David's rational exuberance,' and she got it just right. That was David: very analytical and very optimistic. . . .

"David encouraged people to participate in what he thought would be the biggest bull market in American history—in 1991. It was an incredible prediction."

Alger was born Dec. 15, 1943, in California but grew up in Grosse Pointe. He received his undergraduate degree from Harvard University and a master's in business administration from U-M in 1968. He joined his brother Fred's company, Fred Alger Management, in 1972 as an analyst. He eventually owned 20 percent of the business.

In 1995, Alger's brother moved to Geneva, Switzerland, and left him in control of the company's daily operations. At the time of Alger's death, the firm's assets had grown from $3 billion to $15 billion and its workforce from 82 to 220.

Alger, who owned homes in Manhattan and Tuxedo Park, N.Y., loved technology stocks and managed mutual funds that ranked near the top of the 1990s bull market. He often appeared on financial TV programs and wrote "Raging Bull: How to Invest in the Growth Stocks of the '90s."

On Sept. 11, Alger was working in company offices on the 93rd floor of the trade center's north tower. There were 1,300 people at his funeral, said White, who attended. Alger is survived by his wife, Josephine; two daughters; his brother, and a sister.

UNFETTERED SPIRIT LOVED THE CITY LIFE

Eric Bennett, 29, a Flint native, caught the travel bug early when he took a trip overseas with a high school foreign language club. He traveled often afterward, said his mother, Kathy Bennett of Flint.

He visited Brazil, Puerto Rico, Rome, London and Paris, but Bennett also loved the Brooklyn, N.Y., brownstone where he lived, the big-city life in New York and his job as area vice president for Alliance Consulting Group. His office was on the 102nd floor of the trade center's north tower.

"From his home, he could see the towers, and from his desk at work, he could see Brooklyn," his mother said. "He just loved life."

In 1989, Bennett graduated from Flint's Kearsley High School, where he had been co-captain of the football team the year before. In 1993, he received a bachelor of science degree in computer information systems from Ferris State University. He also played football at Ferris State and earned an All-Midwest Intercollegiate Football Conference honorable mention in 1992.

In addition to his mother, he is survived by his father, Terry Bennett, and a sister.

WINGS FAN HELD FAMILY CLOSE TO HIS HEART

Frank Doyle, 39, formerly of New Boston and Bloomfield Hills, was a loyal Detroit Red Wings fan. He grew up playing hockey and was the varsity goalie from his first year on at Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine. Later, he played on three mens hockey teams near his Englewood, N.J., home.

Doyle attended Huron High School in New Boston and graduated from the Cranbrook Schools in Bloomfield Hills in 1980. He earned a bachelor of arts degree from Bowdoin with majors in economics and government in 1985. He also earned a master's in business administration from New York University's Stern School of Business in 1993.

Doyle was senior vice president of the Keefe Bryuette & Woods brokerage in the trade center's south tower. He directed its equity and trading department and was on the company's board of directors.

Just before his death, Doyle was training for triathlons.

"He was probably in the best shape of his life" and planned to run a triathlon the weekend after the terrorist attacks, said his wife, Kim Chedel. But, she said, Doyle mostly "loved being a dad" to their children, Zoe and Garrett, who were 3 and 16 months when their father died.

Doyle and Chedel had both escaped harm when the trade center was bombed by terrorists in 1993. Chedel, who then worked at a brokerage in a different part of the complex than her husband, escaped within 2 hours. She said she cried for hours while waiting for Doyle to emerge.

On Sept. 11, Doyle called Chedel after the first plane hit. He was on the 87th floor of the south tower—the second hit but the first to fall.

"He said, 'If you think we got rocked in '93, this was 10 times worse,'" Chedel said.

"I said, 'Frank, get out of there,'" He said to me, 'The PA system said it was . . . more secure to stay in the building.'"

Doyle called his wife again at 9:22 a.m. "He said, 'Sweetie, we've gone up to the roof. The doors are locked, and we can't go down. I know you know this, but I love you . . . and you need to tell Zoe and Garrett every day for the rest of their lives how much Daddy loves them.'"

His survivors also include his mother, Maureen Doyle of New Boston, and three siblings.

TEACHER KEPT HER FRIENDS FOR A LIFETIME

Barbara Edwards, 58, who grew up in Wyoming, near Grand Rapids, was a woman of character and warmth. She kept friends for a lifetime and, as a high school teacher, showed up at her students' soccer games on her own time.

"Barb was a people person," said her sister Jane Gollan of Seattle. "If you met her 30 years ago, she would still be friends with you. She had a knack for keeping in touch."

Edwards also was a fan of Bette Midler and of personal mementos like the 40-year-old accordion she had as a child. She never threw anything out, and her garage never had room for a car, family members said.

Edwards, who lived in Las Vegas, graduated from Kelloggsville High School in Grand Rapids in 1961 and from Western Michigan University in 1965. She worked for a time at Catholic Central High School in Grand Rapids. She also married, had three children and lived in various states before divorcing in the early 1990s.

She was a high school French and German teacher in Las Vegas when she went to a friend's wedding in Connecticut the weekend before the Sept. 11 attacks. She was supposed to return home, but friends convinced her to stay for a couple of days. She wound up on American Airlines Flight 77, which left Dulles International Airport in suburban Washington, and crashed into the Pentagon.

Just before the attacks, one of Edwards' sons had left a job as a broker in the World Trade Center. In addition to her children, Edwards' survivors include her parents, Jack and Liss Vander Baan who live south of Grand Rapids in Allegan County; a sister, and two grandchildren.

AVID READER RELISHED HIS MICHIGAN ROOTS

Brad Hoorn, 22, originally from Richland, near Kalamazoo, never lost his affection for his favorite childhood book, "Charlotte's Web." He learned to read using that book and he reread it periodically, said his mother, Kathy Hoorn of Richland. A voracious reader, Hoorn often read an entire book to relax before an important college exam, she said.

Bright, energetic and outgoing, Hoorn played several musical instruments; had been president of the National Honor Society at Gull Lake High School in Richland, from which he graduated in 1997, and cocaptain of the tennis team.

He was a computer whiz, his mother said, and loved coming back to Michigan from his New York City apartment to golf with his father, Dennis; play with the family's two Labrador retrievers; visit friends and enjoy boating on lakes near the family home.

In May 2001, Hoorn received a bachelor's degree in economics from Yale University. On Sept. 11, he was working at Fred Alger Management Inc. on the 93rd floor of the north tower.

In addition to his parents, he is survived by a sister.

CONSULTANT MADE HER OWN WAY IN THE WORLD

Suzanne Kondratenko, 27, formerly of Romeo, had such zeal and spark, her sister called her a spitfire, Patricia Kondratenko said Suzanne was creative, independent and had a daring sense of humor.

"Things she would say, other people wouldn't get away with," Patricia Kondratenko of Rochester said. She especially remembers Suzanne's beautiful skin and how she always smelled like flowers.

Kondratenko and her sisters—all seven of them—attended the Academy of the Sacred Heart in Bloomfield Hills. Suzanne graduated in 1992. In 1996, she earned a bachelor's degree in English literature and humanistic studies from St. Mary's College in Notre Dame, Ind.

An employee of Keane Consulting in Chicago, Kondratenko was in New York on Sept. 11 to do consulting work for Aon Corp. on the 92nd floor of the trade center's south tower.

"Suzanne committed herself, entirely, to her every endeavor," said her sister Aimee Kondratenko of Chicago. "She was capable of so much."

She is survived by her sisters and her parents, Eric and Patricia Kondratenko, of Romeo.

ACTRESS CAPTIVATED BY THE ALLURE OF THEATRE

Margaret Mattic, 51, knew by her senior year at Cass Tech High in Detroit that she wanted to be an actress and live in New York. She accomplished that goal, and more. Before she died, she was writing plays and planning to produce them, her sister, Jean Neal of Detroit, said.

"My earliest memories of Margaret are of her performing in school plays," said Peggy Robinson, who grew up with Mattic on Detroit's east side. "She was always the lead. I was a narrator. When we did 'Snow White,' she was Snow White. And she was Gretel when we did 'Hansel and Gretel.'"

Mattic also was adventurous, Neal said. "She did more traveling and living away from home. The rest of us remained in Detroit. Margaret lived in New Orleans and New York."

While Mattic was a student at Wayne State University, where she received a bachelor's degree in liberal arts in 1973, "she traveled to Europe for 8 weeks, all by herself," Neal said. "She had more nerve than all of us."

Mattic, the youngest of five children, always loved to read and write, said her mother, Katie Mattic of Detroit. As an adult, she bought dozens of books for herself and for her mother.

After graduating from Cass Tech in the late '60s, she appeared in several plays in Detroit and New York, particularly ones with African-American themes. Mattic worked as a customer service representative for General Telecom in the trade center's north tower.

She was single and had no children.

HE WAS ON WAY TO A HAWAII HONEYMOON

Robert R. Ploger III, 59, of Annandale, Va., approached his life's work with a sense of adventure, said his father, Maj. Gen. Robert Ploger of Ann Arbor. He studied philosophy in college but wound up working with computers.

He worked for major corporations, established his own successful company and finally became a computer architect for Lockheed-Martin in Washington.

Ploger's parents—his father is retired and his mother, Marguerite, is deceased—were originally from Owosso. Their son graduated in 1959 from Paris American High School in France and attended Michigan State University in 1959-60. He served in the U.S. Army from 1960-62. Ploger then earned a bachelor's degree in philosophy from the University of Denver in 1965, married and raised two children. He and his first wife, Sheila, later divorced.

Ploger had lived in California, Virginia and Maryland, working as a computer specialist.

He married his second wife, Zandra, in May 2001. On Sept. 11, they were on their way to Hawaii for a honeymoon. Both were aboard American Flight 77 when it crashed into the Pentagon. A memorial service was held at the same hotel in Annandale where the couple celebrated their wedding.

GENTLE GIANT WON PEOPLE OVER EASILY

David Pruim, 52, was "the kindest, nicest, most gentle, 6-foot-4 person there ever was," his wife of 28 years, Kate, told the New York Times shortly after his death. "He made everyone he came into contact with feel good about himself, from children to adults."

Pruim was senior vice president of risk services for Aon Corp., on the 103rd floor of the trade center's south tower.

The Pruims, both originally from Michigan, lived in Upper Montclair, N.J., with their 10-year old daughter, Carrington. David was a 1966 graduate of Western Michigan Christian High School in Muskegon. He received a bachelor's degree in political science from Hope College in Holland in 1970.

Last October, the college dedicated its homecoming football game to Pruim.

He is survived by three brothers and his stepmother, Louise Pruim, who lives in Norton Shores. His late father, James Pruim, was mayor of Muskegon from 1994 to 1996.

BRILLIANT MAN HAD AN EMPATHETIC EAR

Josh Rosenthal, 44, was a brilliant guy with a big heart. He doted on his nieces and, despite a terrible allergy to cats, kept his Manhattan apartment window open to provide a scratching post for his neighbor's cats, his sister Helen Rosenthal recalled.

"He had this ability to reach in and really touch people and make them feel like he was truly listening and understanding what they were saying," she said.

Rosenthal was raised in Livonia and graduated from Stevenson High School in 1975. His mother, Marilyn Rosenthal of Ann Arbor, is a professor of behavioral sciences at the University of Michigan-Dearborn. His father, Avram (Skip) Rosenthal of Southfield, owns Books Abound in Farmington and is a former director of the Henry Ford Community College Library in Dearborn.

In 1979, Rosenthal earned a bachelor of arts degree in political science from the U-M in Ann Arbor. In 1977, he was named a Truman Scholar, a merit-based scholarship award given to outstanding college juniors.

In 1981, Rosenthal received a master's degree in public affairs from the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs at Princeton University. He moved to New York afterward, and on Sept. 11, was at work as senior vice president of Fiduciary Trust Co. on the 90th floor of the trade center's south tower.

Rosenthal lived in Manhattan, but stayed involved with family and friends in Michigan. He was godfather to several children of friends his sister said.

"Josh had a large and wonderful family that he was very close to," his mother said.

ONETIME STAR PITCHER HAD NEW LIFE WITH WIFE

Brock Safronoff, 26, originally from Traverse City, worked as a computer systems analyst for Marsh & McLennan Cos. Inc. on the 96th floor of the trade center's north tower. He was a 1993 graduate of Traverse City Central High School, where he had been a star pitcher for the baseball team.

In 1997, he earned a bachelor's degree in chemistry from Amherst College in Massachusetts, where he also was a starting pitcher on the baseball team. Later, he finished course work toward a master's degree from Columbia University in New York.

Safronoff and his wife, Tara, were married in August 2001 on Staten Island. They had just moved to a Manhattan apartment before the Sept. 11 attacks. In addition to his wife, his survivors include his parents Joel and Debra Safronoff of Traverse City; a brother, and a sister.

MILITARY MAN HAD 2ND CHILD ON THE WAY

Lt. Col. Kip Taylor, 38, originally from Marquette, came from a military family. He loved his job as an assistant to three-star Gen. Tim Maude at the Pentagon.

But at home, Taylor loved the gentler art of cooking. He especially loved trying out new recipes on unsuspecting visiting friends, his wife, Nancy, said.

Taylor also loved working with wood. He build a deck and worked on other projects at his McLean, VA., home. He had a 22-month-old son Dean. On Oct. 25, his wife gave birth to his second son, John Luke who will be called Luke.

"He considered his most important role as that of father," his wife said. "We were both so excited about the baby."

In 1985, Taylor graduated from Northern Michigan University with a bachelor's degree in management. He had two scholarships, one for basketball and one for the ROTC program.

He died when American Airlines Flight 77 crashed into the Pentagon. He was promoted to lieutenant colonel from major posthumously, his wife said.

His survivors also include his mother, Kay Taylor, who is executive director of a child care referral agency in Marquette; a brother, also in the Army, and a sister. Taylor's late father, Don, was a retired Army lieutenant colonel who gave his son his commission in 1985 and later taught military science at Northern Michigan University.

HORSE ENTHUSIAST COORDINATED SHOW

Lisa Marie Terry, 42, of Oakland Township found time every summer, no matter how busy she was, to hold her Summer Sizzler Horse Show in Mt. Pleasant.

It was not an easy task for Terry to put on a quarter horse event while working full time with Marsh Inc., a national construction company with offices in Detroit and in the trade center's north tower. But horses were her passion.

"She did it all by herself," said Sarah Tupper of Metamora, Terry's best friend and fellow horse enthusiast. "She worked on it all year, getting sponsorships, making it nice for exhibitors. She made a huge effort to put stuff in the show people wanted."

Terry especially encouraged young exhibitors, Tupper said.

On Sept. 11, Terry, a vice president in charge of construction for the New York-based Marsh, was going to Hawaii for a project. She stopped at the World Trade Center for a business meeting and was among some 300 Marsh employees lost in the attacks, company officials said.

A couple of years before her death, Terry, who was single, celebrated her rise to vice president—a rare position for women in her field—by buying a red BMW convertible, said her aunt, Olga Stevens of Troy. Soon after, she bought her Oakland Township home.

Terry had one brother and grew up in Troy, graduating from Troy High School in 1977. She studied a social services program at Ferris State University from 1977 to 1980 and was a member of the Theta Tau Alpha sorority. She studied insurance at Michigan State University in the mid-1980s.

She loved skiing, flowers and her two cats. An accomplished horsewoman, she showed for the American and Michigan Quarter Horse associations. The latter named her Sportswoman of the Year in 1993.

Terry also was a member of the American Business Women's Association and the National Association of Women in Construction.

FLIGHT ATTENDANT HAD THE HEART OF A CHILD

Alicia Nicole Titus, 28, whose parents live in Dexter, was a positive, peace-loving, let's-make-the-world-a-better-place kind of person.

"She was very much into acceptance of world cultures and . . . very embracing of people with different belief systems," said her father, John Titus. "So it is ironic, sadly so," he said, that she was a flight attendant on United Airlines Flight 175, which crashed into the trade center's south tower Sept. 11.

Titus had just become a flight attendant. Disillusioned with corporate life as a marketing director for a firm in San Francisco, where she lived, she switched careers, said her father, who is director of student advisement services at Schoolcraft College in Livonia. Alicia's mother, Beverly, teaches part-time at the college's Women's Resource Center and Continuing Education Department.

Titus grew up in St. Paris, Ohio. She graduated from Graham High School there in 1991 and earned a bachelor's degree in international business from Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, in 1995.

"She had lead roles in musicals in high school and was into track, cheerleading and National Honor Society," her father said.

She also loved outdoor sports such as snowboarding, mountain climbing and sky diving. She had traveled to Spain, Morocco, England and France.

Titus' roommate in San Francisco told her parents that the Sunday before the attacks, the two went to a local park, where they twirled hula hoops and played on the swings and slides—typical of Titus' childlike zest for life, her father said.

Titus, who was single, also is survived by two brothers; a sister, and a nephew.

RECENT GRADUATE HAD ENERGY, POTENTIAL

Meredith Lynn Whalen, 23, who was originally from Canton Township, loved animals, particularly horses. She always wanted to own a horse, said her mother, Pat Whalen of Canton.

But Whalen valued friends most of all. Her mother was comforted by her daughter's friends after the Sept. 11 attacks.

"Her friends have all described her as a very energetic, caring person with a lot of compassion for others," Pat Whalen said.

Whalen was just as energetic in high school. She was a varsity swimmer and in the National Honor Society at Plymouth Salem High School, from which she graduated in 1996. She earned a bachelor's degree in business administration with honors from the U-M in Ann Arbor in 2000.

"Meredith was an outstanding graduate of our 2000 BBA program," said White, the U-M business professor and former interim president.

White said David Alger, another U-M graduate and World Trade Center victim, spotted Whalen as a young person with great potential and convinced her to work for his company.

She became a research assistant for Fred Alger Management on the 93rd floor of the trade center's north tower and lived in Hoboken, N.J.

She is survived by her mother; three sisters, and a brother. Her late father, Henry (Hank) Whalen, had been a Canton Township trustee.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. A few short hours ago, at the Pentagon, we bore witness to the essence of this solemn anniversary. It was a message of restoration and renewal from a grateful nation.

Today is the commemoration of both incalculable loss and limitless courage, of enduring sorrow and indomitable spirit.

We seek to honor the bravery and heroism displayed by so many for so long on this day and the days following. We are moved to grieve for what and whom we lost—such as Maine victims Anna Allison, Carol Flyzik, Robert Jalbert, James Roux, Stephen Ward, Robert Norton, Jacqueline Norton, and Robert Schlegel.

Today, we embrace all that we have retained as a nation—our strength, our sense of purpose, our unity, and our veneration of the principles of freedom and justice—for today, the hearts of Americans and freedom-loving people across the globe are beckoned at once by sorrow and resolve, and we should heed the call of both.

The snapshots of insanity etched in our minds, the indelible stain of unfathomable inhumanity, these must remain if we are to triumph over the tyranny of terror, and triumph we must.

In a horrific irony, the forces of darkness had their way on an especially bright and beautiful morning, much like today, and the evil that fueled their horrible deeds lives on in the shadows of the world. The struggle before us will be constant, and therefore our vigilance must be unflagging.

So on this first anniversary of a new era, let us continue to brace ourselves to perpetuating what is good and just, as we and our allies did in the 20th century's great struggles against evil. And let us remember how that one day in September not only changed America and the world but also reminded us of what really matters, of the principles and the people we value and certainly should appreciate—our firefighters, police officers, rescue workers, our troops, and seemingly ordinary Americans who, when faced with the horrible certainty of their circumstances, knowingly bring down a plane to save the lives of others, not to mention the very symbols of our democracy, the Capitol and the White House.

On this solemn occasion, we celebrate those heroes who walk among us today, while the legacy of those who made the ultimate sacrifice reverberates throughout New York, Washington, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and every town and city in this land. Indeed, if it is true that a nation is defined by its response to adversity, then America redefined its own greatness.

Men and women searching and clearing the World Trade Center site worked day and night, while volunteers brought them food and water. Their labor will stand as a memorial beside the hallowed site's eternal flame near the hole in the Earth that mirrors the hole in our heart that will never fully mend. And just across the Potomac, engineers and construction workers poured forth every last ounce to rebuild the Pentagon within 1 year in a gesture comprised of equal parts defiance and pride. At the building's D-ring, a father literally helped repair the broken stone and mortar near the very spot where his son perished that fateful morning.

What is lost can never be recovered, but with this first anniversary of September 11, it is as though life has reclaimed its rightful place where destruction dared intrude. At the Pentagon there is a single blackened stone set within the new wall to symbolize what cannot and must not ever be forgotten. We have witnessed an almost incomprehensible transformation from the blackened devastation we saw a year ago, just as America itself has been transformed.

An unparalleled sense of unity and compassion swept across America, proving once again that the true strength of our Nation has always flowed from the fortitude of our people.

As we lifted up the hearts of those grieving for loved ones, we moved toward a swift and just defense of our freedom, and the President worked vigorously and mightily to build an international coalition. And while the war on terror will unquestionably be long and dangerous, our heroic men and women in uniform struck quickly and decisively at the heart of the Taliban.

In February, I had the privilege of visiting our troops and meeting with President Karzai as part of a congressional trip to Afghanistan. What left the most profound impression on me, one I will never forget, was the unflinching commitment, the indefatigable resolve, and highest level of professionalism, not to mention bravery, of our troops.

Indeed, much was revealed to us on the morning of September 11, 2001: The extent of the threat against us, the image of the devil incarnate, but also the face of a resilient and passionate and a united nation that would not allow this travesty to stand.

We have learned that we can continue the process of healing, even knowing we will never fully be healed. We have learned we can move forward, without moving away from the anger we justifiably feel. Indeed, if we are to properly memorialize those whom we lost on that day and the days since, then we must maintain a boundless resolve in perpetuity that is so essential to keeping America secure and eradicate the roots of terrorism and the bloody instruments of fear.

At Gettysburg, President Lincoln said:

It is for us the living . . . to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is . . . for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us.

That is our call yet again today. That is the destiny to which we must rise. Now, like then, we are equal to the challenge. God bless America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I was not sure if I was going to come and say a few words today. I am almost fatigued by the coverage of 9/11, and yet there is something so important about this moment that silence somehow is not an appropriate response.

The horror of the moment of September 11 last year remains with us even as we ache in our heart for those who lost their lives on that day. I think all of us understand the target was not buildings. It was not buildings in New York or Washington, DC. The target was the spirit of our country. The target was democracy. The target was Americans and what Americans represent.

With the 1-year anniversary of that event, it is important for our country again to take stock of where we are, who we are, and what our citizenship responsibilities are as Americans.

One year ago, I left the Capitol Building late at night to drive home and drove past the Pentagon. It was still burning, with smoke billowing out of the Pentagon that was then bathed in floodlights. It was an eerie sight to see the fire at the Pentagon even late at night and to hear and see the F-15 and F-16 fighter planes flying combat missions over our city and the Capitol that day and that evening.

We went back to the Pentagon a few days later, and we were, as Members of Congress, meeting with Pentagon officials and viewing the damage. As we were there, one young marine was hanging by a crane in a bucket up near what had been the fourth floor of the Pentagon in what now was an open wound and gash in that concrete building. He had been hoisted up in the bucket by a crane that was moving toward this open gash. As we watched him, he reached around into this open area where this airplane hit and he pulled out a flag he had spotted up in an open area that had miraculously burned, and he brought this red and gold flag, which was the Marine flag, a brilliant red and gold color. He had the crane lower him to the ground. He marched over to where we were, walked past us and said: I am going to give this flag to the Marine Commandant. He said: Terrorists could not destroy this flag, and they cannot destroy this country.

I think the spirit of that young marine and the spirit of people at Ground Zero, where we visited a week following the attacks, is something I will always remember.

The visit to Ground Zero that many in Congress conducted was a very sad visit, showing the carnage and destruction of the World Trade Center where so many thousands died. The event I recall from that day, among many, was a firefighter who came to me with a several-day growth of beard, blood-shot eyes. He had worked around the clock for many days. He told me of the friends he had lost, those who were his fellow firefighters who had died in the tragedy. Here was a man who obviously had very little rest, had worked day and night. Through his blood-shot eyes and with a uniform that was quite dirty, having worked around the clock, he looked at me and said: Senator, you must promise me to do one thing.

I asked: What is that?

He said: Get them. Get them. If you do not get them, they will do this to this country again.

He represented the feeling of all Americans. We must make certain that terrorists are not able to do this again in our country. Our country is, in my judgment, as united as ever, united to battle terrorism wherever it exists in the world. We have come to understand as a country that a battle against terrorism is not quick. It is not easy. But it is something to which all America is committed. Every fanatic anywhere in the world who thinks terrorism is an acceptable means to an end needs to hear and know that America is united.

My State is half a continent away from Washington, DC, and New York City where the attacks took place. Let me speak for a moment about my rural State, so distant from the urban areas where the attacks took place.

First, tragically, we, too, experienced the loss of life. A young North Dakotan, Ann Nelson of Stanley, ND, died when the World Trade Center collapsed. I knew Ann and her family. She was a very special young woman. Her father has been a good friend of mine for many years. She had a bright future ahead of her, and she was a joy to all who knew her. Ann Nelson was a young North Dakota woman seeking a career, pursuing a job in the World Trade Center in New York City. She died because she was an American. She was one of thousands of innocent Americans who lost their lives because of these heinous, unspeakable acts of horror committed by terrorists.

The day of the attack in Washington, DC, I looked up in the sky to see fighter jets flying overhead. I found out later that day they were pilots from Fargo, ND, members of the Air National Guard called the Happy Hooligans, some of the best fighter pilots in the world. Over the years, they have won three William Tell Awards which is the award for the best fighter pilots. They are stationed on a rotating basis at Langley Air Force Base.

Part of their mission is to protect the Nation's Capital. They were the first scrambled and the first in the air and the first over the Nation's Capital on that very day, 9/11. We are so proud of them. They are the ones we saw in the air almost immediately after these attacks.

Their mission, I told them, reminds me of something I read some long while ago. I don't know where it comes from, a verse that said: When the night is full of knives, and the lightning is seen, and the drums are heard, the patriots are always there, ready to fight and ready to die, if necessary, for freedom.

A lot of patriots last September 11 said: I'm here and I'm ready to fight for freedom.

In the weeks and months that followed the attacks of September 11, our country has come together like never before. We understand that we face a very special and unusual challenge. We are a big, wide open, free democracy. It is very hard to provide absolute security in every way, every day all around our country. We do not want any of us to diminish the basic freedoms that represent America, the basic freedoms in our Constitution. We do not want to diminish those freedoms in order to fight terrorism. We want to fight terrorism and eradicate terrorism wherever it exists. We want to preserve that which makes America unique, the most wonderful country on the face of the Earth.

A year ago when I spoke in this Chamber about the events of September 11, I recalled the words that Shakespeare wrote: Grief hath changed me since you saw me last.

It continues to change us as we go forward carrying the heavy burden that grief imposes. But part of that change is much more than grief. Part of it is a steely resolve to respond forcefully and strongly and with precision to those who carried out the attacks 1 year ago. Our resolve in this year, in my judgment, has grown even stronger.

This will be a day that Americans will think about for many decades to come, the September 11 anniversary of 2001. My hope is we rededicate ourselves today to the mission ahead and the challenge ahead to preserve our democracy. My hope is that today we also pay honor to the memory of those innocent Americans who lost their lives, and then say thank you to all of the heroes who, on September 11, extended forward and said: Let it be me to reach out and help. And especially we say thank you to the men and women of the Armed Forces who serve in harm's way all across the world.

Finally, months after September 11, I was in Afghanistan, Baghram, Kabul, and that region of the world. As you fly into Afghanistan and look down through an airplane window to the hills and the mountains and understand that somewhere in caves deep in the mountains there were people plotting the murder of innocent Americans, you understand we cannot ever be oblivious to what is happening in the rest of the world. It can have a profound impact on the lives of those who cherish freedom.

I say to the young men and women I met in Kabul and Baghram and elsewhere, thanks for your service to America. Thanks for helping us wage the fight against terrorism, a fight this country is determined and destined to win.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SHELBY. Madam President, one year ago, America awoke to a tragic and devastating incarnation of hatred and evil. Incomprehensible to most citizens only a day before, the terrorist attacks of September 11 dramatically changed our people, our country, and the entire world.

Insulated for over 50 years from foreign attacks on our soil, Americans in an instant grasped the magnitude of the threat we face from terrorism. In the days after the attacks, the dangerous world in which we live never seemed more precarious.

The immediate aftermath brought a tremendous outpouring of grief and sorrow.

Our Nation mourned as the realities of the events of September 11 penetrated our collective psyche. Candles were lit in remembrance and flags were flown in patriotic displays of unity. Stories of bravery and courage emerged in the wake of the attacks which helped to inspire and remind us of all that is great about the American spirit.

This foundation of strength which was built in the days after the attacks prepared us for the challenges ahead, and helped harden our national resolve to deliver our enemies to justice.

We live in a far different world than the one we occupied just 12 months ago.

With a clear sense of purpose our country has engaged the war on terrorism on every conceivable front. The vision outlined by President Bush in his September 20 address to the nation has been undertaken with extraordinary success. We have been vigilant in our fight to hunt down those responsible for the attacks, as well as those who might do us harm in the future. We have fortified our defenses and reorganized our government. Americans everywhere are more aware of their surroundings and remain defiant of those wishing to do us harm. We as a nation have grown stronger and more united than ever.

We have been blessed with enormous freedoms and prosperity in this country. Over the course of our history, many Americans have made the ultimate sacrifice by giving their lives to protect our freedoms. Although we have enjoyed many years of peace, the events of September 11 showed us that this fight is far from over.

We must continue to build on the successes of the past year, and never become complacent with our victories. The burden cast upon our great Nation was one we neither asked for nor deserved, but we carry it on our shoulders consoled by the memories of those who went before us who sacrificed in the name of freedom.

I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. In the absence of anybody else on the floor seeking recognition, I ask consent that I be permitted to speak for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, Senator SANTORUM, Senator ENSIGN, and I have just returned from memorial services in Shanksville, PA, commemorating the downing of Flight 93. It was truly an inspirational and emotional occurrence. The families of the victims of flight 93, the crew and passengers, were seated front and center, and then a large crowd was assembled, estimated in advance to be in the range of 20,000 to 30,000 people.

Gov. Mark Schweiker, Governor of Pennsylvania, spoke, as did former Gov. Tom Ridge, now the Homeland Security Director. There was not a dry eye in the entire assemblage. The message delivered by Governor Schweiker and Governor Ridge was a moment of remembrance, a moment of commemoration, and a moment of hope for the future, with a determination that a united America will repel terrorists wherever terrorists exist and that the struggle for freedom will be maintained and will be won.

Governor Schweiker went to the Shanksville Elementary School in advance of the ceremony and brought to the assemblage, especially the families of victims of flight 93, this message from the Shanksville Elementary School:

If God brought you to it, God will bring you through it.

That brought quite a response.

Churchill was quoted, I think, so appropriately:

Never was so much owed by so many to so few.

I think that is especially applicable to the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House of Representatives because flight 93 was headed to the U.S. Capitol. That had long been the speculation, and it was confirmed 2 days ago in an article in the New York Times, quoting members of al-Qaida.

Ms. Sandy Dahl, wife of pilot Jason Dahl, made an emotional speech and later came down and sat right next to where I was sitting and was holding her infant daughter, Michaela, who will be 2 at the end of September. It was quite a poignant picture of the widow, grieving for what happened a year ago today, but holding her child and looking forward to the future. The child was smiling, and so was Mrs. Dahl, looking at her infant daughter.

It is my hope that the Congress will yet act on legislation which has been introduced to grant Congressional Gold Medals to the 40 who were crew and passengers of flight 93. As I moved through the assembled ladies and gentlemen who were families of the victims and spoke to them and heard of their grief, the common thread was:

Please move ahead. Thank you for the legislation—thanking the Congress for the legislation authorizing the creation of a memorial at Shanksville, a national memorial site, but also asking that our legislation for the Congressional Gold Medals be completed.

The family of Georgine Rose Corrigan presented me with this photo and the ribbons, red, white, and blue. These photos were worn by so many—virtually all of the families of the victims who were in attendance.

Yesterday, I spoke on the floor of the Senate and said that sometime before dusk today I would ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill S. 1434, which has 69 cosponsors, which would grant the Congressional Gold Medal posthumously to the victims of flight 93. This bill should have been moved a long time ago. I have taken it up with the appropriate Senators to get it moved, and it has not moved because of the interest of some in expanding it to cover other victims—the firefighters, the police, and others.

I certainly think it would be appropriate to grant recognition to all of those people. However, I think the victims of flight 93 are in a special category because they saved the Capitol.

In order to avoid the complications of having a bill discharged from committee, I have consulted with the Parliamentarian as to the procedures for having a bill held at the desk.

MEASURE READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 1434

Mr. SPECTER. At this time, I submit on behalf of myself and 69 cosponsors a bill to authorize the President to award posthumously the Congressional Gold Medal to the passengers and crew of United Airlines Flight 93 in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on the United States on September 11, 2001.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the first time.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1434) to authorize the President to award the Congressional Gold Medal to the passengers and crew of United Airlines flight 93 in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on the United States on September 11, 2001.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, for purposes of completing the procedure, I intend to object after asking the bill be read the second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been heard.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks the program for the commemorative ceremony in Shanksville be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

“A TIME FOR HONOR AND HOPE”—ONE YEAR ANNIVERSARY MEMORIAL SERVICE, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2002

IN REMEMBRANCE OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON. Madam President, I rise today to commemorate the vicious terrorist attacks that occurred on our Nation a year ago today, September 11, 2001.

Over the past few days, in large cities and small towns, in New York and the Pentagon today, in my home State of South Dakota, people have gathered to remember and to reflect upon what happened this last year.

In many ways it still does not seem possible that a year has passed since the attacks of September 11, 2001. It seems too soon to look back and reflect on the meaning of September 11 because the events of that day still echo in our daily lives. The wound is still too fresh, the loss too great. Every American will remember exactly where they were when they realized that our Nation was under attack. The images of that day will be with us forever: The burning buildings, the endless television footage of airplanes crashing into the Twin Towers, the images of New York covered in rubble.

I will always remember the smoke of the Pentagon as it appeared through a too-perfect blue sky here in Washington DC. But other thoughts—candlelight vigils, American flags adorning buildings, fences, and barns, the heroism of the passengers of American flight 93, and the lasting bravery of firefighters and other first responders—will also remain in our hearts as constant reminders of that day in September.

Across the Nation and around the world, people came together to do what they could for the victims and their families. I was proud, but not at all surprised, when South Dakotans overwhelmingly responded with offers of blood and other assistance. Millions of dollars were donated by South Dakotans to relief organizations, and thousands of hours of time were volunteered in efforts to aid survivors and the family members of victims. Employees at Luverne Fire Apparatus in Brandon put in 2,000 hours of their own time to build a fire truck that was donated to New York City. Red Cross volunteers from Rapid City assisted in recovery efforts at the Pentagon. Farmers and ranchers throughout the state sold cattle and grain at auctions and livestock drives and donated that money to relief efforts. In one extraordinary example, Don and Adeline Hight of Murdo sold 100 calves and donated the proceeds, about $40,000, to help victims of the terrorist attacks. In Brown County, the Rural American Patriot Fund used the money they collected from fellow farmers and ranchers to buy thousands of dollars in Patriot Bonds. The idea of Patriot Bonds began with a call from a South Dakotan to my office, and were approved by the Treasury Department last December. Patriot Bonds, similar to World War II war bonds, allow Americans to support the relief and recovery efforts at the World Trade Center and the Pentagon and to help fund the war on terrorism.

South Dakotans also helped to ease the emotional strain that the attack had on survivors and the victims' families. Police officers specializing in stress management from Mitchell and Yankton went to New York to help the police officers there deal with the emotional aftermath of the terrorist attacks. Lance Fillspipe, Junior Rodriguez, and eight other police officers from Pine Ridge Indian Reservation traveled to New York to help the police there handle security. Bonnie Riggensbach and Bob Holmes of Rapid City, both therapists, traveled to New York to do what they could to help people mend their lives. The Disaster Mental Health Institute at the University of South Dakota went to New York City in the wake of the September 11 attacks and played a key role in helping the recovery process. Students at Mount Marty College put together a banner signed by members of the community with words of sympathy and support for the city of New York. That banner is being considered by the Guinness Book of World Records as being the largest handmade banner ever made. Through gestures large and small, South Dakotans united with their neighbors and worked to bring something positive from all of the terrible destruction.

A lot has changed in our country, and in our world, since September 11. Our Nation has learned, to our vast sorrow, that we were not as untouchable as we had believed ourselves to be. Our country is involved in a war against terror that has taken our courageous military men and women, including my son Brooks, to Afghanistan as well as other far-off corners of the world. Our military effort in Afghanistan has helped to free people who were oppressed by a dictatorial regime that, in addition to the atrocities that the government inflicted upon its own people, harbored a terrorist group representing the worst humanity can become.

Here on the home front, things have changed as well. Barricades have been erected around national monuments, the Capitol, and the White House. Lines are longer and security more thorough at airports. Despite the longer lines and tighter security, our Nation still moves and functions much as it has for the last 225 years. We remain a beacon of democracy and justice for much of the world, and I work very hard as a Senator to make certain that new regulations, however necessary they may be in our post-September 11 world, do not infringe upon the basic rights of our citizens that we seek to secure.

So as we take this day to reflect upon the many lives lost last year, we are to reflect on the courage and heroism of those who did so much to save lives and defend our liberty today. We take comfort that the terrorists' goals were not realized—that there were attacks on buildings, but there were also attacks on everything America stands for—on individual liberty, on religious tolerance, on democracy, on free speech, and all the rights of our Constitution. These forces of hate, these forces of intolerance tried to destroy the very things that make this Nation strong. Buildings are being repaired but, more importantly, the light of democracy that holds this Nation together and our fundamental values burn just as brightly as it ever has.

The United States took a hit, but we have responded aggressively, and America will remain a beacon of liberty and freedom for the world forever after.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Madam President, as I contemplated what I might say here today, I went back in my computer and pulled up a letter I wrote on September 22, 2001, in response to a friend of mine who corresponded with me in that difficult time. He is a history professor. I have known him since high school. And I sat down at my computer and simply let things flow out. I have now decided to share that letter with the Senate and with the country as I look back on it after a year's time. I think it reflects better than anything I could create now not only my feelings at the time but my concern for where we should be and what we should be doing.

I read the letter dated September 22, 2001:

I have your letter, dear friend, and am moved to reply in depth using you as my audience as I make an attempt to speak to all the issues I see.

I start with the President's address to the Congress last Thursday. It has been called historic, one of the greatest Presidential addresses ever given. It certainly had that character and, listening to it in a packed chamber more hushed than I can ever remember, I was struck by the power, eloquence and directness of his words. From a distance of a day or two, however, as I analyze it and discuss it with my colleagues, I realize that the speech was more than moving rhetoric. For the first time since the end of the Cold War, a U.S. President has laid out a clear statement of what the world is now like and what the U.S. role must be in that world.

The fact that this has not been done before is less a knock on previous Presidents than a realization that, until September 11, Americans in general were probably not yet free of all our Cold War illusions. We are the world's only remaining superpower, we told ourselves. We are a just compassionate nation, we said. Ergo, we reasoned, it follows that, under our vigorous stewardship, the world itself will become a just and compassionate place, albeit little by little.

With Hitler and Stalin and Mao all dead, we thought, with the Soviet Union gone, evil—true malevolence—has gone from the world stage. It only pops up here and there in the form of an isolated Serb or Somali warlord.

No more.

Now we know that evil is alive and thriving, still threatening the peace everywhere in the world. Irrational hatred has not disappeared. The same mindset of fanaticism that built gas chambers 60 years ago is now hijacking airplanes and flying them into buildings, overseeing the preparation of chemical and biological weapons of mass destruction. As the President made so starkly clear, the world's new enemies hate freedom as much as Hitler did, and are prepared to kill millions as much as Stalin did. Evil has not gone away; it has simply changed its political language and its physical address.

Our Cold War mentality told us that the trouble in the Middle East was about Israel, about power politics between established nation states, about borders and economics and markets. I readily agree that Israel has real problems with her neighbors, and they with her, but this is not about those problems. It is not about Israel. It is about defending the helpless against evil.

President Bush told us that America is feeding the poor in Afghanistan. I didn't know that before. Since his speech I have been in briefings from those familiar with the region who tell us that the Taliban uses food as a weapon, denying it to those that oppose them. They say they hate us for our support of Israel, but they also hate us because we are trying to feed the starving in their own country, and thus undermine their effort to starve everyone into submission.

They hate us because we profane their world with our notions of freedom—we "pollute the holy places" with business people and diplomats who let women drive and appear in public with bare faces. They hate us because we take the youth of all countries, including theirs, into our universities and teach them about science and economics and democracy, as well as about blue jeans and movies and freedom to travel and open debate. President Bush said it better than I can, and it was necessary for him to lay all that out if the Country is to "get" what we are facing.

The President spoke of the diplomatic front in this war, of our need for partners. . . . He reported good progress there, citing Pakistan as an example. In the same briefings that told us about food shipments to Afghanistan I learned that the current leaders of Pakistan really don't have much of a choice in this fight because they are a target themselves. They hardly qualify as democrats by our definition, but the radicals still hate them for even their tenuous ties to us. By some estimates, the radicals are close to bringing the government down and turning Pakistan into another Afghanistan. The same is true, in terms of the radical's end goal, in Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and elsewhere.

The leaders of those countries know they are at risk, and have been for some time. Sadat was murdered because he was willing to go to Jerusalem and say, "No more war." Those leaders need our help and are willing to help us in return because, long term, they know that the only nation with the capacity to lead a world wide campaign to eliminate this evil is ours. The success we are having in building a coalition of partners in the first days of this conflict is one of the most encouraging signs that things are, for the moment, going somewhat well.

You are a historian; you know that the Second World War didn't begin on December 7th. Neither did this one begin on September 11th. As was the case with Europeans in the 30's, Americans have been in Foreign Policy denial in the 90's. Thrilled with the demise of our four-decade Soviet enemy, we read articles about the "end of history" and ignored the signs that were there to be seen. Now we have to go back and examine those signs. . . .

We must realize that we are truly at war, and, as was the case in 1941, really have been for some time. The embassy bombings, the attack on the U.S.S. Cole, the intelligence warnings—all these should have told us that this is a war and not, as some of the commentators have described it, a law enforcement problem. What's the difference? . . . In a war you focus on prevention of attack, not punishment. You . . . go after the enemy's assets to destroy them before they can be used to destroy you, gather the best intelligence you can and then play hunches and probabilities. You don't give out Miranda warnings.

Please accept my assurance that our leaders know how different and difficult this war will be. They know that we have to have partners, and that many of these partners have internal problems that will prevent them from being the kind of "allies" on which we could traditionally count. . . . The team that President Bush has assembled is experienced, intellectually nuanced in its understanding, and deep. Down below the level of Cheney, Powell, Rumsfeld and Rice is a significant bench of very solid players who understand what we are up against. . . .

So there we are. It has fallen our lot . . . to be the leader of the free world in a struggle that is global and against an enemy that is fanatic, decentralized, persistent, completely fearless and very, very patient. . . . bin Laden and his fellow fanatics have decided that they can defeat [us] . . . by keeping intact their capacity to visit horror on us at unexpected times. We will not have won until that capacity is destroyed. This will be a very long, tricky and difficult fight.

But, as the President said, we will win it. And it will be worth it. The stakes are nothing less than they were in 1941 and through the Cold War years, for us and for all the rest of those who want to live in freedom.

Madam President, reading that a year later, I still feel the same way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized to speak for up to 10 minutes in this slot previously reserved for the Senator from Illinois and that Senator DURBIN be recognized to speak in the next Democratic slot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

Madam President, it is truly an honor to have the opportunity to come and speak on the floor of the Senate today. This is one of those days when the Senate Chamber is really the people's forum, when the partisan or ideological or regional or whatever differences that sometimes separate us in votes fall aside and we stand here before the Chair, under the slogan that describes us—"E pluribus unum," "Out of many, one"—and truly represent the common and shared values, hopes, and aspirations of our people.

I am proud of what my colleagues have said thus far in this discussion and very grateful to be a part of it.

In New York City today, they are reading the names of the victims, the names of 3,000 of God's children, magnificent in their characteristic American diversity, whose lives were savagely taken on September 11 of last year simply because they were American. None of us here can say anything as powerful or profound as the recitation of those names today.

The Pentagon, the World Trade Center, and that field outside Shanksville, PA, will forever be hallowed battlegrounds, places where we will take our children to stand silently and contemplate their meaning, places of worship, really, where we will revere the lives lost and honor their place in our history.

This morning, as I left the very moving and unifying commemorative rededication service at the Pentagon, I came across a family, and I said hello and shook their hands, and I realized these were survivors of a man killed in the Pentagon on September 11 of last year: A young boy about 10 or 12 years old, full of innocence and youth, a great looking kid, carrying an American flag in a case—I presume the flag that was either placed over his father's coffin or given to him in memory of his father—a woman, who was the wife of the deceased and his parents—strong American stock—a man wearing the cap of a veteran, tears under his eyes. And there it was: A son without a father, a woman without her husband, parents without their child. I was speechless. There was nothing I could say except to shake their hands and put my hands over my heart.

In some ways, silence is a more appropriate response to the dreadful losses that were suffered on September 11. Silence, somehow, speaks more loudly to the horror and the complicated feelings that we all had on that day. Nevertheless, we must speak, to reflect on what happened that day, in the year that has passed, and to try to learn from that day and chart our way forward.

Madam President, our enemies hoped that September 11, 2001, would be the first page of a new chapter in world history: The end of the American century; the end of America as we know it; the beginning of a civilizational conflict, based on theological differences, taken to an inhumane extreme, which would end in the victory of radical extreme Islam.

As a distinguished Muslim citizen of Connecticut said yesterday at a public ceremony, al-Qaida hijacked his religion.

In this the terrorists betrayed their ignorance, not just about Islam but about America; not just about the American people but American democracy and its values.

I wish to speak for a moment about this conflict that September 11 has put us into and the differences between us and our enemies, which is what this is all about. This is not a simple struggle for power. This is a global conflict for values, for ideals. We are idealists. We and our many allies around the world, including so many millions in the Muslim world, believe in the inalienable and inviolable rights of every individual. Our enemies are craven cynics who desire raw power for themselves and seek to crush those who look or act or think differently. They claim to be religious, but how can they be religious and faithful in any way in which any of the world's religions understand it, if they are prepared to kill thousands of God's children allegedly in the name of God?

We are different. We are optimists. We grant people liberty, not as the gift of politicians but as our Declaration of Independence says: As the endowment of our Creator. We have confidence that a society governed by its people will progress, and that is why we seek to open the world and broaden the community of nations living under democracy, as we have so magnificently since the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Our enemies are not just pessimists; they are fatalists. They fear the voices of the people. They want to bring down a theological iron curtain to divide the world into acceptable and unacceptable people and nations and faiths, to those worthy of living and those targeted for death and domination.

Third, we are skeptics in a very healthy way. We question one another and ourselves. We are proud of who we are but not so proud that we pretend to be without fault. Our enemies proceed with a chilling sense of certainty and an unwillingness to look at themselves in the mirror.

It is those values that have guided us through our history and distinguish us now from our enemies. The men and women of our military performed brilliantly in unfamiliar territory against an unprecedented foe. Our police officers, firefighters, and other first responders have had reason to despair, but they have risen to the immense challenge and reminded us of what heroism they display every day. Every day Americans in our communities have had reason to lose faith and to turn from hope to fear, but they have not faltered. They have come together, finding our strength, not losing our optimism and our courage.

Here in Congress, though we still have work to do, we have faced the new reality of the post-September 11 world. We have asked tough questions of ourselves. We have supported our President as Commander in Chief. We have realized that we have not been as prepared as we should have been on September 11 last year, and we are taking steps to close our vulnerabilities.

As we do, we must remember that September 11 was not just a tragedy that happened. It was not just a natural disaster. It was an unnatural disaster, carried out as an intentional act by people who were evil.

That is why, as Charles Krauthammer wrote in the Washington Post a while ago, we must understand this anniversary as more than a day of mourning and solemn remembrance. It must be not just a day of commemoration but a day of rededication. Charles Krauthammer wrote:

We would pay such homage had the World Trade Center and the Pentagon collapsed in an earthquake. They did not. And because they did not, more is required than mere homage and respect. Not just sorrow, but renewed anger. Not just consolation, but renewed determination. . . .

We will build beautiful memorials to those killed on September 11, but there are other memorials that we here in Congress can and must build: a Department of Homeland Security that does everything humanly possible to prevent anything such as September 11 from recurring, and it need not recur.

We must support and encourage our military to search out and destroy or capture al-Qaida wherever they exist. We must reach out to the Muslim world, the great majority who are not fanatics or extremists, who suffer from a lack of freedom and a lack of material resources and hope, and offer them the support and the freedom that they desire and that is ultimately the best defense against the evil terrorism of the minority in the Islamic world that al-Qaida represents.

As we approach the great debate in this Chamber on the questions around Saddam Hussein and Iraq, we must remember the lessons of September 11. As we look back, having heard the warnings of Osama bin Laden, having experienced the attack against the World Trade Center in 1993, against the two embassies in Africa, against the U.S.S. Cole, as we look back, don't we wish we had taken the kind of action we are taking today to destroy al-Qaida?

In her foreword to "At Home In The World," a collection of Daniel Pearl's writings in the Wall Street Journal, his widow Mariane Pearl wrote:

The terrorists who killed Danny stood at the other extreme of what Danny represents. They could only wield their knife and cowardice against Danny's intellectual courage and bold spirit. Danny died holding only a pen. They stole his life but were unable to seize his soul. By killing Danny, terrorists took my life as well but could not lay claim to my spirit. We will never let them win.

So, too, the terrorists may have killed 3,000 innocent Americans on September 11 of last year, but they will never lay claim to America's living spirit. We will never let them win.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I rise to speak about the events of 1 year ago. I am delighted to follow my colleague, Senator LIEBERMAN of Connecticut, with whom I have worked and will continue to do so. I add my name to his comments.

Today we are gathered to remember those who lost their lives on September 11, to honor those who sacrificed everything for the concept of and belief in freedom. That day and every day since then are stark and simple reminders that freedom is not free and that it is never secure.

This is something the people of my home State of Kansas have long understood. Our very motto is "ad astra per aspera"—"To the stars through difficulties." We have lived this every day, every year since before we were a State.

It is also a theme our entire Nation embraces today. We were not bowed by last September's attack. In fact, we arose from the ashes stronger and more resilient than ever.

"The greatest victories come when people dare to be great," Ronald Reagan said, "when they summon their spirits to brave the unknown and go forward together to reach a greater good."

In the days immediately following that fateful day, we summoned our spirits and went forward together. We dared to be great.

As you look at the memorials, and as you listen to the speeches of remembrance, think of the sacrifice of all those involved, and of the lives cut short, the promises broken, the happiness destroyed. It is all too easy to cloak these sacrifices in mere platitudes. We must remember exactly what it means to sacrifice and what exactly was sacrificed.

These were not nameless, faceless people who just simply acted out some role. These were sons, daughters, husbands, wives, brothers, sisters, mothers, and fathers. They were scared men and women who had thrust upon them the part of hero, and they lived up to the billing.

It is also too easy to just call them heroes and walk away. It is not easy to recognize the fear and the strength and the courage they exhibited on that particular day.

I have been particularly taken now, reading stories of the heroes of 9/11 and the miracles that happened on that day—stories that we are all familiar with now—Todd Beamer and "let's roll," and the flight that went into the field in Pennsylvania, which was the very flight headed for this building. It probably would have reached its target had they not been heroes on that day. Would this place even be here now? It may have been rebuilt, but would we be back here yet? How many lives would have been lost here?

I read last Friday in USA Today about miracles of 9/11. Some police officers, one a rookie, went into the south tower; they were buried in 20 feet of rubble. Three of them were together. The first was killed in the first crushing, but two survived and they were able to crawl around. The second tower came down and they were pinned underneath the rubble and stayed there almost 24 hours. They could see a light about 20 feet up, and they knew there was a possibility they would get out. As they faded in and out of consciousness during the night, one of them had a vision, it said in USA Today. The vision he saw was Jesus coming toward him, bringing him a bottle of water. It gave him strength. He wasn't fearful of death. He was able to reach out with strength and yell for help. They were eventually found by a marine and were dug out from the rubble. That is one of the miracles of 9/11.

I think of the heroes that were going up the tower, instead of coming down, on 9/11. It was an amazing day, a tragic day, one we should not and we won't forget.

Also, sometimes it is easy to think that perhaps life does not change that much when actually life has irrevocably changed. It is not that life doesn't go on; it certainly does. We must never forget.

As author Elie Wiesel said in his Nobel lecture:

For me, hope without memory is like memory without hope. Just as a man cannot live without dreams, he cannot live without hope. If dreams reflect the past, hope summons the future. Does this mean that our future can be built on a rejection of the past? Surely, such a choice is not necessary. The two are incompatible. The opposite of the past is not the future, but the absence of the future; the opposite of the future is not the past, but the absence of the past. The loss of one is equivalent to the sacrifice of the other.

We must not forget our past or the attacks or the outpouring of generosity and patriotism and simple kindnesses in the days following the attacks. All of this must continue. We cannot return to the safety of our homes and pretend the storms buffeting the lives of people hundreds and thousands of miles away does not affect us.

September 11 was a wake-up call that we cannot and will not forget. It has changed us. It has changed us in substantial ways that we can see and feel, and in ways that I don't think we have wrestled with yet.

One simple thing: "God Bless America" has become a national song—not the National Anthem but the national song. We gathered again today as Members of the Congress on the steps and sang it as we did on September 11. I hope we can officially continue to do that. Even though it was unofficial today, I hope our national song will become official.

We are a nation founded by men and women who are willing to stake their lives upon the conviction of universal rights and freedoms; that this was larger than their own lives and small roles that they felt they would play; that their actions were just a shot across history's bow on behalf of all people who both desired to be free and honored the sense of duty that liberty engendered.

On September 11 we saw a number of people step forward to recognize and fight for those universal rights and freedoms, each of us in our own way in our own actions. Today, we still have a torch to carry—for all those who died on September 11, all those who have died in the war against terrorism, and all peoples across the world who desire freedom.

These may seem to be the worst of times, but we are resilient and, most importantly, we are a hopeful people and we will prevail. There is a Biblical verse that says:

And not only so, but we glory in tribulation also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed. . . .

We are a hopeful people. God bless America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I joined my colleagues in the Senate this morning on a trip to the Pentagon. The project there is known as the Phoenix Project, and those familiar with mythology know that the Phoenix is the great bird that rose from the ashes and flew again. Well, the spirit of America was flying again this morning at the Pentagon as we looked at a restored building—more importantly, a restored spirit.

The President, the Secretary of Defense, and others spoke. We all gathered—thousands of us—to pay tribute to those who lost their lives on September 11 there, as well as the victims in Pennsylvania and in New York.

As our buses came back, there were a number of people gathered in Washington on The Mall. Many of them were—in their own way, with their families and friends—commemorating September 11. As I passed, I saw one man standing there with a handwritten sign that said "United in Memory." I thought that really captures what we are doing today. We have stood united since September 11, but today we reflect. We are united in memory. We grieve for the victims. We mourn those who died.

But we also stand in praise of those heroes of September 11. Each one of us carries certain images in our minds of where we were when we heard it, what we did. For most of us, the first calls were to our families, and maybe it was indeed proper that we would turn to those we love the most to make certain they were safe.

I still remember images of that day, and the days following, just as real as the moment when I experienced it. One was a photograph from the New York Times, which showed a New York firefighter racing up the stairs, as you saw a long line of people racing down the stairs of the World Trade Center. A young, handsome face—probably a man with a family himself, thrusting himself into the jaws of that disaster in the hope that he could save someone's life.

Many like him—firefighters, policemen, first responders, medics, and others—gave their lives on September 11. They got up that morning and put their badges and uniforms on and probably never thought twice about whether they would return to their families. Sadly, many never did. They are truly American heroes.

I can recall a few weeks later being out on Lake Michigan, near Chicago, in a Coast Guard vessel with the young men who were keeping 12-hour shifts, patrolling the shores to keep them safe, checking every vessel that came on the Great Lakes. Most people in Chicago didn't even know they were there. But they were—every single day.

I can remember, as well, the Capitol Police just outside this door and around this complex, who worked 12-hour shifts day after day, week after week, to protect us, to protect the visitors, to protect the staff, to protect this great building after September 11. They are truly American heroes.

In January, as part of the first congressional delegation to visit Afghanistan in the daylight hours, we went to Bagram Air Force Base. It was an old Soviet base, and we were using it as part of our efforts to liberate Afghanistan from the Taliban.

To sit down with those young men and women in uniform who had missed Christmas with their families, did not know how long they were going to be there, and just to talk with them and eat with them and share some stories about home, and to have one young man come up to me and say: Senator, I am from Illinois. Can I ask you a favor? When I come back after this, could you give me a helping hand?

I said: Sure, what is it?

He said: I would like to become an American citizen.

I said: Wait a minute, you're a soldier here.

He said: Yes, I am. I was born in Panama, and I am not an American citizen. Will you help me become an American citizen?

I said: You got it, buddy; whatever you want, I will be there.

I also remember another incident in the middle of December. I flew into O'Hare, and I went down to get in the line for a taxicab. I drew a taxicab, and the driver was wearing a black turban and a beard. As we started to move along, I said: Excuse me, sir, would you happen to be a member of the Sikh religion?

He said: Yes, I am.

I remember I had been visited by Muslims, Sikhs, and others worried about people who would discriminate against them, and I knew a little bit about some of the terrible things that happened to them—they were isolated, but that did happen.

I said to the taxicab driver: How have things been for you over the last several months, wearing your turban, trying to be a regular taxicab driver?

He said: Most people couldn't be nicer. There were bad ones, too. Some cussed me out; some wouldn't get in my cab. They think I am a terrorist, too.

He said most people could not be nicer. He said: I have been in the United States for 33 years. I wish they would get in my cab because I would like to show them something.

I said: What is that?

He reached over and pulled down the visor, and there was a photograph of a young man in a U.S. Army uniform.

He said: I want to show them a picture of my son Michael.

I said: Michael is in the Army?

He said: Oh, yes; he was in Kosovo.

I said: Where is he now?

He said: He is with the Special Forces in Afghanistan, and I haven't heard from him in 6 weeks.

I thought to myself: Boy, does that tell the American story. Here we have a man who some, with little education or learning, in their ignorance, would say is an enemy of America. No, that man is a loyal American who was offering his greatest treasure on Earth, his son, to our Nation to serve and who was in harm's way at that very moment.

Just a few weeks ago, four widows from the World Trade Center came to see me. They want a public investigation of what happened leading up to September 11. I completely support them. I think it is now overdue. We should do it.

They talked about their experiences with their families. They told their stories over and over in all the Senate offices. Some of them carried around their necks photographs of husbands and families.

I remember one saying: I am lucky. My three friends here do not have any evidence of their husbands they lost, but I was a lucky one because they found a hand, and on that hand was my husband's wedding ring which I now have on my hand. That is all that survived.

She was grateful for that one memento of his life and how much it meant to her, and what a reminder it is to all of us of the true grief and loss that so many families have endured.

I suppose the lesson from September 11 should be clear: Let all those around the world who would attack the United States know that they will pay a heavy price. We approve of that. But also let everyone around the world know that we are not an aggressive, angry people. We are a caring and compassionate nation, and if others will reach out with a hand of peace, we will extend ours as well, no matter where you are from, no matter what your religion or ethnic or cultural background. Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida did not understand that, but we in America understand it well.

When I reach back in history for words that bring inspiration, I so often turn to one of our favorite sons, Abraham Lincoln from Illinois, and his second inaugural address right outside this building in which he said:

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just, and a lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all nations.

Lincoln said those words as we came to the close of the most devastating war in our history. He reached out to try to find common ground, even with the enemy, to bind this Nation. So, too, should we reach out in this world to tell the story of America, to help build a more peaceful world, a world where our children and grandchildren never have to fear another September 11.

After September 11, we were not just united in anger, not just united in sympathy. We were united in memory and united in hope—hope for a world of peace, hope that our children and children around the world will be spared the horror, the disaster, and the tragedy of September 11.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Madam President, as we observe the 1-year passing of the day al-Qaida attacked America, we have in our hearts, our thoughts, and our prayers the victims and their families. On this painful anniversary, they do not stand alone in their grief. All Americans of all faiths, colors, and creeds mourn the senseless loss of life on September 11, 2001.

The war on terrorism is a fight against evil forces bent on destroying America and our many freedoms. President Bush said this war will be unlike any we have ever seen, and he is certainly right. This is a war without borders and one in which the battle must be brought to the enemy, lest terrorists strike again on our own soil.

In the long proud arc of our Republic, America's courage has been too great, its values too strong, and its freedoms too dear to ever be turned back by an enemy. As we stand at the beginning of a new century, I am certain in the knowledge that we will prevail again.

Madam President, the watchwords for Kentuckians and all Americans on this day must be: Never again.

I think we can safely say that 1 year after September 11, 2001, we have ended the first chapter in the book about the war on terrorism. But the second chapter is going to be, in many ways, much more challenging.

The President and many of us in this Chamber are haunted by the notion that a year ago today, had those planes been full of something other than gasoline—a chemical weapon, a biological weapon or, worse still, a nuclear weapon—all of the destruction that we remember so vividly today would have been dramatically worse.

We will have before us in the Senate in the next few weeks a resolution giving the President the authority he will be seeking, and we will need to give him, to begin to launch the second chapter in this war, which is to target weapons of mass destruction, wherever they may be in the world, in the hands of leaders or gangs who wish to use them against our own people here at home.

This is a new doctrine the President will be laying down. In the past, we have turned the other cheek, if you will; we have waited to be attacked, and then we have responded. But that approach, when one considers the devastation of weapons of mass destruction, is simply unacceptable. The American people will not accept a strategy based upon responding after the next attack on our own soil using weapons of mass destruction.

This will be one of the most important debates we will have in the history of this body, and it will come up in the next few weeks. It will be an appropriate memorial and remembrance to those who lost their lives a year ago today as a result of a conventional attack. Were they alive today, I am sure they would applaud our efforts to prevent another attack with weapons even more devastating on other Americans here at home.

Make no mistake about it, this is the new challenge of the 21st century: Weapons of mass destruction in the hands of gangs such as al-Qaida or regimes such as the one in Baghdad used on Americans here at home by people who really are against modernity, who want to roll the clock back to the Middle Ages where women had no rights, where people had no opportunity to speak or to worship as they chose.

This is a war between modernity and the Middle Ages. Our enemies are quite intelligent and resourceful, and this challenge is going to go on for quite some time.

In conclusion, this would be a fitting memorial to those who died a year ago today, that America in a very proactive way seeks to prevent the next attack in the United States using weapons of mass destruction.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Madam President, I think all Americans today are pausing, if not for a moment, for a longer time just to think, to kneel and pray. On their mind is a historic incident that occurred a year ago today in this country.

Many of my colleagues and I went to the Pentagon this morning to recognize that great tragedy once again and to be there to honor those 184 civilian and military men and women who tragically died in the Pentagon when it was struck by terrorists.

There is no doubt in my mind, and my guess is there is no doubt in any American's mind, they again relived the events of the phenomenal and tragic incident that occurred a year ago today, both mentally and visually on television or in ceremonies or prayers or moments of silence around this country.

In rethinking that day myself, I thought of my own emotions; that I grew angry at first to realize we were being attacked by terrorists. Then I experienced for a moment on Capitol Hill that day a sense of fear that maybe the Capitol itself would be struck, or our office buildings, and that my staff might be in some way injured or my family may not be safe. Out of that fear, though, grew in my mind, and grew in most Americans' minds, a phenomenal sense of resolve.

Since that tragic day, we have seen that resolve take shape in so many forms, whether it is the celebrating of a complete reconstruction of the Pentagon today in almost unbelievable time, or whether it was citizens across this Nation reaching deep in their pocket to give a little or a lot of their personal wealth to help the remaining citizens whose husbands, wives, sons, or daughters were the victims of the 9/11 incidents.

As I was listening to our Secretary of Defense and our President today, I thought of two Idahoans who died a year ago today at the Pentagon, one LTC Ron Vauk of Nampa, ID, and one Brady Howell of Sugar City, ID.

I have known LTC Vauk only by a piece of paper. When I was a young Member in the House of Representatives, I had looked at his resume. I had studied his grades and I, along with the rest of my colleagues, had decided he was eligible for and ought to be nominated to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. We did nominate him, and he served with honor.

He had retired out of the military and was serving in the Navy Reserve, teaching in this area. He was serving only as a reservist at the Pentagon in a temporary status for a few days, having been called from his job to do so when that plane struck. I will never forget the time I spent with his bride and their small son in Maryland. I watched the unity of that family coming around the widow and that small son of LTC Ron Vauk. That was the kind of resolve we have seen repeated time and time again out of the tear-stained faces of Americans as they recognized that they had to commit themselves, as our President and as this Congress has committed itself, to never letting this happen again.

I remembered Jennifer Vauk today, and I can only say to that brave widow that I thank her for her courageousness at this tremendously difficult time for her. Resolve and resilience flowing from the veins of Americans into the energy of their souls clearly speaks so well in this country today. It is not just a 9/11 feeling, it is a sense of patriotism and resolve that has grown out of nearly every crisis this great country has experienced down through the years. It comes in all different forms.

At this instance, in Idaho, it was the Red Cross sending volunteers all the way across the country to Ground Zero in New York, or it was the numerous churches or memorial services held across the State of Idaho, or it was a marvelous little gal in Pocatello who had saved $1,000 of her own money to buy a horse, and she gave all of it to the 9/11 charities so some other child could have a little bit because that child had lost so much, a mother or a father.

It was not just an Idahoan doing it. It was thousands of Americans speaking out from the smallest, almost the poorest, to the tallest and the most wealthy in our country who found the capacity in their heart to experience this resolve and dedicate themselves, as did Leah Wright in Pocatello with her $1,000.

I suspect every generation has a defining moment. My guess is that September 11 is the defining moment for America's current generation. Our President, in speaking today, has given a name for all of us who would call it 9/11. It will be a Patriots Day, and I hope that every year we stop to remember Patriots Day and why we now recognize it in that capacity.

Congress is now debating legislation to create homeland security as a department, hopefully to bring our country together more cohesively, to allow our law enforcement communities to do so in a way that will give us greater intelligence and therefore greater resolve. In doing so, we must not allow terrorism, or our commitment to stopping it, deny us our own personal freedoms. We should never select security over freedom because it is the very freedom of our country that gives us the resolve we have today. Tragically enough, it was the very freedom of our country that caused terrorists to strike at us because we do not speak of freedom for Americans only, we speak of it for all citizens of the world and citizens of all countries as a right of humankind to be as free as possible, and for this great country to be dedicated to that freedom.

In our search for security, let us not deny ourselves the very freedom that is the strength of our country.

Many more will speak today, and at the end of the day many tears will be re-shed in memory of the men and women who died on 9/11. I am so proud of my country and so proud to be but a small part of its leadership because I have sensed in the Senate that while we may have our differences politically, a resolve all Americans have at this moment is to never allow this to happen again, never allow our citizens to be the target of an enemy that would choose to strike them down for political expression.

So be it 9/11 or be it Patriots Day, I hope on September 11 next year we will once again be speaking out about that day on September 11 of 2001 when thousands of Americans lost their lives, but America found once again a revitalized reason for being what we are and striving to allow the rest of the world to have the same kind of human freedoms we have and cherish.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Madam President, though we would never wish to relive the horror of September 11, 2001, we must dedicate ourselves to appropriately remembering it. That is the task we begin with this first anniversary of that darkest of days, to properly and lastingly honor the sacrifice of the more than 3,000 women, men, and children who perished at the Pentagon, at the World Trade Center, at the crash site of flight 93 in Shanksville, PA.

September 11 will be a day of mourning for many years to come. And it should be, for the grief of those who lost loved ones on that day will pass only with their passing. Nothing can wipe away the memory of a friend or a family member taken before their time. The victims of September 11—those who died and the friends and family who survived them—deserve our enduring respect.

Though the attacks were carried out in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania, no American was left untouched by this tragedy. That includes the men and women of my home State of Tennessee. I think of John and Pat Lenoir of Knoxville who lost their son, Rob, when the World Trade Center collapsed. Francis Hall of Knoxville lost her sister-in-law. And Otis and Nancy Tolbert of Brentwood, TN, lost their son when flight 77 crashed into the Pentagon. We keep those Tennesseans in our thoughts and prayers today.

It is entirely appropriate that the President and First Lady began their September 11 by attending a church service. I hope Americans all across this country follow their example by spending some part of their day in a house of worship or on bended knee in prayer. Regardless of the God we may worship, faith in a higher power can help heal and explain and console and reassure us today, just as it did a year ago.

Though September 11 attacks did bring one of the darkest days in our history, a few rays of light did shine through. Americans rallied to help those in need by waiting hours to give blood, by donating supplies to the rescue effort, by digging deep in their own pockets for the September 11 charities. I am especially proud of the Tennessee Baptist Convention that sent 30 volunteers to prepare food for the rescue workers at the World Trade Center.

I am still moved to this day, as we were at the Pentagon a few hours ago, by the presence of members of the Tennessee Task Force One who helped search for survivors and recover the fallen at the Pentagon.

America will always remember the men and women who risked their lives to save the lives of others on September 11: Those on the front line, the medical personnel, the firemen, the police officers, all who rushed into harm's way, who forever touched our hearts with their heroism. Their example exists, survives, as an inspiration to us all. It will remain so for generations to come.

Britt Brewster, a 12-year-old Tennessee girl, who came up yesterday from Tennessee to participate in the remembrance services said earlier this week:

The one good thing [about September 11] was that America started coming together as one.

I remember visiting Ground Zero with about 40 of my colleagues from this body a couple days after the attacks. Smoke was still rising from the debris. Almost everything was covered with the fine ash. The only color, other than the workmen's bright yellow hats, was the American flags that hung so proudly posted on the buildings around that World Trade Center site. We should fly our flags on this anniversary and show our common love for country and our fellow countrymen.

There has been much debate about what we should teach our children on this first anniversary of the September 11 attacks. I believe they need to know the truth. I had the opportunity to take my wife and my three teenage boys to Ground Zero about 2 months after the attacks. I wanted them to see firsthand the destruction with their very own eyes and remember, long after I am gone and my generation is gone, what evil once did—and, I should add, can do again—to our country. I will take them back to New York. We were just there 5 days ago and saw the rebirth, the vitality of that remarkable city. I also want my sons to see what good can be done, and can always be done, in our country.

The Gettysburg Address is considered one of the most powerful pieces of funeral oratory ever delivered on American soil. As Lincoln himself admitted, even he could not dedicate the battlefield beyond what those who fell there had already done. Instead, he urged his audience at the time to dedicate themselves, "that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion."

The terrorists attacked on September 11 and continue to make deadly threats because they hate our country and everything we represent. The 3,000 women, men, and children who died on that tragic day did so for the same cause as those who fell on the battle green of Lexington, and the forests of Argonne, and on the beaches of Normandy—justice, equality, liberty, democracy.

I urge every American to offer their respects to families who lost loved ones, to put those who perished in their prayers, and to show their patriotism by unfurling the American flag. But above all, I hope we will rededicate ourselves to those values, to the values that have been the core of the greatness of our country for more than two and a quarter centuries. Those values may be threatened sooner than we may think. If they are, we will find strength and hope and resolve in remembering, properly and lastingly, September 11, 2001.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, this past year, has been one of tragedy and challenge for the American people. Just a year ago, on September 11, 2001, we experienced a dawning national tragedy.

Just as the workday was beginning—8:46 a.m. to be precise—terrorists struck this country in a series of savage attacks. Over 3,000 were killed and many more were injured. Those attacks struck a vicious blow at every American everywhere.

Over the past year we have labored with the highest degree of human spirit to address our grievous losses—as individuals, in our families, in our communities, and as a nation. At the same time, we have worked hard to deal with the challenges that confront us now and into the future. We are resolved to put an end to the scourge of terrorism and to bring its perpetrators to justice. Our response to terrorism must be committed and complex, for no simple solution or single action can accomplish our goal. We must engage in the broadest possible international effort, for we know that terrorists are not contained by national borders. As we move forward, we take our inspiration from the calm determination and steely resolve of the firefighters, police, emergency personnel, and airline passengers who responded to the attacks, and from the resilience of those who are rebuilding lives and families and communities.

And we shall move forward, for we have families to care for, neighbors to look after, jobs that must be done, and civic obligations that must be met. The events of September 11, 2001, were tragic beyond measure, but our response to those events demonstrates the great strength of America and provides a new sense of what it means to be an American. The future of our Nation is ours to make.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, a year ago today our Nation was savagely attacked in maybe the most evil attack ever on American soil. Over 3,000 innocent people were killed. I call it an evil attack because how can it be more evil than to kill people who are totally innocent—men, women, and children?

The attack on the World Trade Center was an attack on the United States, on our economic beliefs and foundations. The attack on the Pentagon was an attack on our national security and defense. Flight 93 was, we now find out, headed for the Capitol, an attack on our democracy. I thank God for the heroes, the passengers on the plane.

A lot of heroes came out as a result of these savage attacks a year ago—men and women who were running into the buildings, not away from the buildings; into the buildings to save lives.

It is amazing. If you look at the pictures we have seen in the last few days of the World Trade Center and Pentagon—it is amazing that there are only 3,000 that were lost. That number could have been significantly higher. If you look at the devastation in New York City alone, it would not have been hard to imagine 20,000 lost, not 3,000. It probably would have been 20,000 lives lost had it not been for the courageous acts of firemen and policemen and fellow workers putting their own safety at risk to save other lives, not to mention the passengers on flight 93 who kept that plane from running into our Capitol, from hitting our Capitol. I cannot imagine the loss that would have happened, not just the loss of life—of Senators and Congressmen, our staffs, our employees, our security officers—but also the effect it would have on democracy. I shudder to think what would have happened if they would have hit our Nation's Capitol.

Today I joined with the President and many others in rededicating the Pentagon. It is great to see the Pentagon rebuilt, and my compliments go to the workers and others who rebuilt such a wonderful building in such a short period of time. But we also remember the loss of life in each of these instances.

In the Pentagon, a former employee and personal friend of mine, Barbara Olson, was killed. She was a passenger on that airplane. My heart still aches for Ted Olson and their family. What a terrible loss that was, taking the life of a person who was so bright, had so much life, was so engaged in the political life of our country. To have that life taken is just a very sad tragedy. To think that is multiplied by 3,000 times all across the country, it is a very sad reminder of the enormous tragedy we have suffered.

It reminds me of the Oklahoma City bombing we suffered on April 19, 1995. In Oklahoma City, we lost 168 lives. I knew some of those people as well. When you know somebody it makes it more personal. It is not just 3,000 lives. You realize it is individual families and some of those families were totally devastated and their futures enormously changed, if not destroyed because of this senseless, cowardly, evil attack that happened a year ago.

Like Oklahoma City, we had a lot of heroes. The heroes, the firemen who raced into the building, the heroes on flight 93, the heroes who were saving lives in the Pentagon, the medical personnel and others who saved countless lives, in some cases they gave up their life in order to save lives. The Bible says:

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

We had a lot of American citizens who laid down their lives to save other lives. What an enormous gift they have given. They did this to pay the ultimate price or make the ultimate sacrifice—to save the lives of other Americans.

Thousands of people killed one year ago today. Why? Because they were Americans, because they happened to be citizens of the United States, because they stood for freedom, they happened to share freedom.

Our country was attacked economically and militarily and politically. However, we survived that attack. The American economy is fine. Our American military stands strong. Our American democracy remains steadfast.

My compliments to the men and women in the military who are protecting our freedom daily and who have done a fantastic job going after the culprits, those who are responsible for this attack, in Afghanistan and other places.

My compliments to the administration, President Bush, Secretary Powell and Secretary Rumsfeld and others, who are going after the perpetrators of this crime—not just in Afghanistan, but in countries all across the world. My compliments to them for building up an international coalition of over 90 countries who are joining us in this attack, fighting the battle against terrorism throughout the world.

There is a lot of work that has been done and a lot of work that yet needs to be done. This Congress needs to join with the administration, both legislatively but also in support in continuing this attack and this battle on terrorism. We are not finished. There are still a lot of trained terrorists who threaten our country. Unfortunately, maybe they have been brainwashed into thinking it is good to try to kill innocent people if they happen to be Americans, or maybe if they happen to be friends of Israel. There is a lot of hatred that has been fomented for a long time, and that is very regrettable, but it is important that we band together—people all across the world—to condemn and combat terrorism.

I think the President has done an outstanding job, leading this country and leading the free world in that battle. I compliment him for it. We have a lot of work ahead, but I am absolutely confident that freedom will prevail. We are a great country because we are a free country. We have greater freedoms—political freedom, economic freedom, religious freedom—than any other country in the history of mankind. I am absolutely confident, though, in 10 years from now or 20 years from now, we will still be able to say that we live in the greatest and most free country in the history of mankind. However, these freedoms have been attacked. Frankly, these freedoms have been under attack for several years. Now we are responding and we are responding strongly. Yet we still have a lot to do. I am confident that the people who challenge us will not be successful. Freedom will prevail.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Wall Street Journal dated September 11, 2002.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 11, 2002]

WE WILL PREVAIL
(By Theodore Olson)

From a speech by Solicitor General Theodore Olson to the Federalist Society on Nov. 16, 2001. Mr. Olson's wife, Barbara, was one of the airplane passengers murdered on Sept. 11, 2001.

September 11, 2001 was unprecedented in our nation's history. Our country has been attacked before. Our soldiers and innocent citizens have been the victims of terrorism before. But never before in our history have so many civilian citizens, engaged in the routines of their daily lives, who neither individually nor collectively had done anything to provoke the savage attack that they were to experience that day, been brutally murdered for the simple reason that they were Americans, and because they stood, in their countless individual lives, for all the things that America symbolizes.

As President Bush immediately recognized, Sept. 11 was an act of war. But it was much more than that. It was also a crime, an act of pure hatred and unmitigated evil.

The victims were of all races, backgrounds, religions, ages and qualities. They had one thing in common. They were nearly all Americans. Their lives were extinguished because they were the embodiment of the aspirations of most of the world's peoples. The people who killed them hate the beacon that America holds out to people who are impoverished, enslaved, persecuted and subjugated everywhere in the world.

The men who planned the savage acts of Sept. 11 cannot prevail as long as American ideals continue to inspire the people they hope to tyrannize and enslave.

It is a cynical lie that the animals that killed our loved ones were motivated by Islam, or because this nation of ours is anti-Islamic. Enshrined in the First Amendment to our Constitution is freedom of expression and the free exercise of religion. This continent was populated by people who crossed a terrifying ocean to reach a rugged and inhospitable frontier to escape religious persecution.

From its birth, this nation and the American people have offered sanctuary and shelter to all faiths. Our Constitution—always with the support of our people—has extended its embrace to the unpopular, the unusual, the unconventional and the unorthodox. We protect not only those who will not salute our flag, but those who would spit upon it or burn it. We pledge our allegiance to a Constitution that shelters those who refuse to pledge their allegiance to it.

It is true, I suppose, that there are many in the Middle East who hate this country for its support of Israel. But how tragic and misguided to despise us for extending comfort and defense to a people who have so long, and so recently, been the victims of indescribable ethnic persecution. Nor has America's support for Israel ever been rooted in or manifested by hostility to the Muslim faith or those who practice it. The terrorists and their apologists have lied about these things, but what is another lie when their goals and tactics are so vastly more evil?

The terrorists can succeed only through corruption and brutality. Thus they must tear down America and its system of laws which shields its people from those malevolent acts. They can enslave the people they wish to subjugate only by keeping them poor and destitute, so they must undermine and discredit the one place in all the world that stands the most for the rule of law and allows its people the opportunity to rise above all those conditions.

Abraham Lincoln was paraphrasing our Declaration of Independence when he characterized our nation as having been "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." That revolutionary document set down our collective belief in inalienable human rights, the proposition that governments derive their powers from the consent of the governed, the principle that tyrants who would oppress their people are unfit to be rulers of a free people, and the right to the pursuit of happiness.

The terrorists of Sept. 11 cannot prevail in a world occupied by the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and its Bill of Rights, the Emancipation Proclamation, the Gettysburg Address, the Statue of Liberty, the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, the Capitol, the Supreme Court and the White House. They cannot co-exist with these ideals, these principles, these institutions and these symbols. So they cannot survive, much less prevail, in the same world as America.

America is not today, or ever, without imperfections and shortcomings. Implementation of our lofty ideals has never been without error, and some of our mistakes have been shameful. But the course of our history has been constant, if occasionally erratic, progress from the articulation of those lofty ideals to the extension of their reality to all our people—those who were born here and those, from hundreds of diverse cultures, who flock here.

There is no segment or class of the world's peoples who have exclusive claim on the term "American," and no segment of the world's population to whom that claim has been denied. We welcome 100,000 refugees per year into this country. Over 650,000 people immigrated legally to America in the most recent year for which we have reliable statistics. Over five million people are in this country today who were so desperate to come here that they did so illegally.

There are more Jews in New York City than in Israel. More Poles in Chicago than any city in the world except Warsaw. America is home to 39 million Irish-Americans, 58 million German-Americans, 39 million Hispanic-Americans and nearly a million Japanese-Americans. And there are seven million Muslims in America, nearly the population of New York City.

How tragic it is that the agents of the Sept. 11 terrorist acts were people whom we welcome to this country, and to whom we extended all of our freedoms, the protections of all of our laws, and the opportunities this country affords to everyone to travel, work and live. But we welcome immigrants because nearly all of us are immigrants or descendants of immigrants who came here to enjoy freedoms, rights, liberties, and the opportunity, denied elsewhere, to pursue happiness and prosperity.

Ronald Reagan often said that "every once in a while, each of us native-born Americans should make it a point to have a conversation with someone who is an American by choice." Mr. Reagan was fond of quoting from a letter he received from a man who wrote, "you can go to live in Turkey, but you can't become a Turk. You can't go to live in Japan and become Japanese, [and so on for Germany, France, etc.]. But . . . anyone from any corner of the world can come to America and be an American."

So it is particularly sad and a bitter irony that the 19 savages who took the lives of thousands of Americans were able to come here because we welcomed them, and trusted them, and allowed them to learn to fly our airplanes and gave them the freedom to travel. They took these precious gifts and turned them into instruments of hatred and death.

It has, I suppose, always caused some resentment that we believe so passionately and unquestioningly that the freedoms we value should belong to all people. But we know that these are enduring values. We can debate nearly everything else, but we don't need to debate that. We know that these principles lift everyone up.

We have now been reminded, in the most horrible way, that there are those who not only hate our principles, but who would dedicate their lives—and surrender their lives—to banish those ideals and the incentives they provide for tyrannized and impoverished people everywhere to do what Americans did in 1776. We have tragically learned again, in the most unthinkable fashion, that our values and our principles are neither self-executing nor self-sustaining, and that we must sacrifice and fight to maintain what our forebears sacrificed and fought to bequeath to us.

And now the rest of the world is learning again that Americans will not flinch from that fight or tire of it. Americans will fight, they will sacrifice, and they will not give up or leave the job unfinished. This war is for all living Americans. It is for the parents, grandparents and great-grandparents that fought and sacrificed to come here. And it is for our children and generations to come. And it is for those who choose to become Americans in the future.

America will not lose this war because we cannot even consider that we will lose what centuries of Americans fought to create, improve and maintain. We cannot, and we will not, betray the people who gave us this glorious heritage. We cannot and will not, dishonor or wash away the memories of those who somehow clawed their way out of poverty, tyranny and persecution to come to this country because it was America, and because they were willing to risk death to become Americans, and to give their children and grandchildren the opportunity and freedom and inspiration that makes this place America. Americans could no longer call themselves Americans if they could walk away from that legacy.

People who write for newspapers and who offer opinions on television, or who send advice to us from other parts of the world, sometimes say that America is too rich, lazy, complacent, frightened, soft and enervated to fight this fight. That we have no stamina, strength, will, patience, or steel. That we will collapse.

They are so wrong. We will prevail for the very reason that we have been attacked. Because we are Americans. Because the values that made us free, make us strong; because the principles that made us prosperous, make us creative, resourceful, innovative, determined and fiercely protective of our freedoms, our liberties and our rights to be individuals and to aspire to whatever we choose to be. Those values and those characteristics will lift us and will defeat the black forces who have assaulted our ideals, our country and our people.

The very qualities that bring immigrants and refugees to this country in the thousands every day, made us vulnerable to the attack of Sept. 11, but those are also the qualities that will make us victorious and unvanquished in the end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I think my colleague from Oklahoma is exactly right. We can carry it one step further. We have these freedoms and that is why they hate us so much; they don't have these freedoms. The idea that individuals can have the freedoms we in this country have is totally alien to everything they believe in.

I sat there as others did—I am sure my colleague from Oklahoma did this morning—and looked at the Pentagon, and I know what went through his mind and what went through my mind was the Murrah Federal Office Building in Oklahoma City in 1995. We lost about the same number of lives back then as we did in the Pentagon. There are a lot of other similarities there.

The appearance after the airplane struck was so similar to that which we experienced in Oklahoma City. That brought back those very sad memories.

I sometimes look at things and ask, How can anything good come from something as bad as all that? Yet I can see—it is obvious, as I saw the changes in attitudes of people here in this body, and also the body down the hall—they are reflecting the interests of the American people.

I have been concerned for the last 10 years with the deterioration in the condition of our military. We talk about the authorization program. We talk about our end strength. We talk about the fact that we don't have a national missile defense system.

Somebody very smart back in 1983 determined that there will be a day—and they put the date, fiscal year 1998—when we are going to have to be able to defend our people from an incoming missile. So we got on schedule to be able to deploy something to defend against a limited missile attack.

We talked about land-based, air-based, space-based, and the AEGIS system, and evaluated all of these until the early 1990s when the program stopped. President Clinton was President at that time. He vetoed the Defense authorization bill. In his veto message, he said: I will continue to veto any bill that has money in it for a national missile defense system because there is no threat.

Now we know there is. We know the threat is there, and we wish we could look back and say, Why didn't we stay on schedule where we would have to deploy by fiscal year 1998?—which is really 1997.

We have been watching the deterioration of our military in terms of end strength and in terms of authorization. Right now, we are sending our troops out into battle with inferior equipment.

My colleague from Oklahoma and I have both experienced the condition of our artillery system. It is one that has 1958 technology. You can think of it as Civil War technology where you have to run the barrel between each shot.

I think even some of the military leaders in America do not realize how deteriorated it is. I think a lot of our leaders were not aware until September 11 that there are many other countries making more sophisticated strike systems than we have. Our best air-to-air defense and air-to-ground vehicle is the F-16. They now have the SU-27 and SU-30. They are on the open market. We know that China has bought around 240 of these. It is a very threatening situation.

I can recall the day this happened. A year ago, we had the Chamber of Commerce in from the State of Oklahoma. They come up once a year. And they were over in the Hart Building. It was my turn to address them from 9 to 9:30. Senator NICKLES was addressing them from 9:30 to 10. As I got to the end of my 30-minute speech, I ended it the same way I have ended my speeches since 1994/95; that is, today we are in the most threatened position we have been in as a nation in the history of our country. Just as I said that, I looked up, and I saw this billowing smoke—not knowing what it was, not even finding out until Senator NICKLES ended his speech that in fact it was the bombing of the Pentagon.

This mentality that has been permeating the Halls of both the House and the Senate—that somehow the cold war is over and the threat is not out there anymore—is something that people now understand is not true.

When this administration came in, they saw our end strength and the problems we have in the military. We have to change our policy—which has always been to defend America against two MTW; that is, two major theater wars. Now it is to defend America against one theater.

This is something that is not acceptable to the American people. And they find out. I know this, Mr. President, because every time I say it, they ask the question: Do you mean that we don't have that capability, and we have abandoned the policy we have had in this country for the last 20 years? I say: Yes, that is where we are.

I think Secretary Rumsfeld was right when he testified before our Senate Armed Services Committee and said now we are trying to keep a military on a smaller amount of money relative to our gross domestic product than before Pearl Harbor. We are spending less today—3 percent of our gross domestic product—on our military.

People talk about how much stronger we are than anyone else. There are not many other countries that do not spend more than that percentage. Historically, it has been between 4 percent and 5 percent.

We are having a markup of the Defense authorization bill. I came over from there because I wanted to get on record as strongly as I can about the result and how we might benefit from this tragedy a year ago today.

In this debate which we are in, we need to know if there is some way we can relieve the Guard at the gates at our military operations so they can go and relieve some of the Guard and Reserves who are overworked. Right now, there is not a Senator in here who hasn't heard from Guard and Reserve back home. They are overworked and overdeployed. They have lost their jobs. Many of these individuals have had to quit the Reserves and the Guard. Sadly, we are missing the critical MO authorization specialties. It is something we are going to have to do.

But there is a mentality among people—and we don't disrespect those people who believe the threat is not out there. There are some people who honestly in their hearts believe that if we all stand in a circle—all countries—and hold hands and unilaterally disarm, all threats will go away. I know that doesn't sound reasonable, but in Washington, there are quite a few of those around.

I think the shock treatment we got on September 11 of 2001 brought us out of that. We understand what we are going to have to do. We are going to have to do a rebuilding.

I think if there is anything to come to benefit us as a result of this tragedy a year ago, it is to remind not the people in this Chamber—they react to the people at home—but to remind people at home that we are in a very threatened situation and the most vulnerable in the history of this country.

Secretary Rumsfeld said it in a way which I think is very good. He said the consequences of making a mistake now are far greater than ever before. He said they are minuscule by comparison—that the consequence of making mistakes in Somalia in 1993 was that we lost 18 soldiers. The consequence of making mistakes in Yemen in 1999 was tragic. We lost 17 sailors. But he said the consequence of making a mistake right now is that we could lose hundreds of thousands of people.

We need to move on and allow this tragedy in America to serve as a reminder to the people of America that we have to rebuild. We have to make America strong again to the point that we can meet the minimum expectations of the American people. We do not today.

I only say, as tragic as it is, that the best way to ensure that those individuals who died—over 3,000—a year ago will not have died in vain is by learning the lesson and rebuilding and preventing a far greater catastrophe from happening again.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, it is a privilege to welcome a distinguished delegation from the Norwegian Parliament. Nine members of the Committee on Defense are with us today in the Senate Chamber. They have come to the United States this week as a part of an ambitious series of events which will include meetings at the Pentagon, the State Department, the National Security Council, and Central Command in Florida.

They had been scheduled to leave Washington this morning, but they have changed their itinerary deliberately because they wanted to be with us here, the U.S. Senate, in the Capitol Building on this solemn day.

As fellow legislators and close NATO allies, the Norwegian Defense Committee wanted to express its solidarity with Congress and with the American people on the first anniversary of September 11.

I would like to read a letter into the RECORD from the Defense Committee of Norway.

They have written:

To the Senate of the United States:

The Standing Committee on Defense of the Norwegian Parliament wishes to express its deepest sympathy and solidarity with the American people on this day of remembrance—one year after the horrible terror attack on the United States that occurred September 11, 2001.

Let us never forget all those individuals who lost their lives in New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, including firemen, police officers, and volunteers who tried to rescue people from the flames.

The letter continues:

September 11 changed the world and international politics. Norway is proud to participate in the broad coalition against terrorism and does so by taking part in "Operation Enduring Freedom" under U.S. command. The fight against terrorism is a fight for democracy, for an open and free society, and for human rights.

Sincerely,

The Standing Committee on Defense [of Norway]:

Ms. Marit Nybakke, Chairman DC, Ms. Aase Wisloff Nilssen, Member DC, Mr.

Bjoern Hernaes, Member DC, Mr. Kjetil Bjoerklund, Member DC, Mr. Per Roar Bredvold, Member DC, Mr. Gunnar Halvorsen, Member DC, Mr. Aage Konradsen, Member DC, Mr. Leif Lund, Member DC, Mr. Per Ove Width, Member DC, Mr. Joern Olsen, Secretary DC.

I know that I speak for all Members of the Senate when I say that we deeply appreciate your support today. Your presence here reminds us of the importance of allies and the enduring bond between the United States and Norway.

During the long decades of the Cold War, Norway was the only NATO member to border directly on the Russian Republic. This "front-line" position imposed a special burden on Norway, and its value as a member of the Alliance far exceeded the size of its population.

The border between Norway and Russia is now peaceful and cooperative. Yet Norway still bears burdens from its history as a front-line state. In particular, it must contend with the environmental dangers created by the nuclear-powered Soviet-era fleet that is deteriorating on the nearby Kola Peninsula.

In June of this year, I had the pleasure to visit Norway following an extensive trip to Russia. There I met with many members of the Norwegian defense establishment, including members of the Defense Committee. We talked a great deal about nuclear clean-up issues on the Kola Peninsula. Norway has been an invaluable partner in addressing this nuclear threat through its support for the Nunn-Lugar program and its participation in the trilateral Arctic Military Environmental Cooperation program or AMEC. Under AMEC, our country has been working with the Russians and Norwegians to safely dispose of the nuclear material from decommissioned vessels.

We have had great success so far, but the challenges of safeguarding weapons and materials of mass destruction are immense. I am hopeful that our efforts can be expanded and accelerated, and I know that Norway will work closely with us to address these dangers.

So we welcome the Norwegian Defense Committee and draw encouragement from their presence here on this day of remembrance. We look forward to all that we can accomplish together, as we strive to make the world safe from terrorism and weapons of mass destruction.

RECESS

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in a short recess in order that we can greet the defense committee of the Norwegian Parliament, and I ask the Senate and members of the staff to greet the delegation assembled behind my desk.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:52 p.m., recessed until 2:55 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CARPER).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BUNNING. My congratulations to the Senator from Indiana and the delegation from Norway. We are privileged to have them here.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I rise today in honor of those in New York, at the Pentagon, and in the skies over Pennsylvania who lost their lives 1 year ago today.

None of us in the Senate will ever forget the events of that terrible morning, nor will we ever forget the courage and compassion displayed by Americans everywhere in response to the attacks.

Today, my thoughts and prayers are with the victims, their families, and all of those who risked their lives to save others on that awful day. The despicable acts that we witnessed were meant to create havoc and to test our resolve as Americans. America passed that test. We are stronger and more united as a Nation today than we ever were. Despite the fact that our buildings were damaged, America's foundations remain unshaken. And despite the fact that 3,000 of our friends, relatives, and neighbors were murdered, America's sense of community is stronger than ever.

This morning, many of us took part in a memorial service across the river at the newly restored Pentagon. One year ago today, that building was on fire. One of its five sides essentially lay in ruin.

Last September, I visited the Pentagon just days after the attack. It was a terrible scene of devastation. But today we saw a building that has been completely rebuilt. The Pentagon, both on the inside and on the outside, is better than before. The offices within are busy now with the activity of military men and women who are hard at work in the war against terror.

The Pentagon, today, stands as a reminder of the American spirit and a warning to those who want to terrorize us: America will triumph, and those who want nothing less than to destroy our way of life will fail. They will fail because of the American spirit. They will fail because of our faith in freedom and democracy. They will fail because of the strength and character of the American people.

I believe Americans have emerged from the attacks even stronger and more dedicated to our beliefs and to our Nation. But we cannot let our guard down again. We cannot forget that evil is lying in wait for another opportunity to attack. So far, we have been able to anticipate, with intelligence, any future attacks. But we know the enemy will try again.

It has been said many times—but it bears repeating—it might not seem that we are at war, but we are at war. It is a different kind of a struggle than we have ever fought before.

On the surface, it might not seem like World War II, Korea, Vietnam, or any other conflict of the past. Make no mistake about it, danger still lurks, and we must remain vigilant.

Americans have made many sacrifices, big and small, over the last year. They gave blood and contributed to relief efforts. They became more vigilant in their communities. They volunteered to help those in need. We have come a long way since the attacks a year ago, and I could not be prouder of our people.

In that time, I believe we have found new national unity, not only from the heroism of firefighters, police, and our military, but also from the everyday efforts of regular everyday Americans.

I am proud of the way we in Congress responded to the attacks. By putting aside politics and working together with President Bush for the greater good, we have shown that, while we all wear political labels as Republicans and Democrats, we are Americans first.

The President has done a superb job leading our country in the war on terror, and we in Congress have done our best to provide him with the resources necessary to persecute and win that war.

Much has been done, but we must continue to remain focused on the task at hand—protecting our homeland. And that job continues tomorrow in the Senate. We will finish it, and we will finish it successfully.

People often ask me how things have changed in Washington since 9/11. Some things on the surface certainly have changed. There are more concrete barriers, roadblocks, and security precautions, but looking beneath the surface, I think the better question to ask is, What did 9/11 reveal about us? It showed that we are still a good and compassionate Nation and people. It showed that, under the worst of circumstances, we will come to the aid not only of our friends and neighbors, but to complete strangers. It showed that America is still the greatest nation on Earth, and it showed that, in the war on terror, we will prevail.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I will spend a few minutes remembering the day, as we all have taken some time to express our individual thoughts and honor this day in the best way we can, to express what it means for us, for all Americans, and actually for millions of people around the world.

It is truly a somber day for all of us. In a nation that has known unparalleled success, coping with a tragedy of this enormity is all that more difficult. We love our liberty, we love our freedom, and we want nothing from the world or for the world but peace and prosperity. Yet today we find our liberty and our personal freedoms restrained. We are fighting one war and are poised on the brink of another. It is no wonder the anxiety of the American people is palpable.

As we search for certainty and leadership in these uncertain times, it is only natural we turn towards one of our greatest leaders, Abraham Lincoln. As our leader during our greatest crisis, his words carry a resonance and wisdom that ring true today.

President Lincoln's second inaugural address, delivered at the twilight of the Civil War, reads like a prayer. It is a request to God to show us how to be just, and to grant this Nation peace. Yet, while it is a prayer, it is also a plan. President Lincoln wrote:

Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's 250 years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said 3,000 years ago, so still must it be said, the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.

With malice towards none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

President Lincoln asked for God's assistance, but also to shine a light on the righteous path to victory. We must finish the work we are in, but we must also care for the victims of war and do all we can to achieve a lasting peace.

That is how President Lincoln wanted the Civil War to end. Not with recriminations that would tear the country apart forever and sow seeds for the next war but, rather, to approach victory with charity. For a powerful nation such as the United States, it is only in demonstrating our commitments to a world order that we can attain a lasting peace.

It is only in our generosity to the struggling nations to the world we can enjoy the full fruits of our labors and the great bounties of our democracy. It is part of the twin ironies of being the sole superpower in the world. The first is that to preserve the peace, we must prepare for war. The second is that to attain any real victory, we must show mercy to those we have vanquished.

Louisiana lost three sons on September 11: Petty Officer Second Class Kevin Yokum of Lake Charles, Navy LT Scott Lamana of Baton Rouge, and Louis Williams of Mandeville. The quick and expedient thing for our country would be to cry for their revenge and the revenge of the thousands of other Americans who died for freedom that day. Yet that is not America. It is not what these three men would have wanted. Rather, they would want to know that their deaths had helped to sow a lasting and just peace among ourselves and with all nations.

So I join my colleagues today in saluting the heroism of these men, of the men and women who died and were wounded at the Pentagon, the heroism of the men and women of our great metropolis, New York, and the surrounding States and regions—of course, New Jersey lost many people—and the men and women aboard flight 93. Let their heroism be our inspiration to finish the work that we have at hand.

We have a great amount of work ahead. We can be proud of the work we have accomplished in the last 12 months, any number of initiatives and bills and legislative proposals and endeavors that have really made this country much stronger, more secure than we were on this day, this hour, a year ago. But there is no doubt there is a great deal of work to be done. Let us remember that we will show leadership in our might and power. We will also show leadership in our mercy, in our willingness to leave this world to a much more just and fair place, where democracies rule the day and people can enjoy freedoms unheard of, really, and not yet experienced in the world. That is America's greatest challenge.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, one year ago today, September 11, 2001, terrorists attacked our country, killing almost 3,000 people. Each of us has, in the year since the attack, had our lives touched by the horrific events of September 11th. Each of us has, in the year since the attack, been shocked by the terrible images of destruction and suffering at the sites of these attacks—at the World Trade Center, in Pennsylvania, and at the Pentagon. Paradoxically, each of us has also been uplifted by the stories of heroism and self-sacrifice that have emerged from around the country in the wake of these terrible events.

From this act of war and hatred against all Americans, our country has demonstrated once again the resilient strength in the fabric of our people. Make no mistake about it: Our country is at war. But unlike past wars, we face a new challenge, a new type of enemy, one that is loosely organized throughout the world, with tentacles stretching into every corner of the globe, and one which is steadfast in its determination to defeat America.

We cherish our freedoms, our opportunities, and our tolerance. But we remain vigilant in our determination to meet and defeat our enemy—terrorists who threaten our security and our freedoms. Throughout our country's history, our people, its leaders, and Congress have demonstrated time and time again that when we work together—when we harness the full energy and commitment of our country—we can overcome any adversity or any enemy to our people. The tragic events of September 11th have united this country and challenged our country once again to face down the terrible threat of terrorism.

Beginning with the PATRIOT Act, which was signed into law soon after the September 11th attack, and continuing today with the pending legislation to create a new Department of Homeland Security, I have been committed to aiding our country's fight against terrorism in order to defeat our enemy and make our homeland safe from future attacks. My commitment is strong and my determination is unwavering to ensure that our President has all the tools and resources needed to fight and win this war so that the scourge of terrorism is extinguished forever.

In supporting the war against terrorism, I want to highlight some of the legislative measures that I have proposed or supported during the 107th Congress.

The Military Force Authorization Bill, P.L. 107-40, enacted September 18, 2001: This bill provided President Bush with the full and necessary authority to use force against those who took part in the terrorist attacks.

U.S.A. PATRIOT Act of 2001, P.L. 107-56, enacted October 26, 2001: This comprehensive anti-terrorism legislation provided new tools for law enforcement and for improved information sharing among Federal agencies to deter and protect against further terrorist attacks. The Act is tough on terrorists and those who harbor or assist them. The Act: one, increased criminal penalties for various terrorism crimes and money laundering schemes used to finance terrorists; two, reformed our immigration laws to ensure that suspected terrorists are denied admission into, or deported from, the United States; three, authorized the sharing of intelligence and criminal information among law enforcement and intelligence agencies to ensure that all information is available for preventing further terrorist attacks; four, updated law enforcement surveillance tools needed to investigate terrorists who use new communications and related technologies to conduct their terrorist schemes; and, five, required criminal background checks for commercial truck drivers transporting hazardous materials.

Emergency Supplemental Appropriations for Recovery from and Response to Terrorist Attacks on the United States, P.L. 107-38, enacted September 18, 2001: This bill provided $40 billion to support our country's war against terrorism, and provided substantial disaster assistance and recovery funds.

Department of Homeland Security, H.R. 5005, pending before the Senate: This proposal is currently being considered by the Senate would create a new Department of Homeland Security, which would be responsible for preventing terrorist attacks, protecting our country's infrastructure from attacks, coordinating the review and analysis of intelligence information among intelligence and law enforcement agencies, and coordinating response efforts by federal and local response agencies.
